The Story of TAMMANY

BY EDWARD C. KRAUSS

(Mr. Krauss, the writer of these articles, spent more than fifteen years in New York, State and city, as a newspaper worker, and knew the city as only a newspaper reporter can—from the inside. For several years he had intimate contact with New York politics and political personages, and on one occasion instituted an inquiry which resulted in removal of a grafting judge from the bench. He is now an editorial writer for The Times. The articles are amply documented from official sources.—Ed. Times.)

Organized corruption of the ballot had long been the custom in New York, and was not confined to any one party; it was used impartially by all sides; but Tweed brought it to its highest perfection. Personal registration and the signature law virtually have eliminated repeating from modern elections, and the use of the voting machine has prevented fraud in the count; but in Tweed's day repeating was raised to one of the fine arts.

Men who could grow a luxuriant crop of whiskers were especially in demand as repeaters; they could vote once with a full beard, once with chin shaven, once with no facial decoration but a mustache, and once shaved clean and defy detection, especially in districts where no special effort at detection was made.

Some repeaters are said to have voted as often as forty to fifty times in a single day, at different polling-places, and an average of twenty times was said not to have been uncommon. Another time-honored scheme for increasing the Tammany vote on election day, which Tweed used more boldly than any of his predecessors or successors, was fraudulent naturalization.

JUDGE HELPS FRAUD

In the election of 1868, when Mayor Hoffman, one of Tweed's creatures, was running for Governor, Tweed, with the assistance of Judge Barnard, increased the qualified voters in New York City by 60,000 in twenty days. The average of naturalizations for the previous twelve years had been 6000 a year. A Congressional committee discovered that Judge Barnard had administered the oath of allegiance to more than 37,000 applicants, and Judge McCunn, another Tweed asset, made some 15,000 new citizens.

Sometimes these naturalized voters did not even appear in court; some of them were naturalized by

Nominee in Statement Says Campaign Not One of Opposition

Confers With President; Receives Good News from Leaders

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—Herbert Hoover declared unequivocally today that his campaign is not one of opposition, but one in favor of the issues and candidates in the Republican party.

His statement was contained in an address to a delegation from Maryland, the first public pronouncement he has made since his Democratic opponent, Alfred E. Smith, opened fire on the Republican party in his address at Oklahoma City last Thursday night.

"We are now in a great campaign," Hoover said. "Our campaign is based upon our issues. It is not a campaign of opposition. It is a campaign in favor of the issues and candidates in the Republican party."

VISITS COOLIDGE

Before the meeting with the Maryland delegation consisting of forty county and ward chairmen of the Hoover-Goldsborough League of Maryland, the Republican Presidential candidate spent more than an hour and a half at the White House discussing the general political situation with President Coolidge, who returned today from a visit to his native State of Vermont and New England.

Beyond the statement that "the general situation" had been gone over at the White House there was no announcement concerning the conference, but it is known that a number of the President's friends have been urging him to make a speech or two in New England, preferably in his adopted State of Massachusetts.

Upon emerging from the White House, Hoover declined to discuss this matter, but he did say that he was satisfied with the outlook over the country. Asked specifically about Massachusetts, the nominee declared the leaders there are going forward enthusiastically, but that he would make no forecast as to the result.

OBREGON'S PARTY WILL FAVOR GIL

Deputies Join Senators in Supporting Minister as Successor to Calles

[Copyright, 1928, by the Chicago Tribune]

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 22.—Representatives of all the States of Mexico within the Obregon party voted today at a specially-called meeting to support the candidacy of Portes Gil, Minister of the Interior, as provisional President of Mexico for fourteen months from December 1, next. The meeting of the House of Deputies showed 98 per cent of the deputies in favor of Portes Gil.

On Monday the Deputies and Senators, forming the complete Congress will meet to consider the candidacy of Portes Gil, which will be presented by Deputies for the consideration of the Senate. As the Senate is 100 per cent for him the meeting Tuesday for the choice of provisional President will be purely formal, as the few opponents to the election of the Minister of Interior, seeing a landslide in his favor, are now hastening to align themselves with the winner.

President Calles, as head of the National Revolutionary party, will be able to dictate the candidate for permanent President to take office sixteen months hence, if he so wishes, as the politicians have deserted all the other leaders and clustered about President Calles.

Earth Quakes for Four Hours

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—An earthquake described by Director Tondorf as "very, very heavy," was recorded today on the instruments of Georgetown University.

It began at 2:51 a.m., and lasted for four hours. Its maximum intensity, beginning at 3:33 a.m., continued for twenty minutes, which is very unusual.

Director Tondorf estimated the center of the disturbance was 5000 or 6000 miles from Washington, but the direction could not be determined.

'Times' Hurricane Relief Fund

The Times will receive, acknowledge by publication and turn over to the Red Cross any contributions sent to this newspaper for the relief of the hurricane victims of Porto Rico, Florida and contiguous territory. This fund The Times has started with a contribution of $1000 of its own. All checks for this fund should be made payable to The Times Hurricane Relief Fund and should be mailed to The Times, Los Angeles, Cal.

The need is very urgent and President Coolidge has appealed to the generous American people to meet it with open hearts and pocketbooks. More than 1300 are known dead and at least 1,000,000 persons, including many little children, are homeless and without food or shelter of any kind. For the present only money should be given. The Times urges all who can give, even in small amounts, to give quickly. If preferred contributions may be sent direct to the American Red Cross, Los Angeles Chapter, Transportation Building, Los Angeles.

A total of $6717.10 was received by The Times yesterday, bringing The Times fund to date to a grand total of $20,629.60.

Up to 3 p.m. yesterday The Times fund stood as follows:

ARMY OF FIRE FIGHTERS MOBILIZES IN SOUTHLAND

Wind Fans Ridge Route Flames as 2500 Men Join in Battle Today; Valuable Property in Peril

Led by Federal and county foresters more than 1500 fire fighters, many of them drafted by officers from Los Angeles and nearby towns, early today will move in on four great brush fires which have been raging for several days about Los Angeles in a great circle. The four fires, according to the fighters, can be brought under control if the stiff wind which has been blowing will shift or die down as is expected.

The worst of the four fires is raging on both sides of the Ridge Route and is out of control before a high wind. The second is burning up Mint Canyon with more than 200 men in the fight. In Peace Valley, of the Elizabeth Lake district, the third fire, now under control, still is burning, while in San Diego and Riverside counties a fourth fire is raging near the Cahuilla Indian reservation sweeping through the mountains.

The Ridge Route fire which started Friday morning and by nightfall had swept thousands of acres of watershed, was reported yesterday to be running wild in all directions before a high wind. Three armies of men were fighting the flames in three sectors. One force is under Supervisor Cecil of the Angeles National Forest, and his assistants, "Hap" Miller, Lou Anderson and "Pete" Peterson were battling the flames on the north front where the fire had advanced within one-half mile of the National Forest Inn, west of the Ridge Route. A large crew was rushed to that district and hopes expressed that it would be checked before this morning. On the east side it had burned to within one-half mile of the inn.

According to Dispatcher Davis at the Pasadena offices of the forestry service, the Federal men have established field headquarters at the Boggs ranch. The county men, under County Forester Turner, Chief Assistant Davis and Assistant Thurston moved in on the fire from the southwest, making headquarters at Leckler's ranch. Last night new headquarters were taken up at Sloan's ranch in Hasley Canyon. The county alone has 600 men on the line, a new contingent of 100 men having been drafted in Los Angeles at noon.

RANCHES IMPERILED

From Ventura county came reports last night that the Ridge Route fire is sweeping down on Fillmore and that ranches, oil wells and power stations are being threatened. Eight hundred men are attempting to check the fire in this direction the officials announce, and if the wind will drop they hope to have it under control some time today.

Ventura county rushed a large force of fire fighters in from its side of the line under the direction of County Forester Emerick. A strenuous effort is being made to keep the flames from jumping Piru Creek but little hope is held in that direction. It is feared, also, that the fire will get into the oil well district on the Temescal rancho. Several cabins in the Piru Creek district are reported to have been consumed by the advancing flames.

The Mint Canyon fire which for a time appeared to be getting out of control, was hemmed in late yesterday afternoon by 400 men and will be under complete control by today, it was announced last night. Little damage was done by this blaze, it is believed.

From Fillmore clear to San Diego every city in the south could see effects of the four fires. Smoke was hanging in the sky all day yesterday and in the smaller cities near the scene of the fires ashes carried by the wind fell during the day and last night.

According to authorities in charge of fire-fighting activities, the Ridge Route blaze presented difficulties because of its wide scope.

With so many men on the fire lines, the Red Cross began making preparations to establish first-aid stations at the fire camps to treat

PELICAN BAY DEATH CITY

All Inhabitants Perish

Red Cross Officials Report on Florida Town Cut Off from Relief

Workers Who Braved Floods Say None Survives of 450 Population

WEST PALM BEACH (Fla.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Four hundred and fifty inhabitants and 450 dead, that is the story of Pelican Bay, the last area on the hurricane-devastated shores of Lake Okeechobee to be penetrated, as revealed by relief workers who today, working in water waist deep, cleared the last of the debris from the roadway.

The roadway is in fact a waterway tonight, but from the black muck and tangled sea grass that was removed to make a path for relief boats between Pahokee and Belle Glade came 300 bodies.

National Red Cross officials who have visited the area consider it practically impossible for any of the 450 believed to have been there when the storm struck last Sunday to have survived for six days without food or water, exposed to the indescribable conditions that prevailed all about them.

NO SURVIVORS

The last of the living survivors to be found on the southeastern shore of Lake Okeechobee was one white man and two negroes who had been clinging to wreckage for four days without aid. They were talking incoherently and were in the last stages of exhaustion when removed. Their condition is still considered critical. This fact is cited by Red Cross officials as evidence that there are no survivors in Pelican Bay.

Development of a new threat to the Lake Okeechobee area where approximately 1000 were drowned or killed in the collapse of buildings during the hurricane one week ago was seen tonight by relief workers as flood waters in the lake and for several miles back of its shore line continued to rise.

MARINES GO TO FIGHT FIRES

Detachment of 230 Men Leaves San Diego to Aid Workers Confronting Various Flames in South

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 22. (AP)—With several bad fires raging in the eastern part of San Diego county late today, the situation became so serious that 230 United States marines from the local base were sent out under Maj. R. S. Kingsbury to reinforce the 500 men who were drafted by the Federal and county fire fighters. The marines were equipped with shovels and other fire-fighting equipment in addition to complete kitchen and camping outfits and were sent out toward Ramona with instructions to work in conjunction with J. E. Elliott, Federal Forest Supervisor. Their arrival was greeted with much satisfaction by the weary forces that had been fighting the flames in that section.

One fire, raging in the vicinity of Potrero, crossed the international boundary line into Mexican territory late this afternoon, according to reports from the fire fighters.

PALOMAR MOUNTAIN AFLAME

The fire that was threatening last night to climb Palomar Mountain and into the heavy trees of that landmark was burning fiercely on one side of the mountain late today.

Late today no reports had been received of loss of life or serious injury in any of the southern fires. Several small buildings on ranches were destroyed.

The Potrero country forest fire reached huge proportions late today when it crossed Cottonwood Creek and joined the Tecate Mountain blaze, according to reports from Mrs. Luther Gordon, wife of the county fire warden. It had reached Mother Grundy Mountain, about five miles from Dulzura, the information stated.

FIRE PERIL MAY CLOSE FORESTS

National Preserves Liable to Bar Hunters

Carelessness Brings Penalty on All Users

Service Appeals to Campers to Watch Step

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Emergency forest-fire conditions and a repetition of the disastrous man-caused brush and timber fires that have swept the State during the past few weeks may necessitate the closing of all national forests in California to public use and travel until the fall rains set in, according to S. B. Show, chief of the California district, United States Forest Service.

"There are two ways of meeting this problem," said Mr. Show. "One is to close the forests and the other is to educate the people. For years the Forest Service, the State Forester and many co-operating agencies have been putting forth great effort in educating and arousing our citizens and forest visitors to an appreciation of the damage wrought by fires and to teach them to be careful with fire. Smoking has been prohibited in the national forests and camp-fire permit and shovel and ax regulations enforced. But each year more than 2000 conflagrations, started by human carelessness and maliciousness, continue to destroy valuable timber, water-shed, wild life and recreational resources in the State.

"In the face of such conditions the Forest Service is prepared to take drastic action. September 10 all national forests in Oregon were closed to public use and travel by the Forest Service and the opening of the hunting season postponed by the Governor on account of acute fire conditions. Scattered areas of national forests in California have already been closed to the public this season, but no general closure order has yet been issued, such as was necessary in 1924, when the public was barred from over 12,000,000 acres of Federal forests.

"We hope no general closure will be necessary in the national forests of this State, which contain so much of the best hunting and fishing," continued the district forester, burns, blisters and cuts. A number of injuries already have been sustained, the most serious to the fire fighters being those suffered by B. S. Perkins of Pasadena, who was hurt when a truck of the Crown City Transfer Company, carrying supplies and equipment, went off the road on the Ridge Route. A wheel came off the truck, which went over the side and down into the flames.

RIDGE ROUTE OPEN

The Ridge Route was reopened to travel yesterday.

District Forester Jordan arrived from the San Francisco headquarters yesterday and left on an airplane survey of the fires burning in Southern California. After flying over the Ridge Route and Mint Canyon fires he swung back over the Boggs ranch and dropped maps showing where from his view of the fire the best attacks could be made and where some of the most dangerous spots in the fire are. Armed with these, Cecil and Turner laid their plans to battle the blaze.

In the Ridge Route fire, very rough country and no moisture have made the job of fire fighting almost impossible before the stiff wind that is reported.

Dispatcher Davis for the Angeles National Forest recruited 100 additional fire fighters from the streets.

Three Pasadenans who were burned Friday when their automobile was trapped by a wall of flame were out of danger yesterday. They are: R. M. Montgomery of 761 North El Molino avenue; Ace Brown of 2251 White street, and Louis Graf of 2153 Glen avenue.

CALIFORNIA SUFFERS FROM MEXICO TO OREGON

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—In the last forty-eight hours, timber and brush fires from the Oregon line to the Mexican line have exacted the most vicious toll of the season, but indications tonight were that the red scourge of the forests had spent most of its force for the time being.

Two new fires were reported today in San Mateo county and six more in Mendocino county, one town in Butte county was partly destroyed and another lay in the path of advancing flames with little chance of escaping destruction. Approximately 10,000 acres of timber and brush have turned blackened faces up to a sweltering sun in two days, bringing the aggregate of seared property to about 85,000 acres for the last four days.

Five men have died in their efforts to defeat the onrush of sweeping flames, all north of Tehachapi. Five others in northern and central California lie seriously burned or injured, including the fire warden of San Mateo county.

Peter Navares, 55 years of age and Edward Gasiot, 50, succumbed at St. Paul's Hospital in Livermore today from burns they received yesterday when the gasoline tank of their automobile truck exploded while they were fighting a brush fire in Indian Creek camp road. Neil Lane, 38, died last night from the same cause. A fourth man remains under care at the hospital. All were employees of a water company in Livermore.

Robert Burns, 58, of Somnoa county rancher, fell exhausted while fighting fire on the ranch owned by C. C. Pyle and "Red" Grange near Cloverdale, and died soon after he had been taken to the Cloverdale Hospital.

Bert Werder, fire warden of San Mateo county, fell exhausted in a charred pit while leading a force of fighters against one of two new blazes that sprang up in the western part of the county in canyons of the coastal range. Discovered several hours later. Werder was found to be unconscious and was removed to his home in a serious condition. Investigation disclosed he had suffered a possible fracture of his hip in the fall, and his face and arms had been singed by contact with the flames.

Magalia, in Butte county, reports the Southern Pacific station and three homes in ashes. Contrary to earlier reports, it was said the forest ranger's station remains standing. Most of the 256 inhabitants who fled the town with their belongings were declared returning to their homes, with women leading the influx, while men remained on the fire lines.

Mrs. Belle C. Wilds, who was injured on the face, hands and arms in the Ridge Route fire Froday, has been employed as a general delivery mail clerk at the Fresno postoffice for eleven years. According to information received from the hospital at Newhall last night by her daughter, Mrs. Avery Kahrt of Friant, Mrs. Wilds will be confined in the hospital for five days.

Mrs. J. R. Koyle, another occupant of the car, will be confined at the hospital at Newhall for several days, according to Mrs. Kahrt.

AUTO RUNS 59 MILES ON GALLON OF GAS

Automobile engineers who worked for years in an effort to reduce gasoline consumption have found the solution in a marvelous invention that fits all cars. An actual test made by one of the engineers showed 59 miles on a gallon of gas. Thousands of car owners have already installed this new invention. They not only report amazing gas savings, but are also surprised to find quicker pick-up, instant starting, smoother running motors and disappearance of carbon. E. Oliver, 999—608W Third St., Milwaukee, Wisc., for a limited time is offering a free device to those who will help introduce it. They also need men everywhere to make over $100 weekly in their own territory taking care of local business. Write him at once for free sample and big money making offer.—[Advertisement.

QUARTER OF QUOTA GIVEN

Red Cross' Relief Fund Reaches $25,500 Total; Many Welcome Small Amounts Included

Contributions to the Red Cross' Florida and West Indies Relief Fund yesterday, from all sources, reached a grand total of $25,500, or one-fourth of the $100,000 quota which has been assigned to Los Angeles. The total collected by The Times reached $20,629.60 at 3 p.m. yesterday. The total Friday was $13,912.50.

According to Chairman MacWatters, the bulk of the contributions is composed of small sums, ranging from $1 to 5 and $10, many representing sacrifices of people in the more humble walks of life.

SMALL SUMS WELCOME

"These contributions are most welcome and sincerely appreciated," states Mr. MacWatters, "but if we are to make up our city's $100,000 quota quickly to meet the urgent need of the disaster sufferers, numbering hundreds of thousands of homeless and hungry, we must have generous help from our richer citizens in the way of donations in the larger amounts.

"We have already received a $2500 contribution from Cecil B. De Mille and his personal associates in the motion-picture industry, and I hope this appeal will bring other groups and organizations of the city to follow with similar gifts, representing their respective bodies.

"In addition to the generous contribution, Mr. De Mille informs me that stars, employees and others concerned in the industry will make their donations individually."

Mr. MacWatters suggested that many organizations holding meetings this week might make their gatherings the occasion for contributing to the hurricane relief fund, and stressed the point that every dollar is being forwarded immediately to assist in the work of relief.

BENEFIT TICKETS ON SALE

Tickets have been placed on sale for the big benefit affair to be given Saturday evening, the 29th inst., at Olympic Auditorium, these now being obtainable at all theaters at 50 cents, $1 and $2 each.

Numerous requests for reservations have already been received and in many instances blocks of seats are being bought and turned over to the war veterans at the Soldiers' Home and elsewhere, this performing a two-fold philanthropic service.

It is announced that a great galaxy of motion-picture stars will attend and a splendid program of clean-cut boxing events is scheduled with other entertainment features augmenting.

FLOOD PERILS RELIEF EFFORT

Lake Okeechobee Rises and Outlets Blocked

Call Made for Supply of Outboard Motors

Gov. Martin Orders Use of State's Funds

basin of Lake Okeechobee as the outlet canals can handle under present conditions, Gov. Martin called an emergency drainage conference for 10 a.m. tomorrow in this city, with F. C. Elliot, chief drainage engineer, and others. C. P. Hall of the national Red Cross staff, reported upon arrival from the inundated area today that a steady rise had been in progress for the last twenty-four hours and that there is imminent danger of the one road to Belle Glade and vicinity being washed out. He returned to rush out additional outboard motors to the area explaining that these now afford practically the only dependable transportation.

Of the five lake outlets, only one, the St. Lucie Canal, is reported by drainage officials to be functioning, the others being blocked by debris or broken locks. Newspaper men who returned early this morning from the area in probably the last automobile to get through without ferrying found the water from the southeastern canals flowing back into the lake for a short distance and farther back the course of the canal cannot be traced as the current was from northwest to south, across the bed of the waterway.

RED CROSS DIVIDES RELIEF WORK PHASES

WEST PALM BEACH (Fla.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Measures for relief of the area ravaged by last Sunday's tropical hurricane gained momentum today as official estimates fixed the death toll at between 1000 and 1500, with more than 15,000 homeless, and disease and hunger threatening refugees in parts of the Lake Okechobee region.

Rapidly co-ordinating its program, the American Red Cross allocated phases of the work to branch headquarters in Jacksonville, Tampa and Fort Myers. The latter two cities will handle parts of the lake region inaccessible to headquarters here, while Jacksonville will supervise the refugee situation.

Rising waters and lack of adequate transportation facilities handicapped the emergency relief work and the recovery of bodies within the stricken lake shore district. Urgent appeals for boats came out of the area which returning officials have described as corpse-strewn and desolate, with thousands of refugees in immediate need of food and shelter.

Clipping official red tape, after a personal inspection of a part of the back country, Gov. Martin ordered food and other supplies purchased with funds from the State Treasury. At the same time the Governor who shed tears at the tragedy he witnessed in the lake country, issued another call for people of Florida to contribute "quickly and generously" to the relief. The State Highway Department was ordered to clear the debris-clogged roads into the district to facilitate movement of trucks and other vehicles.

Federal aid to cope with the situation was sought by United States Senator Trammell who telegraphed to President Coolidge asking that a representative be sent to Florida with the view of obtaining all possible governmental assistance.

FEW LIVES LOST IN OUTER ISLANDS

MIAMI (Fla.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Reassuring word that few lives are believed to have been lost on the outer islands of the Bahamas as a result of the storm that swept British possessions Sunday before it struck the Florida coast were brought here today by officers and passengers of the auxiliary schooner Ena K., first boat to reach Miami from Nassau since the hurricane.

Loss of life in the outer islands is not definitely known, according to Charles Pettee, first mate.

His summary of storm damage on islands already surveyed follows:

New Providence Island, of which Nassau is the principal city: Three dead, great property loss in residences and temporary suspension of utilities.

Harbor Island: Ninety-six buildings demolished.

Governor's Harbor: Almost complete loss in buildings.

Bimini: One house left standing.

Spanish Wells: Nine buildings destroyed.

J. R. Rescher, an American photographer, was one of the Ena K. passengers. He said he knew positively of only one fatality at Nassau, that of a girl who was drowned after the storm subsided.

China now has a population of 436,000,000.

Glands of Executed Convict Grafted to Save Patient's Li

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—(Universal) — Transplantation of glands from the hanged terror bandit, Buck Kelly, to a patient at the University of California hospital here was justifiable by, 1. The complete success of its main purpose, and, 2. Its contribution to medical science.

So declares Dr. L. S. Schmitt, dean of the University hospital.

The glands were grafted into the body of a patient weakened by dis- ease. Subsequently the condition showed such that an operation was completely successful.

Here is the Way to Increase Your Monthly Income Without Changing Your Occupation

A NEW ERA in the egg farming industry is at hand!

SCIENTIFIC METHODS, mass production and large volume distribution have been brought to the industry by BIG BUSINESS. Efficiency has become the watchword.

JUST AS OTHER huge industries have invited the public to participate in their earnings without doing any of the actual work, so does ORO BLANCO, Inc. offer you the opportunity of sharing in the profits from Egg Production.

UNDER THE ORO BLANCO PLAN, you can become the owner of a highly-productive flock of choice White Leghorn laying hens, for a comparatively small investment. Your name then is placed on our "Monthly Payroll" and you receive a regular income from the start without putting forth effort of any kind.

BRIEFLY DESCRIBED, the ORO BLANCO PLAN enables you to become an egg producer by proxy. Your flock is housed in our modern poultry plant, now being erected at Owensmouth. Our experts care for your chickens and market the eggs so as to bring the maximum return. And, wherever you are, you receive your profits MONTHLY.

GOEBEL WINS NONSTOP RACE

Los Angeles Flyer Makes Fast Cincinnati Run

Victory Nets Him $3000 Cash and $1000 Trophy

Harry Tucker, Backer, With Him on Flight

CINCINNATI, Sept. 22. (AP)—Art Goebel accompuished his specialty again today. He won another air derby. Goebel, whose home is in Los Angeles, further established himself as a premier nonstop flyer wen he won the Los Angeles-Cincinnati nonstop air race here today.

By finishing ahead of his field, Goebel won a $3000 cash prize, a leg on a $5000 gold trophy and a $1000 golden replica of the trophy.

Goebel only had one competitor in his flight, Emil Burgin, Mineola, N. Y., whose whereabouts were unknown tonight. Burgin took off from Mines Field, Los Angeles, an hour earlier than Goebel yesterday, but the New York flyer did not have as speedy a ship as the California airman. Goebel's plane was capable of making 180 miles an hour, while Burgin's had a maximum of 120.

PRESENTED WITH TROPHY

Soon after landing his Lockheed-Vega monoplane, Yankee Doodle at Lunken airport here, Goebel, victor of the Dole flight from San Francisco to Honolulu, and holder of the nonstop flight record from California to New York, was presented with the golden trophy he had won. Harry Tucker, Los Angeles, backer of Goebel's flight and owner of the Yankee Doodle, accompanied the pilot. Both said they experienced good weather, but had not sighted Burgin anywhere along the route.

The Yankee Doodle took off from Mines Field yesterday at 4:07 p.m., Pacific Coast time, and landed at Lunken airport today at 10:24 a.m., Eastern Standard time. His official flying time was announced as fifteen hours and seventeen minutes.

Burgin preceded Goebel in the air with his Bellanca monoplane at 2:56 p.m., Pacific Coast time. No reports had been received by Lunken airport officials given Burgin's position since he left Mines Field.

CROSS TEN STATES

Goebel's official flying average was announced as 129.47 miles an hour. The nonstop pilot said he struck one patch of bad weather last night but pushed his ship at its maximum sweep when dawn broke this morning. A tail skid on the plane was slightly damaged on landing, but mechanics were put to work immediately to fix it.

Ten States were crossed by the Yankee Doodle on its flight here, Goebel said. They were California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

Goebel plans to leave here Monday for New York.

Class A and B racers are expected tomorrow.

Seven Keystone bombers, flying from California to Virginia, landed here this afternoon. The bombers, largest type of airplane in the United States Army, came here from Dayton, O. They have made the flight from Mines Field, Los Angeles in short hops and plan to continue the eastward journey to Langley Field, Va., Monday.

HOLMAN HEADS CLASS B AT FORT WORTH

FORT WORTH (Tex.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Charles W. (Speed) Holman, St. Paul, who took off from El Paso at 8:11 a.m. today, led Class B Los Angeles-Cincinnati air contestants into Fort Worth. He landed at the municipal airport at 1:45 p.m. in his Laird plane.

Holman took the air again at 2:14:10 p.m.

E. E. Ballough, with Charles Dickinson, 71-year-old aviator, landed here second at 3:16:07 p.m. He hopped at 3:39:39 p.m.

Sam H. Turner, Los Angeles, flying a Berliner monoplane in the Class A Los Angeles-Cincinnati air race, who was forced down Friday at Pecos because of heavy clouds and a low fuel supply, arrived at the municipal airport here at 2:54:13 p.m. today, fueled his plane and hopped off again at about 3:15.

EIGHT CLASS A PLANES AT TONEY FIELD

PINE BLUFF (Ark.) Sept. 22. (AP) Eight planes which took off from Fort Worth, Tex., early today in the Los Angeles-to-Cincinnati air derby landed at Toney Field this afternoon for an overnight stop before taking off on the last leg of their transcontinental race early tomorrow.

Bringing his Junior Stinson plane on the field at 1:59:24, George Hopkins of Detroit, was the first to land here, followed closely by Robert A. Dake of Pittsburgh, in an American Moth, said to be leading in elapsed time, who brought his plane down at 2:06:50.

Official landing times of the eight planes in the Class A division which reached here from Fort Worth, follow:

Hopkins, 1:59:24; Dake, 2:06:50; James Whitman, flying a Pheasant, entry 67, landed at 2:16:05; Theodore Kenyon, Challenger, entry 51, 2:09:22; J. Shelby Charles, Eagle Rock, entry 8, 2:20:55; Dick Myhres, Simplex, entry 57, 2:27:17, A. H. Kriedler, Challenger, entry 93, 2:39:48; Ralph Haines, Waco, entry 36, 2:43:50.

The flyers were met here this afternoon by a number of aviation enthusiasts, including Henry G. Yeiser and party, who came to Pine Bluff two days ago by plane to greet the race entrants.

Mr. Yeiser underwrote the flight and has offered a cup to the winner of the race.

Awarding of lap prizes was to be made tonight and the flyers will be entertained by members of the Pine Bluff Air Port Club.

Charles W. Holman, was the first of the Class B, Los Angeles-Cincinnati air derby, to arrive here, bringing his Laird plane down at 4:49:40 p.m.

HIGHBROW IDEA HITS HOO-HOOS

Bay City Lumbermen Move to Cut Out Comedy Feature, Plain "Club" Now

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Helen how has busted loose in the Hoo-Hoos.

It may not mean much to the world at large, but every lumberman on the Pacific Coast knows about the Hoo-Hoos. That's the name of their social organization.

San Francisco Club No. 9 has decided the name is falling into disrepute because the expression has come to mean—well, something kinda frivolous—not anything worthy of the wide-slung he-men of the wide-open spaces.

They propose to call themselves the Lumbermen's Club. And if the Hoo-Hoos don't like it, why, they can hoo-hoo—and how!

THE HISTORY OF TAMMANY

bartenders who had a supply of blanks signed with the name of one of Tweed's judges!

This election in 1868 placed one blot on the record of Samuel J. Tilden, which he never was able to efface or explain away. Shortly before election Tweed sent out a letter to members of the Democratic State Committee in the up-State counties asking each to telegraph Tweed, as soon as the polls closed, an estimate of how the count would stand in each county. The letter was signed with Tilden's name as chairman of the State Committee, and though it is known Tilden had no part in sending it out, it also is known he learned of it in time to repudiate it and that he did nothing.

Tweed's object was to learn how many fraudulent votes New York City would have to furnish to overcome the Republican majority outside of the city. Oakey Hall, who was made Mayor, when Hoffman became Governor, afterward admitted he had written and signed the letter. The theft of this election placed Tweed in a more powerful position than he ever before had occupied and multiplied his opportunities for loot.

Jay Gould and James Fisk, Jr., made further wealth for Tweed, when they introduced him to the directorate of the Erie Railroad, and he joined them in plundering the stockholders and in forcing out Daniel Drew and Cornelius Vanderbilt, who for years had been battling for Erie control.

In addition to his other official posts Tweed now was a State Senator and a most influential figure in the State government. He planned to make Hoffman President and to take the Governorship for himself. This plan brought him again into direct conflict with Tilden.

HONOLULU BOY'S SLAYER JAILED

Japanese Youth Reported Confessing Crime

Prison Guards Reinforced After Capture

Excitement Runs High as News Spreads

HONOLULU (T. H.) Sept. 22. (AP) A 19-year-old Japanese boy, Yutaka Fukunaga, sought as the slayer of Gill Jamieson, banker's son, after the latter was kidnaped from school, was arrested tonight and confessed, police said.

"I have been a bad boy, I want to tell it to my mother," the Japanese boy said when first arrested. Later he was quoted as saying: "What does it matter? Let the crowd get me, I don't care."

CALLS FOR TROOPS

Sheriff Patrick Gleason has called on Territorial Adjt.-Gen. Perry M. Smoot to assign National Guardsmen to duty around the jail and police station. Gleason, fearful of mob action, took no chances with his prisoner as a large crowd gathered after the arrest was made.

The Oahu tower siren blew steadily for five minutes, announcing the capture of the slayer. National Guardsmen arrived at the City Jail and a cordon of police was thrown about the structure. The crowds around the police station filled the streets, blocking traffic in all directions.

IS DRUG ADDICT

Before Fukunaga made his confession detectives announced he is a drug addict. A drug outfit was found near the body of Gill Jamieson.

A bloodstained pair of trousers was found in Fukunaga's room. Police said some of the ransom money also was found. Jamieson had paid $4000 and it was through some of the bills included in the sum the crime was traced to the Japanese youth. The confessed kidnaper was arrested on Honolulu's main street, Fort.

The arrest ended a five-day man-hunt in which thousands joined. Gill Jamieson was kidnaped Tuesday afternoon. Ten thousand dollars in ransom was demanded of the child's father by the abductor, who procured $4000 Tuesday night. Gill was found dead Thursday. He had been strangled to death.

Seattle Flyer Smashes Plane

MARSEILLES (France) Sept. 22. (AP)—George H. Storck, Seattle flyer, who is on a flight around the world, escaped injury today when his plane turned over as he was trying a take-off on the next lap of his trip to Corsica. The plane was badly damaged.

Storck started for Corsica yesterday but was forced to return to Marseilles because of fog after being in the air less than two hours.

Storck was pinned under the airplane, which was heavily loaded, but was helped out without difficulty. The plane was damaged to such an extent it appears beyond repair.

Venizelos Ready for Pact Signing

NAPLES (Italy) Sept. 22. (AP)—Premier Venizelos of Greece arrived in Naples today for the signing of a recently announced pact of friendship, conciliation and arbitration with Italy.

He will be received by Premier Mussolini tomorrow and the signing of the pact will take place either then or Monday.

RECALL DEFEATED

GRASS VALLEY, Sept. 22. (AP)—Efforts to recall J. A. Teagarden and Theodore Schwartz as directors of the Nevada Irrigation District failed here today by a vote of 46 to 175, and 46 to 137, respectively.

MEETING ENDS IN CONFUSION

Parrot Succeeds in Tangling Republican Committee

Adjournment Taken Without Selection of Chairman

Hectic Session Fails to See Organization Completed

BY FLOYD J. HEALEY
"Times" Staff Correspondent

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—With his political machine facing disintegration in Los Angeles, Kent Parrot's attempt to salvage what he can of State patronage before being driven out of the picture tangled the Republican State Central Committee so thoroughly here today that it adjourned without naming a chairman or completing its organization for the next two years.

The adjournment came at the instance of Charles P. Neumiller of Stockton, present chairman of the committee, who is seeking re-election and is the choice of that element of the party which has the party's welfare, rather than individual ambition, at heart. The meeting broke up after four hours of strenuous debate, motions, countermotions, parliamentary flares and some bitterness.

The one point upon which the delegates were able to agree was that Herbert Hoover must be returned the victor at the November polls by the greatest majority California ever gave a Presidential nominee.

The gathering got as far as seating 125 of its 640 members and prepared for perfecting its organization when the storm broke

ROW OVER PROXIES

As has been customary in past years, Chairman Neumiller, wielded the gavel and suggested that the telegraphic proxies of those members prevented by pressure of business from attending the committee meeting be accepted. This has been the procedure of the committee from time immemorial.

Half a dozen of the group backing Harbor Commissioner Allen of Los Angeles for the chairmanship at the instigation of Parrot, were on their feet in a moment, objecting to the acceptance of telegraphic proxies.

From that time on it was a battle of words.

One thing, however, was noticeable in the palavering and excitement.

Recognized cohorts of former Sheriff Finn of San Francisco took a negative part in the rumpus. It was considered significant by reason of the fact that Parrot previously has lined up with the political emissaries of Finn.

FIRST SIGNS OF FRICTION

An advance insight into an apparent friction within this group was given a week ago when the party held its State convention at Sacramento. Parrot made his first open bid for control of the State Central Committee at that time by advancing Commissioner Allen for the chairmanship.

Finn, making a hasty summary of the vote situation at that time, refused to commit himself and it was considered possible that the former San Francisco bellwether saw the handwriting on the wall.

On the surface the inactivity of the Finn group today seemed to bear out that interpretation, but astute observers were not able to satisfy themselves as to whether or not today's methods by the Finn group were not designed to get a true gauge of the strength which Parrot can muster over the State.

If they feel that Parrot indicated his possibilities by throwing the Central Committee meeting into such confusion that it will have to meet again to complete its organization, it is believed the Finn-McCabe crowd will swing openly into line behind Parrot at the next session.

Socialists Lose Seats in Sweden

STOCKHOLM (Sweden) Sept. 22. (AP)—The Socialists have lost sixteen seats in the second Chamber of Parliament, while the Communists have gained four. The Conservatives gained eight and the Agrarians nine.

The balloting for the Deputies ended yesterday with Stockholm filling eighteen seats, the other 212 seats having been filled last Sunday. The new Chamber will be composed of seventy-three Conservatives, ninety Social Democrats, four Liberals, twenty-eight Liberal Prohibitionists, twenty-seven Agrarians, and eight Communists.

Premier Carl G. Ekman, a Liberal Prohibitionist, was re-elected. Foreign Minister J. Eliel Loefgren, leader of the Liberal party, lost his seat.

Mexican Road Cut by Floods

NOGALES (Ariz.) Sept. 22. (AP)—At least two and one-half miles of the railroad tracks of the Southern Pacific of Mexico and part of the bridge spanning the Rosario River were washed away yesterday by the swelling of the Rosario and San Pedro rivers, according to reports reaching railroad men here today.

Heavy rains accompanied by winds of great force drenched the region immediately south of Mazatlan, Sin., and caused the overflow. The storm struck the territory early yesterday morning and continued until late in the afternoon.

DOMESTIC TRAGEDY TAKES THREE LIVES

SPOKANE (Wash.) Sept. 22. (AP) Louis P. Anderson, 49 years of age, railway mail clerk who lived here, shot and killed his wife and his mother-in-law with a pistol at Whitefish, Mont., today and then killed himself, a telegram received here by the chief clerk of the United States Railway Mail Service revealed. The telegram came from E. M. Hutchinson, postmaster at Whitefish. Domestic trouble is thought to have been the cause of the killings.

ANGELENO KILLED IN YOSEMITE

Cecil Morrison Dies in Fall Over Cliff During Hike to Glacier Point

YOSEMITE (Cal.) Sept. 22. (AP) The body of Cecil Morrison, 30 years of age, was discovered late today on a ledge about 1000 feet above the Merced River Canyon bottom by Ranger Charles F. Adair.

Death had evidently resulted from a fall of several hundred feet, Adair said, after Morrison had left the regular trail along the canyon to explore the ledges of the walls near Grizzly Peak.

The dead man left the camp of his mother and party of friends early yesterday morning, on a hike with several of his acquaintances. He had left the group a short time later, stating that he would continue to Glacier Point. When he did not return last night, search parties were organized, which continued throughout last night and today.

Morrison's business address is Security Building, Los Angeles. His mother tonight was prostrated with grief as rangers and friends toiled to bring the body down from the steep cliff.

Former Florida Governor Egged by Smith Men

TALAHASSEE (Fla.) Sept. 22. (AP) A barrage of eggs broke up former Gov. Catts's anti-Smith address here. It was said that some of the eggs hit him.

The egg-throwing began when Catts took up the religious question after he had been speaking for about thirty minutes. The address was being delivered in an open-air band stand.

Catts came down off the stand and went into the crowd with an offer of a reward for the identification of the egg throwers. He is said to have challenged any man in the crowd to fight him singly.

Two Positions Call Educator

MADISON (Wis.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Whether he will resume his duties as professor of law at the University of Wisconsin or continue as Vice-Governor of the Philippines is the dilemma confronting Prof. Eugene A. Gilmore.

Expiration of a leave of absence from the university calling for his return as a member of the faculty when the university opens next week and the insistence of Gov. Henry L. Stimson that he continue in his insular position has developed a situation which today found Prof. Gilmore undecided as to what course he will pursue.

Changes Slated in Air Mail East

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Installation of beacons for night flying over the Sierra Nevada range will be completed by November 1 and will mean a change in the departure of east-bound air mail that will save one complete business day between San Francisco, Oakland and New York, it is announced.

When all the beacons have been installed the east-bound mail plane will leave at 10 p.m. instead of 6 a.m., as at present, making the flight to New York in two nights and one business day instead of one night and two business days, as at present.

Oswald Mosley to Accept Title

LONDON, Sept. 22. (AP)—Young Oswald Mosley, whose father, Sir Oswald Mosley, died yesterday, is not going to reject the title despite his Socialistic beliefs, says the Evening Star in a dispatch from Nice whence Mosley is returning to England today.

"I shall retain the title," the dispatch quotes him as saying. "It is not worth giving up. Titles count for nothing nowadays."

Young Mosley said he will continue his work as labor member of Parliament.

MAN HURT EN ROUTE TO BROTHER'S FUNERAL

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Sept. 22. (AP) S. P. Goodmunson of San Francisco is in a hospital here in a critical condition as a result of an auto accident north of here today. Goodmunson was on his way to Los Angeles to attend the funeral of his brother when the car in which he was riding, driven by Barney Johnson, Warren (Ariz.) mining man, skidded in the soft dirt after passing a truck and trailer and crashed into a fence. Johnson was slightly hurt.

HOT-PENNY TOSSERS ESCAPE PENALTY

PORTLAND (Or.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Disorderly-conduct charges against Henry Walters and Tom Donovan, youthful baseball players of the San Francisco club, accused of tossing hot pennies from a hotel window, were continued indefinitely today by Municipal Judge Stadter. Deputy City Attorney Bain said Mrs. L. Cleveland, who was paid $18.50 after her hat was burned by a coin, did not care to press charges and children whose fingers were scorched failed to appear against the accused men.

EARLY PLOWING STARTS

CORCORAN, Sept. 2.— Early plowing and preparation is under way in the Lake Tulare Basin for planting of 100,000 acres of grain this season. While the bulk is to be wheat, there will be considerable acreage in barley, some oats and a small planting of flax.

LEAGUE MIXED ON ACCORD VOTE

Franco-British Navy Pact Wins Approval

Whether as 'Effort' or 'Step' Upward in Doubt

Italian Conception of Treaty Thought Adopted

GENEVA, Sept. 22. (AP)—Some confusion exists in League of Nations circles as to the exact text of a resolution adopted by the disarmament committee of the League of Nations Assembly toward the recently announced Franco-British naval accord. From the two texts given out today it would appear the committee regarded the accord both as an "effort" and as a "step" toward the future work of disarmament.

It appears that when the disarmament committee met today the French text of the resolution presented referred to the accord as an effort, while the English text called it a step. No one noticed the conflict in texts, but League officials said it was the French text which really was adopted and will be presented to the Assembly.

If this version of the committee's action is accepted it means the Italian conception of the Franco-British compromise has been approved and the accord is hailed "with satisfaction as an effort" instead of being approved as a "step" for preparing the way for the future work of disarmament. When the English version of the resolution first was read it indicated the Italian contention had been disapproved.

The resolution also asks President Loudon of the preparatory disarmament commission to convoke that body at the end of the present year, "or in any case at the beginning of 1929."

Count von Bernstorff, the German delegate, who has been insisting a definite date for an international conference for reduction of disarmaments be inserted in the resolution, announced that he will abstain from voting when the resolution goes before the assembly. He said he reserved the right to give a detailed explanation of the German position at that time.

UNITED STATES EXPECTED TO DISAPPROVE ACCORD

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—The position of the Washington government on the Anglo-French naval accord for the limitation of cruisers and submarines is expected to be made clear early next week after President Coolidge has had an opportunity to study the preliminary draft of a note being prepared at the State Department.

That the reply, if sent, will express American disfavor of the principles of big cruiser and submarine limitation without limitaton of smaller ships of either type which was evolved in the Anglo-French conversations, is considered certain. The question still in doubt, however, is the tone the proposed communication shall be given and whether it shall be made public immediately in order to clarify the situation for the American public as well as the rest of the world.

BRITISH PRESS FEARS OFFENSE TO UNITED STATES

LONDON, Sept. 22. (AP)—With terms of the Anglo-French naval compromise gradually becoming known, the opposition press today criticised it as bound to offend the United States.

Even papers not hostile to the government dwelt on the mischief which has been done by the failure of the government to reveal the terms. The papers carried abstracts cabled from the United States after publication by some papers of what purports to be the text.

The French have been insisting the terms be revealed immediately, but the British have withheld consent.

Advices from Geneva assert the accord covers an agreement between France and Great Britain that a disarmament conference shall deal with these classes of naval vessels:

(1.) Surface ships of 10,000 tons or less armed with guns over six and up to eight inches in caliber.

(2.) Ocean-going submarines of more than 600 tons.

(3.) Capital ships of more than 10,000 tons or armed with guns exceeding eight inches in caliber.

(4.) Airplane carriers of more than 10,000 tons.

Wilkins May or May Not Marry

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Honeymoon on a polar expedition? Not for Capt. Sir Hubert Wilkins, distinguished explorer of the North Pole. He may marry Miss Suzanne Bennett, Broadway actress, later on, but not now. He may even be engaged to her. But that's their affair.

So Sir Hubert said today just before his departure on the Munson liner Southern Cross from Hoboken. He was bound for Montevideo with two pilots and a mechanic and two seaplanes. They will board a whaling vessel for Deception Island, proceed south 600 miles to Graham Land, establish a base depot and in December start air surveys of the ice.

LEMOORE TO HOLD COMMUNITY FAIR

LEMOORE, Sept. 22—With twenty-four entrants a spirited contest is being made for queen of the Lemoore Community Fair to be held October 18 to 20, inclusive. Beside the crowning of the queen, an extensive display of fruit, vegetables, dairy products and live stock is planned, also a poultry and dog show and a parade of pet animals by the children of the district.

MRS. CADY SUCCUMBS

BAKERSFIELD, Sept. 22.—Mrs. Sarah V. Cady, 76 years of age, wife of W. H. Cady and mother of R. E. Cady, secretary-manager of the Kern County Fair Association, died last night at her home following two weeks of illness. Funeral services will be conducted at 2:30 p.m. Monday at the Hopson mortuary.

Byrd Tells Hopes of Outwitting Barriers to Frozen Continent

POLAR FLYER WILL TEAR SECRET FROM ANTARCTIC

Explorer Expresses Firm Faith in Crew Which Will Battle Ice Wastes More Than Year

BY COMMANDER RICHARD E. BYRD

[Copyright, 1928, by The New York Times Company]

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The long, tiresome and yet [illegible] days of preparing for our Antarctic adventure are [illegible] and we are about to start south. What may be ahead no one can foresee. We have prepared as carefully and as [illegible] as has been possible, but the Antarctic has ways of [illegible] strange tricks on those who invade her desolate icebound [illegible] and it may be that we shall seem to fall short of what may [illegible] of us.

I do not think so. If the skill [illegible] and resourcefulness of [illegible] who are going with me to [illegible] than a year on the ice are [illegible] I believe them to be the ex[illegible] will give a good account of [illegible]. We shall do our best. We [illegible] a new kind of exploration [illegible] a little known part of the [illegible]. We should be able to learn [illegible] of the Antarctic in two short [illegible] than all the brave and able [illegible] who have suffered or given [illegible] in other expeditions.

LOCKED SECRETS

[illegible] a superficial glance at the [illegible] that we hope to penetrate [illegible] why that is so. Nature [illegible] the secrets of Antarctica [illegible] them within a wall of [illegible] clothing the land with a [illegible] in which no living [illegible]. When man forces his [illegible] into this great wilderness [illegible] the most difficult [illegible] can confront an explorer. [illegible], Scott, Amundsen, [illegible] all those who have made [illegible] record in the Antarctic [illegible] the strength and endurance [illegible] of their bodies and their [illegible] odds that seem almost [illegible]. We are more fortunate [illegible] having the wings of aviation [illegible] us as quickly over the [illegible] which they laboriously [illegible] their way.

[illegible] has always fascinated [illegible] who have been there. It [illegible] by a belt of floating ice, [illegible] shifting mass of treacherous floes through which ships must pick their way carefully. Sometimes the belt is held fast for days at a time.

And then one day the sun shines, the storm passes and the ship finds its way through the ice and comes out into the vast Ross Sea, where whales play and the light shines on great icebergs. Through this sea we shall sail until the great ice barrier rises before us.

SYMBOL OF ANTARCTIC

It rises as high as 250 feet, a solid mass of cliff-like ice which seems effectually to shut off the interior. It rests most of its length upon the sea and parts of it break off and drift away in the form of those vast tabular bergs which are peculiar to the South. Some of them are many miles long. It would be impossible to winter on the ice barrier because of this danger.

That spot is the Bay of Whales, an indentation in the ice barrier which gets its name from the schools of whales found there. The charts of the ice barrier indicate that, although it advances and recedes at most points, and is now receding, it is fairly stationary at the Bay of Whales.

The bay ice also has the great advantage of being only a few feet above the water, so that it is possible to discharge a ship there by moo[illegible] ice.

POLAR LANDSCAPE

When we step ashore there we will see before us a mile or so of sea ice, then a gently rising slope glistening white in the sun and extending inland as far as the eye can reach. Far to the left are the heights of King Edward VII Land and to the right the undulating capes and promontories of the ice barrier. There is little wind at this point and the silence is broken only by the cries of gulls and petrels.

Before us will lie, wrapped in its mantle of ice and snow, 4,600,000 square miles of almost unknown territory, an area as large as the United States and Mexico.

I have been asked many times why we are going to the Antarctic. This is a hard question to answer, not because there is any doubt in my own mind or in the minds of the scientists who are accompanying or advising me as to the value of the trip, but because the significance of data which may be obtained is far removed from popular knowledge and experience.

THIRST FOR KNOWLEDGE

Men do these things because they are men; because in the unknown lies a ceaseless challenge to man's curiosity, to his ever-knowledge is complete.

Some men invent things which add to the comfort of life, some delve into the secrets of nature in laboratories that we may have electric lights and better food and machines which heal our bodies. Some men explore unknown lands and seek to solve in them the riddles of nature, that we may have a more complete and nobler comprehension of our world.

CHALLENGE OF NATURE

The mere fact that on this earth of ours is a region larger than our own country of which nothing is known is a sufficient motive for our trip. So long as that great space remains unexplored men will attempt to penetrate it. America should have its share in that work. We cannot hope to complete it, although we hope to do more than has been done before because of our airplanes.

Is the Antarctic one continent or two huge islands? It is known that the polar plateau rises to 10,000 feet in the interior and that there are two large mountain chains running inland from the Ross Sea and at either side of the ice barrier. But opposite the Ross Sea is another indentation in the continent, the Weddell Sea, so similar in appearance to the Ross Sea, so apparently related to it in position that there has long been speculation as to whether or not these two bodies of water did not at one time meet in a strait which has since become overlaid with the ice of the polar plateau. Nobody knows how deep is the ice covering, and it is probable that a careful survey from the air would show that there once was a connection between the two Antarctic seas and that the continent of ice was two large islands before the Ice Age.

TO EXPLORE MOUNTAINS

It is probable that we shall also be able to determine whether one of the mountain ranges is actually a continuation of the Andean Cordillera. The interior of King Edward VII Land, or rather that part of the interior to the southeast of that land, has never been seen, and if we are able to penetrate it some distance by air we shall learn definitely the trend of the mountains, or perhaps discover an undulating plain. That is one of the greatest geographical problems of the Antarctic.

The purpose of the flight to the Pole is not only to reach the Pole itself, but to survey as much of the polar plateau as possible. My greatest desire in going to the Pole is to fly beyond it, if possible, and ascertain the extent of the plateau and its physical characteristics. It is probable that it extends for many miles in an undulating plain, but nobody knows.

TO MAP COUNTRY

All of this country over which we fly will be mapped with the aid of aerial cameras, specially constructed instruments which will record a wide territory on each side of our routes, the size depending on the height we are able to attain over many elevations of the landscape. From these photographs, maps will be drawn which for the first time will give nearly accurate details of the country.

There are many problems for the physicist in auroral observations, earth radiation, radio-activity of snow and ice and glaciology. There are meteorological studies to be made, perhaps as important a task as anything else, for the Antarctic cold and storms affect the climate of half the world. There are studies in magnetism and spectro-photography, and the causes of that little understood phenomenon, the aurora australis.

EXPERIMENTS TO BE MADE

Fossils are to be sought, and rock specimens will be obtained for careful examination. There is much valuable experimental radio work to be undertaken.

Our geographical work will be controlled almost entirely by meteorological conditions. Airplanes have never been used in the Antarctic and any one who uses them there must begin his work with somewhat the feeling that he is going into danger.

The report of Antarctic blizzards would cause the most adventurous spirit to become cautious. It is obvious that flying should not be a slap-dash proceeding in a region where winds rise from dead calm to forty miles an hour in two minutes, and out of a sky that had been clear, carrying blinding clouds of snow through which it would be impossible to fly safely. It can be understood why we are taking four planes. We shall be extremely fortunate if we bring them all back.

PLAN OF WORK

Our testing and early flying in laying down bases will be comparatively simple. We shall have an opportunity to test our skis under loads, for the weather at the Bay of Whales is unusually uniform and free from storms. This is due to the unusual formation of the ice barrier, which is a vast triangle, 600 miles long at its sea base and running inland about 400 miles. It is believed that this offers a zone of comparative calm because of the peculiar nature of the storms which roll down off the high polar plateau, the largest plateau of similar height in the world.

But once we pass beyond this region in flight we enter meteorological conditions that are uncertain and dangerous. The flight to the Pole will indicate what I mean. It seems reasonable to assume that from the edge of the barrier, where our main base will be located, up to the glacier over which Amundsen made his way at the edge of the teau.

This is fortunate, for it will give us an opportunity to climb slowly with our heavy load to an altitude of 12,000 feet or more, which we need to cross the mountains and the plateau. We may, of course, take off from a base at the foot of the plateau, but this must be decided by conditions as we find them.

The moment we reach the mountains, we enter a storm area. Winds howl down the passes in the mountains from the plateau, bearing dense clouds of snow through which it will be difficult to fly. The air is turbulent and the velocity of the wind such, that we shall literally have to fight our way through it. This will tax the plane and the pilots to the utmost, unless it is possible to climb above the storm, and I very much doubt that we will be able to avoid all of it.

But once through the mountains and well into the plateau, it is probable that we shall encounter merely moderate winds and little snowfall, which should make this part of our journey favorable for exploration of a part of the plateau and for close examination and for photographing of the mountains seen by Amundsen, to which he gave the name of the Queen Maude Range.

AT THE POLE

Whether we shall be able to alight at the Pole and make observations on the ground is problematical.

A flight to the east and southeast over the mountains that are supposed to exist to the east of the barrier will be a very different and much more difficult trip. There we will be over absolutely unknown land, flying directly into the path from which come the pressure waves that control to a large extent the storms of Antarctica.

BRAVING PERILS

The origin and cause of these waves is unknown, so we shall have the condition of flying over an unknown area, never before seen by man, toward the threat of storms which we can neither anticipate nor avoid. In these side-flights, however, may lie the greatest successes of the expedition, as they will result in the mapping of a vast territory hitherto unknown.

They will not be long flights, of course, and will be started from inland bases so that it will be possible to dash out and back again as a precaution against being caught in a storm.

It can readily be seen that a sudden storm with snow would blind the pilot so that it would be impossible to keep going, and if he should be caught in a storm there would be only two possible manoeuvres—either to land at once and wait until it was over, which would be safest, or try to beat the storm back to the base. That might be possible, as the pressure waves move at a velocity of only forty miles an hour, and, fortunately, directly toward our main base. It is for this reason that the Bay of Whales offers, of all known parts of the Antarctic, the best base.

It can readily be seen that flying in the Antarctic is very different from Arctic flying. There are few storms in the Arctic during the spring months, but there is the constant danger of fog. In the Antarctic, on the other hand, there is little fog but constant danger from storms.

In the Arctic also, it is possible to fly at a low elevation above sea level, but in the Antarctic nearly all flights must be at a height of many thousands of feet above sea level, which limits the capacity of the plane and makes forced landings with a load very dangerous.

DEADLY COLD

There is the satisfaction of having a solid surface instead of floating ice on which to come down; but Antarctic cold is much more severe than that of the Arctic in the summer months. In the Antarctic it never gets above freezing. In flying, of course, lower temperatures would be encountered.

We hope to carry out most of our extensive program, and believe that we shall be able to do so. The personnel of the expedition is all that could be asked; no better men ever went into the Antarctic. Our equipment is of the best, both aeronautic and scientific.

And so we push off in the hope that we shall be able to accomplish all that is expected of us and that our expedition will carry a step further the glorious tradition of achievement which has already been made in the Antarctic.

Plane Kills Boy, Injures Many in Take-off Effort

NAPA, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—An airplane piloted by William Hoffman of Oakland, failed to rise from a ranch field near here today, lipped on its left side, crashed into a group of spectators watching the take-off, killed a child, 3 years of age, caused serious injuries to two men and bruised at least fifteen others who did not require hospital attention, in addition to demolishing one automobile.

Mrs. Mary Wainwright was holding her 3-year-old son Robert by the hand. The boy was directly in the path of the machine as it swooped to the left side, and died instantly when struck.

RUM-RUNNER SUSPECT SOLD TO BALBOA MAN

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (AP)—The British steamer, Coal Harbour, seized in 1925 as a rum-runner, and released last February after three years of litigation proved her seizure illegal, has been sold by attorneys for her Canadian owners for a nominal sum. The purchaser is C. E. Rodger of Balboa, Cal. The ship is now lying at Government Island, Alameda.

Titta Ruffo

GUEST ARTIST
Metropolitan and Chicago Opera Companies

WHEN that charming young man, Lindbergh, uttered his immortal "We," he expressed in one brief word a sentiment to which I have been trying to give voice for years. For just as Lindbergh felt a human attachment for the man-made bird that was his partner in the most magnificent adventure of our day, so I have felt a bond of kinship for the piano that has been my companion in the greatest achievements of my musical career. The other half of my "We" is my Knabe.

I had heard the Knabe praised in Europe. I had heard it praised again during my operatic engagements in South America and Cuba. But I was not prepared for the thrill that was mine when, shortly after I became a guest artist with the Metropolitan and Chicago opera companies, I first touched the keys of this lovely instrument. Such tone! Each note pure and liquid as a bubbling spring. And as I changed the mood of my playing, the Knabe changed expression with me, reflecting, as in a magic mirror, every shade of my emotion. Then I began to sing—I had to sing, so inspiring, so eloquently compelling was the tone of the piano before me. And again I was amazed.

Instead of two voices, there was still but one. The Knabe's voice had become part of my own.

The admiration the Knabe excited in me that day has since deepened into that rare and beautiful comradeship which a man finds during his life in only a few friends. My Knabe has been the confidant of my most intimate musical thoughts and ambitions. It is the companion of my practice hours, the assisting artist at my concerts. It is teacher, accompanist, inspiration. It is my partner in success.

You want your piano, too, to be a friend and inspiration. Come in and hear the Knabe. Even though your ear be not musically trained, you will recognize, in the Knabe's lyric tone, the humanly sympathetic quality that has endeared this piano to Titta Ruffo, to Jeritza, Ponselle, Martinelli and Scotti. The quality that has made the Knabe the official piano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and the artistic medium of those great pianists, Rosenthal and Orloff. The quality that will make the Knabe your choice among pianos.

A small down payment places the Knabe in your home—you have years to pay the balance. Prices from $975 to $2600. With the Ampico from $1900 to $4600. Knabe period models in grand pianos, from $1600.

formerly was an assistant Secretary of Commerce under Mr. Hoover; that Paul S. Clapp, once a secretary to Mr. Hoover, was named secretary of the joint committee and is the executive director of the National Electric Light Association, which, he explained, is one of the three groups making up the joint committee; and that former Senator Lenroot, of Wisconsin, who, he said, was retained by the joint committee as counsel "to oppose" the Walsh resolution for an investigation of public utilities operations, also was "Mr. Hoover's counsel at the Kansas City convention in the contest over southern delegates."

Gov. Smith also laid down a barrage on Roy O. West, present Secretary of the Interior, and H. Edmund Machold, the new chairman of the New York State Republican committee.

"West," he said, "for almost a quarter of a century has been closely identified with important power companies," and the nominee asked:

"Is it not a fair argument to assume that such an appointment indicates a spirit of unfriendliness, if not hostility, on the part of the Republican party in the nation to those who stand for public ownership and control of the God-given resources of the nation?"

As for Machold, the nominee referred to him as "the most bitter opponent of public ownership and control of water power" in New York State. He said Machold "used all his influence and strength in the Legislature to oppose the adoption of the constructive, forward-looking program of State ownership and control, and until the very day he was selected State chairman was affiliated with many of the largest private water power companies in the State."

Turning to the Boulder Canyon dam problem, in which Colorado and the other six States in the Colorado River basin are directly interested, Gov. Smith called for "immediate action." With regard to Muscle Shoals he reiterated a belief that the government should continue "the full and complete operation" of the plant in Alabama, "retaining it under government ownership and control."

BOULDER DAM

As for Boulder dam, the nominee said that "the site of the dam and the machinery generating this water power must be preserved in public ownership."

"Never should this priceless right be given away for private exploitation," he added, "and in whatever form the power generated at Boulder dam shall be distributed, public authority must retain the contractual rights to control the rates to be charged to the ultimate consumer, and to control by contract the fair and reasonable distribution of the power to be generated."

Expanding on the Muscle Shoals question, the New York Governor said: "I disagree most emphatically with the President. The principle involved in the proper disposition of Muscle Shoals means more to the people of this country than 100 first-class battleships (this was in reference to the statement of Mr. Coolidge that Muscle Shoals 'probably does not represent in market value much more than a first-class battleship.) Only at the last session of the Congress a bill dealing with the problem in a forward looking manner was included by Mr. Coolidge among his pocket vetoes, not even being worthy, according to his notion, 'of any explanation for its rejection.'"

DEVELOPMENT URGED

The Democratic nominee said that development of the Muscle Shoals plant should be completed "so that the nation may be reimbursed, agriculture receive the benefit of cheap nitrate production for fertilizer purposes, and the surplus power distributed fairly to the people of the ten States which this plant should serve at rates which should remain under the control of the government."

Outlining his general policy with a regard to water power resources, Gov. Smith expressed the viey that "where they are owned by an individual State they should be under the control of that State, and where they are owned by States jointly they should be under the control of those States."

"This does not mean," he explained, "that the government—national or State—is required to engage in the business of distributing lectrical energy, but it does mean that by virtue of this ownership, both of site and of plant, the government shall have a contractual as well as a regulatory right to insist upon reasonable rates and equitable distribution."

TESTIMONY CITED

Discussing, in connection with his charge that there is an organized effort to discourage public ownership of water power sites, testimony offered at the Federal Trade Commission inquiry, the Democratic standard bearer in his prepared text said the evidence disclosed that the "prime purpose of these propagandists" was to defeat the Walsh resolution, and to defeat measures for the construction at Boulder Canyon and Muscle Shoals.

"The schools were invaded," he declared, adding that the minutes of the National Electric Light Association, "show a plan to have so-called properly qualified men prepare textbooks for use in classes and libraries," and to have "men prominent in the industry give lectures before classes."

Smith asserted that it was frankly admitted in the course of the Trade Commission's hearings "that advertising was inserted in certain newspapers in order to obtain from them the printing in their news columns of propaganda against public ownership and against Congressional legislation deemed hostile to the power interests."

Gov. Smith took a fling at Secretary Hoover on the Boulder dam proposition, declaring that in his speech in Los Angeles last month the Republican nominee dealt with nothing but the Boulder dam development, "and all he said was that he would approve the highest dam in the world that the engineers would recommend."

DELAY OPPOSED

As for his own views on the question, the Democratic nominee said that "the floods of the Colorado River must be harnessed to protect not only property, but human life and make the torrents of that stream not the enemy, but the servant of mankind," and added: "There must be no further delay."

Declaring that it is vital that the seven Colorado basin States "come to an honest and reasonable agreement as to their rights in the Colorado River," Gov. Smith emphasized that it also is the duty of Congress "to build levees and such impounding dams as may be necessary to regulate the flow of this river, with incidental protection against the destructive forces of floods."

Calling attention to the appointment under Congressional authority of a board of engineers and geologists to study the project and report by December 1, next, the nominee continued:

"If in the light of that report and the attitude of the several States involved, it shall appear that the speediest and most effective way to bring about this great improvement is to have the government build it, and Congress should so determine, it would be the duty of the President to abide by that decision and hasten the work upon that dam.

PLAN OF ACTION

"If I should be elected President before action has been taken by Congress upon this great question, I immediately will submit to Congress the available data on this subject with the request for immediate action. The situation demands the fair co-operation among the States themselves and between the States and the Federal government."

Gov. Smith received another rousing welcome on his arrival here this morning from Oklahoma City. He found the union station and city streets gaily decorated for the Grand Army of the Republic encampment, just ended, and thousands of persons massed about the terminal and along Seventeenth street, through which he rode in an open automobile to the Brown Palace Hotel.

A National Guard airplane had escorted the campaign special from Colorado Springs, and a battery of artillery cut loose with a Governor's salute as the nominee detrained.

The Democratic standard bearer, who in 1908 visited Denver as an inconspicuous onlooker at his party's national convention, was acclaimed as his automobile moved slowly through the thronged business section. Smiling, he waved acknowledgments with his famous brown derby.

The Governor spent most of the time before going to the auditorium resting in his hotel suite.

Mrs. Smith and her daughter, Mrs. John A. Warner, were guests of honor at a luncheon attended by Democratic women of the State, and later they attended a reception arranged for them.

RUSH FOR SEATS

Except for the press section and 100 chairs on the stage, every seat in the auditorium had been put on a "first come, first served" basis. More than three hours before Smith was scheduled to begin speaking, with a nation-wide radio hook-up provided as for his other two addresses, crowds gathered in adjoining streets. When the doors were opened there was a wild rush for seats, but there weren't enough to go around and a throng was left on the outside listening in over amplifiers.

Those in charge of arrangements estimated there were 10,000 persons jammed into the hall long before the speaking started. On every seat a small American flag had been placed.

On the stage were all Democratic nominees for State offices, including Gov. Adams, who never has met defeat at the polls in his forty years as a member of the Legislature and Governor. Adams, who introduced Gov. Smith, is up for re-election and Democratic leaders are counting on his popularity to aid the national ticket in this State. Near the Colorado Governor sat his nephew, former United States Senator Adams. Mayor Stapleton, who is a Democrat, also had a ringside seat.

OBREGON'S HEIRS FACING FIGHT

Newspaper Says $1,000,000 Insurance Policies May Be Contested

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 22. (AP)—The newspaper La Prensa says the late President-elect Obregon carried about $1,000,000 life insurance in various American companies issued by agencies in Los Angeles.

The newspaper says the companies have indicated they may contest payments because of the nature of Gen. Obregon's death, and consequently, there are likely to be law suits in the Los Angeles courts brought by Obregon's heirs.

No confirmation of the story could be obtained in Mexico City.

HOOVER FIGHTS FOR PROGRESS

Urges Young Republicans to Become Active

ters the nominee received assurances of support from one of his most implacable foes at the Kansas City convention, Senator Goff of West Virginia, who is to stump his own State and speak in New York, and also was given an encouraging report about Oklahoma by Senator Pine.

In addressing the group from Maryland, mainly consisting of young men who were accompanied by Phillip Lee Goldsborough, Republican candidate for Senator, Hoover said that fundamentally the government could be conducted only with a definite party organization. He added that this is the only way through which the people can express their will upon issues and men.

"It goes to the very roots of organization of our form of government and of democracy itself," he said, "for without organization the will of the majority upon great public issues could not find expression. So those who take part in party organization are engaged in a public service, whether they belong to our party or to the opposition.

"I still call myself a young man and I am anxious that the young Republicans become an active part of the Republican party organization. The new generation must begin now to take over the responsibility of the party and carry it on. I am especially anxious to see the young men over the whole country get vigorously into its work and grow on up with it as we go forward. We intend to go forward, as the Republican party has also been a constructive, progressive party."

WORK CONFIDENT

Besides his discussion with the President about New England, Hoover received a long report from Chairman Work of the Republican National Committee, who has just returned from Boston, where he addressed the Massachusetts Republican State convention yesterday.

"Every indication points to increasing likelihood of victory for the Republican ticket here," Dr. Work said. "The confidence of the State leaders is extremely encouraging. The fine ticket they have nominated in the primary has unified support and Massachusetts leaders are out not only to carry the State for the national ticket, but also to defeat Senator Walsh, the strongest Democrat in the State."

Bruce Hurls New Charge of Hypocrisy

WESTMINSTER (Md.) Sept. 22. (AP)—United States Senator Bruce, Democrat, Maryland, in an address before a crowd of 1000 attending a Democratic rally here tonight, charged the Republican Presidential and Vice-Presidential nominees with "hypocrisy" in their stands on the liquor question, and declared that he has authoritative information that Herbert Hoover has "taken numerous drinks" with Clarence Darrow, noted criminal lawyer.

Fall's Ranch Still Unsold

EL PASO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Sale of Albert B. Fall's Three Rivers ranch, which was reported pending some time ago, has never been consummated and, although there is a "deal" in the air, the ranch still belongs to Mr. Fall, according to a statement made by the former Secretary of the Interior here last night.

"There was an offer made for the ranch," Mr. Fall said, "but nothing definite has been done."

Several months ago the ranch was reported sold to the Empire Sheep and Land Company.

SMITH CALLED DESPERATE

G.O.P. Secretary Declares Governor's Charge That Republicans Raised Religious Issue False

NEWARK (N. J.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Franklyn W. Fort, Representative from the Ninth New Jersey District and secretary of the Republican National Committee, issued the following statement here today:

"Gov. Smith's charge at Oklahoma City that the Republican National Committee is aiding and abetting the raising of any religious issue in this campaign is not only utterly false, but is obviously the result of desperation as to the results of the election.

"He can have made his speech and his charges only for the purpose of distracting attention from the other issues of the campaign and in the hope that through self-martyrdom he could win votes.

"He endeavors to create the impression that all those in his own party who object to his Tammany Hall affiliations or to his views on prohibition are raising these arguments as a cloak for religious intolerance. He thus discloses an absolute lack of understanding that the Democrats of the South and West, as well as the Republicans, are overwhelmingly anti-Tammany and for the maintenance of the Eighteenth Amendment.

"The organization of the Republican national campaign contains both Jews and Catholics in key positions of the highest confidence and importance as well as in confidential secretarial and other capacities to the officers of the committee. It is, of course, ridiculous to charge that they are helping to carry on a campaign of religious intolerance.

"It is just as absurd to suggest that Herbert Hoover, whose introduction to the world's stage was in the relief of Catholic Belgium—whose career has evidenced a breadth of human sympathy which knew neither color nor race nor creed—whose denunciation of religious intolerance in his acceptance speech ranks with the finest utterances ever spoken on the subject, would be willing to utilize in his campaign an argument in which his life and words give the lie direct."

Real Issues Come to Fore as Presidential Drive Starts

VITAL STATES OF BORDER STILL REMAIN IN DOUBT

Hoover Makes Noticeable Progress; Smith Creates Good Impression on Region He Has Visited

[This is the second of the political surveys which will appear in this paper every week, up to the election. The surveys present weekly summaries of the significant developments and changing currents of the Presidential campaign, with the bearing these are likely to have on the election. The information in the surveys is furnished by competent correspondents throughout the country. They have been instructed to avoid partisan bias, giving facts only.]

[Copyright, 1928, by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

With Gov. Smith and Senator Curtis touring the West, Senator Robinson touring the South, Herbert Hoover speaking in New Jersey and Senator Borah in Michigan, the heavy artillery of both parties was in action last week and the real issues of the campaign have begun to displace the minor matters so long irritating both sides.

The West and South show more activity than the East. Reports from the South indicate that the high tide of Smith defection has passed, and that Alabama, Virginia, Georgia and Florida are responding to party appeal. They will vote for Smith and for "dry" Congressmen to thwart any proposal Smith, if elected, might make.

North Carolina alone of the ten "solid" South States seems to cling to its Hoover trend. There the anti-Smith Democrats are as confident as ever. Latest information from the border States of Maryland, Kentucky and Tennessee shows that in each victory rests chiefly on effective organization election day. Oklahoma now is regarded as a Hoover State—though Smith's speech there is to be backed up by great efforts to hold it in the Democratic column.

STRATEGY INDICATED

Hoover's New Jersey speech emphasizing the Coolidge prosperity issue shows that the Republicans are relying chiefly on this to carry the large States of the East. It is in those States that Gov. Smith's attitude on prohibition has its greatest strength, and Republican strategy is to bring forward prosperity and the tariff as the issues on which the people of that section should vote. Hence the Hoover speech in New Jersey, which is conceded to be as close as New York.

The feature of the week politically, however, has been Gov. Smith's tour of the West. No Presidential nominee ever had such interest displayed in his travels as the New York Governor commands.

It goes far beyond party lines, and is entirely apart from the campaign issues he discusses. Reports from the places Smith has visited indicate that personally he has made a good impression.

SMITH HELPS CAUSE

It is too early to gauge the reaction to Smith's views on farm relief, or to appraise the vote-getting value of his tumultuous receptions, but at least it can be said that so far, Smith has helped his cause in the West.

Republican chiefs in the States Smith has visited concede that he has done well, but reassert their confidence that he has not affected the electoral vote of any of them. They regard Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma as surely Republican. The reported revolt of German societies in Nebraska is the one disturbing factor to Hoover supporters there.

Missouri, Minnesota and Montana continue to show confused situations. Democrats confidently claim Republican St. Louis. The rural sections of Missouri will turn in a majority for Hoover, so Smith's fate in that State depends on whether "wet" St. Louis will overcome this majority.

Of Eastern States, little Rhode Island holds out most firmly of all for Smith. A factional fight among Republicans there adds to the probability that Smith will have its electoral vote. A trend to Smith also is reported from Manchester and other mill towns in New Hampshire, which voted for Wilson in 1916.

The activity of women is everywhere becoming a more marked feature of the campaign. In Massachusetts, New York and other States they have participated in this week's primaries as never before, and also have registered in greater number.

The primary attendance also forecasts more than the normal increase in voters at Presidential elections. In the cities the increase is claimed by Smith. In the rural counties it is conceded to be favorable to Hoover. It is in the latter, however, that the greatest increase has occurred, according to reports.

REPORTS LISTED

Detailed sectional campaign summaries, Eastern States follow, while reports from other sections will be published tomorrow:

G.O.P. CONFIDENT IN MASSACHUETTS

BOSTON, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Massachusetts Republicans profess to be greatly encouraged by Tuesday's primary. They cast more than 437,000 votes. The Democratic total approximated 205,500. The Republicans say their vote indicates rural voters will ballot in November.

Most of the towns are Republican. The Democrats have a majority in the large cities. Probably two-thirds of the new voters put on the lists before the primary are Democrats. The Republicans hope for a better showing in the coming registration. The State still is rated doubtful.

BATTLE HAS JUST BEGUN AT HARTFORD

HARTFORD (Ct.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Neither Republicans nor Democrats have begun to fight yet. Local tickets still are to be completed. Republicans have nominated for Congress only in the first district, where E. Hart Fenn has been named the fifth time, and the Democrats only in the same district. Edward Mascolo is their nominee. Republicans insist they will hold the State. Privately, they know they are in for a battle. No one can predict how far the popularity of Gov. Smith may carry him.

WATERBURY LIKELY TO GO FOR DEMOCRATS

WATERBURY (Ct.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Democrats in this vicinity feel they have strengthened their position during the week. The aspect in Waterbury presages a Democratic victory so far as the city is concerned and most of the larger cities are expected to give Democratic majorities. However, the country districts and most of the smaller cities are expected to go Republican by larger than normal majorities, probably insuring a small Republican majority for the State.

LARGE VOTE WILL BE CAST IN CONNECTICUT

NEW HAVEN (Ct.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The largest vote ever cast in Connecticut will be registered in November.

A great play is being made by both parties for the 35,000 Italian votes, because of the failure of the Republicans to rename Secretary of State Pallotti. There is considerable sentiment for Smith in larger communities. The smaller towns are rock-ribbed Republican.

NEW YORK STILL EXTREMELY DOUBTFUL

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The primaries this week failed as usual to bring out more than a scattering vote, save in one or two districts. They provided no ammunition for prophets on either side of the fence.

Up-State reports indicate both campaigns are getting up headway. Opinion seems unchanged—that the Republicans will gain a plurality outside of New York City, despite the heavy vote Smith will poll in Buffalo, Albany, Rochester and other up-State cities.

In Greater New York City there is a distinct reaction to the whispering campaign against both candidates, and it appears to be letting down. Smith's prompt branding of the Sanford letter has helped him.

Betting on Wall street remains the same: Even money Smith will carry the State, with odds of 14 to 5 or 14 to 6 Hoover will win nationally.

TREND TO HOOVER IN UPPER NEW YORK

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive) — Republican leaders in Central and Northern New York predict Hoover will run ahead of Coolidge. Their opinions seem supported by facts. Business people and farmers do not like the possibility of a return to the Underwood principle of tariff. A large vote for Hoover by women is indicated; also by persons who have neglected to vote in previous elections.

Democratic leaders expect a large vote in the cities. They do not look for any considerable rural vote.

HOOVER GAINING STRENGTH IN BUFFALO

BUFFALO (N. Y.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Increase in Hoover sentiment is indicated in Buffalo and vicinity. Republican campaigning has been active three weeks, and the Democratic headquarters has just opened. The primaries brought out a 40,000 Republican vote, abnormally heavy, in Erie county. It is attributed by leaders as partly due to interest in the November election. In the Democratic primary voting was light, but affords no fair comparison with the heavy Republican vote because there was only one contest.

Betting shows a trend favorable to Hoover to carry city and State. It is asserted Smith's declaration for the McNary-Haugen form of farm relief will weaken him here. Congressional elections, if the present politics of Erie county districts is maintained, will name two drys and one wet. The present ratio is two wets and one dry.

REPUBLICAN GAIN SEEN IN NEW JERSEY

JERSEY CITY (N. J.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Hoover's tour through counties embracing the bulk of the population of the State has done much to solidify Republicans and shake the confidence of Smith backers. Stressing the prosperity issue and mentioning prohibition in a single line, Hoover's Newark speech represents what even his foes regard as a clever move to hold both wet and dry wings in line for the national ticket, particularly in industrial centers.

PENNSYLVANIA HAS UNUSUAL SITUATION

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—While the claim of Democratic State Chairman Collins that Smith will carry Pennsylvania by 150,000 or by any majority seems a high flight of fancy, it, nevertheless, is discussed by many. Unbiased observers also think Gov. Fisher's prediction Hoover will win by 1,000,000 can stand considerable paring. Republican women leaders in the East were stimulated by the visit to Philadelphia of Mrs. Hoover this week. Another record registration in the cities took place Tuesday, with women apparently well up with the men in numbers, and overwhelming them in some places.

The Smith candidacy made little headway the last week. Some local leaders say privately there are "too many cooks" at Democratic national headquarters. Visions recently by opportunist workers on both sides of a "heavy sugar" campaign are fading, following the edict of Republican State Chairman Martin that the Hoover fight must be economical, and an appeal for dollar contributions by the Democratic campaign committee. No evidence has appeared that the Mellons will open "a barrel" or that Raskob will pour in the stream of gold many expected.

PITTSBURGH TREND REPORTED FOR SMITH

ERIE (Pa.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Pittsburgh, home of the Mellons and heretofore strongly Republican, continues to lean decidedly toward Smith. This trend is spreading to other political strongholds in Alleghany county. The Smith wave alarms the Republican leaders. Pittsburgh is in the midst of a police clean-up which politicians say will aid Smith. The clean-up is hitting "the strip," highly organized, populous district which already has said it's for Smith. Erie, second city in Western Pennsylvania, indicates Smith sentiment is growing. The rural vote of Western Pennsylvania will go Hoover, but must be heavy to overcome Smith in the industrial cities.

MARYLAND HAS PROHIBITION BATTLE

BALTIMORE, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—No significant change in Maryland has occurred this week. Prohibition is the outstanding issue in the Senatorial fight. Bruce, Democrat, champions the wet cause, urging Smith's election on that score alone. Goldsborough, Republican Senatorial candidate, has not made his position clear, except that he indorses Hoover's attitude.

Goldsborough will receive a large dry vote in counties of Maryland. Bruce is expected to do well in Baltimore. Hill, Republican, and former leader of the wet bloc in the House, is running for his former seat, opposed by Representative Palmisano, Democrat, also wet. Hill's position on the ticket with Goldsborough and Hoover is embarrassing him.

Lewis, Democrat, father of parcels post, is trying to regain his seat in Congress, now held by Zihlman. This district is dry. Zihlman is attacked by Lewis as a dry-voting wet.

WEST VIRGINIA LOOKS GOOD TO G. O. P.

WHEELING (W. Va.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Liquor and coal are dominant issues in West Virginia. With a normal Republican majority of 60,000 and an overwhelming dry sentiment Democratic leaders see only an outside chance. The Democratic effort concentrates on Gov. Hatfield. This contest overshadows the Presidential tilt. Neely, always classed as dry, is opposed for accepting Smith's wet stand. Hatfield has been indorsed by the drys.

The Democrats continue to represent Neely as champion of the coal industry, in the lake cargo rate fight. They represent Hoover as part of an administration friendly to Pennsylvania, principal coal competitor of this State.

Simmons Beauty-Rest Mattress $41.50

is expressed by this charming, restful bedroom suite—ideal for the guest room. Modern interiors call for furniture in colors which are harmonious in limited areas, and which give restfulness and light to the room.

The suite illustrated is developed in delicate shaded green enamel with oval panels of ivory framed by a narrow band of gold—and last but not least, a hand painted spray of roses adding that dainty touch so apropos of the boudoir. And, of course the construction is of hardwood, throughout. This suite is distinctive for the comfort and charm of each individual piece, for the exquisite finish of its surfaces, and for its delicate and unusual coloring. Even so, the prices are low—the bed in full or twin size, $27.50; the chest, $27.50; dressing table, $39.75; bench, $9.75; dresser, $42.50; night stand, $9.75; chair, $9.75; and the desk, $29.50. You simply must see this suite, we know you and your friends will adore it.

Convenient terms may be arranged.

G.O.P. IN NORTH HEARS YOUNG

Governor Hails Hoover at Bay City Gathering

Southland Party Broadcast Picked Up for Diners

Row With Democrats Over Radio Marks Day

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Climaxing a day of hustling which included a meeting of the State Central Committee, a bit of a row with the Democrats over radio priority and the formal launching in this golden commonwealth of the campaign for Herbert Hoover, the Northern California leaders of the Republican party met at a dinner here tonight with Gov. Young as speaker and guest-in-chief.

While the northern centurions of the G. O. P. were breaking bread here their fellow-captains were dining in Los Angeles in a similar cause. The two gatherings exchanged their oratory and whoopees by radio, that of San Francisco going out over KPO and that of Los Angeles over KFI. Whereupon hangs a tale of an interparty skirmish wherefrom the Democrats emerged second best.

Gov. Smith, Democratic Presidential nominee, spoke in Denver tonight and his words were distributed nation-wide by an N.B.C. hook-up. Democrats had expected to use KPO and KFI in the hook-up, but the Republicans beat them to it and declined to yield. The Democrats took other stations.

YOUNG'S WARNING

With tactics and technique amicably arranged at the prebanquet meeting of the State Central Committee, the happy but hungry Republicans gathered to hear Gov. Young.

The Governor warned the voters that this campaign has in it many elements similar to that of 1896 and referred to the latter as "a contest so dangerous in its possibilities for harm that a wrong decision might have plunged our country and all its citizens into financial disaster."

Other similarities, said the chief executive, include the pleasing personalities of the candidates, the present Gov. Smith and the late William Jennings Bryan. But, said he, "something more is needed than an attractive and breezy personality, a life-long residence in the largest city of the Union, or the easy assurance of a mysterious power in obtaining that which the Federal Constitution forbids." He added that he thinks the people realize this.

MYTHS EXPLODED

The Governor, after calling attention to prosperity and suggesting that Maine, in its recent election, had pointed the way to those who long for its continuance, had much to say about Mr. Hoover.

"Among the myths which are being exploded as this campaign progresses," said Young, "is the attempt to question the true Americanism of Herbert Hoover. It was even implied that in dealings with Europe his sympathies would be abroad rather than at home. I do not know how many of you have read in the August Review of Reviews an article entitled 'Hoover As Europe Sees Him.' It is contributed by a man who probably judges Europe more accurately than any other living American. Concerning this man, I quote from the Sacramento Bee, which on Monday, August 20, last, said at the beginning of its leading editorial, 'Frank H. Simonds is probably the best-informed American commentator on foreign affairs.'

"With this interesting indorsement in mind, a brief passage from Mr. Simonds's article will be of especial significance. It reads:

EUROPE'S FEARS

"'To be perfectly frank, official Europe does not like Hoover, because it regards him as too completely and unqualifiedly American . . .

"'If Hoover were to be President, Europe believes he would ruthlessly sweep away all pleas of inability to pay debts according to existing agreements; that he is even capable of telling Europe how it could save the money necessary to meet the regular assessments.'"

Gov. Young said that Hoover is not only completely and typcally American, but that he also is thoroughly Californian, which the banqueters cheered. The Governor frankly admitted that agriculture failed to share in the otherwise general prosperity growing out of the war and expressed the belief that whatever solution eventually is found for this state of affairs must be based upon an adequate tariff. He said he is confident that the party and Hoover are equal to a solution of the problem.

The speaker had high praise for Hoover's speech of acceptance as a wise survey of the nation's problems and a sane solution for them. He had praise for Senator Johnson and Representative Swing for their work for Boulder dam, which enterprise he averred is at last on its way to fulfillment. He took delight in the fact that Hoover is for the project.

HOOVER HAILED AT RALLY

Southland Party Leaders Join in Radio Event; Lieut.-Gov. Fitts Among Speakers

Southern California Republicans, and Hoover enthusiasts generally, last night gathered in Los Angeles for the first radio political rally, blanketing the State with messages of California's determination to place a Californian in the White House. It was a Herbert Hoover rally, both here and in San Francisco.

More than 500 Hoover leaders, including those prominent in all factions in past years in Republican party activities, took part in the Los Angeles rally for Southern California in the Alexandria ballroom. On the program were C. C. Teague, Lieut.-Gov. Fitts, former Senator Flint, Mendel B. Silberberg, Representative Swing, Mrs. O. P. Clark, Joseph Scott and George B. Bush.

Scott, California attorney and Republican leader for many years, sounded a warning against the injection of a false religious issue and the awakening of prejudices. Scott was the radio exchange speaker for Los Angeles.

Teague, member of the Hoover advisory committee for Southern California, pointed out that in the continuation of the Republican policy in tariff protection is California's great hope for future development.

FITTS'S WARNING

Lieut.-Gov. Fitts warned against overconfidence and urged individual effort on the part of Californians before November 6, next.

Mrs. Clark, Republican national committeewoman from California, urged a full registration for all of the Southern California counties.

Silberberg, Southern California Hoover campaign director, speaking of the overwhelming Republican registration in Southern California, urged that there should be no question about the Hoover return.

Swing, co-author of the Swing-Johnson bill for the Boulder Dam project, set at rest any whispering criticism of Hoover's stand on the development of the Colorado River.

Joseph Scott, radio exchange speaker and the speaker of the evening at the Alexandria radio rally, devoted his talk largely to a denunciation of any attempt to befog the issues of the present campaign with talk and whisperings of religious intolerance.

DANGER SET FORTH

"This year, apparently, we are being subjected to a campaign where the passions of the voters are being aroused and prejudices awakened in a manner that is fraught with the utmost danger to the very fundamental principles of the government," Scott said.

"Our Presidential candidate has deplored in public and private and expressed his detestation of personalities where unscrupulous men and women in both parties are befogging the political issues with tactics unfair and utterly devoid of the least particle of appreciation for the obligations imposed upon public and private citizens, alike.

"What I am particularly desirous of emphasizing, however, is that the Republican party did not breed these types of religious fanatics."

Representative Swing, acting as toastmaster, took the opportunity to clearly define Hoover's stand on the development of the Colorado River and his attitude toward the Swing-Johnson bill. He said, in part:

"Once and for all I am going to stop the whispering campaign that Hoover is not for the Swing-Johnson bill.

"His vision and understanding of the problem can be strikingly illustrated by a single sentence used by him. 'We must consider that the river belongs to the people and that they have a right to develop their river in such fashion as to give them maximum returns in power storage and control of flood.'"

STRATON PUTS ONUS ON SMITH

Says Candidate Has Forced Religious Issue

Defends Bolters for Leaving Democratic Ranks

Delivers Two Addresses in Oklahoma City

OKLAHOMA CITY (Okla.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Charging that Gov. Smith, Democratic Presidential nominee, "deliberately and with calculated purpose dragged the religious issue into the Presidential campaign," Dr. John Roach Straton, New York minister, tonight defended party "bolters" for leaving the Democratic fold. He also launched a bitter denunciation at Tammany and its activities in political affairs.

Dr. Straton, in his second address here in two days, spoke in the same auditorium in which Gov. Smith Thursday night had addressed an audience which jammed the coliseum to the bursting point.

Branding America as "the most lawless nation upon the face of the earth," the New York divine asked "what earnest and thoughtful man can deny the assertion that in the nominee of the Democratic party we have a supreme illustration, almost an incarnation, of this spirit of lawlessness?"

Turning to the question of religion, Dr. Straton said:

"Gov. Smith, in his address here in Oklahoma City, himself deliberately and with calculated purpose dragged the religious issue into the Presidential campaign."

Dr. Straton said the Protestant leaders of America have not played upon religious prejudices, and he dealt at length with illustrations tending to bear out his contention.

Dr. Straton next took up the question of whether the Presidential nominee is a drinking man, asserting "if Gov. Smith will come out and say that, despite the fact that he does drink personally and with his friends, he has never been partly or wholly intoxicated on any public occasion, the nation will believe that and the talk about those matters will certainly stop. He is the only one who can stop them, and he owes it to himself and to his candidacy to stop them now."

CURTIS ADOPTED BY CROWS

Chief Plenty Coos Bestows Tribal Insignia on Senator at Montana Political Rally

HARDIN (Mont.) Sept. 22. (AP)—The headdress of the Crow Indians was placed on Senator Curtis, son of the Kaws, and the Republican Vice-Presidential nominee, today by Chief Plenty Coos at a colorful adoption ceremony here.

Smiling happily, the Senator accepted the adoption insignia from the venerable Plenty Coos and then addressed his Indian friends gathered in the grand stand at the Hardin Fairgrounds.

"My dear boy," Chief Plenty Coos addressed Curtis, "it is a great pleasure to welcome you among our people. I have watched the progress of your rise and today we are talking to who I am sure is going to be the next Vice-President of the United States."

Robert Yellowtail interpreted the speech of the chief and also the remarks of Senator Curtis, who thanked the Indians and urged them to regard seriously the new cares of citizenship recently given to them. He indorsed the entire State Republican ticket.

After a barbecue luncheon at the grounds, the Senator made a political address to the throng and then set out by motor for Billings, where he spoke tonight.

Bishop Explains Fight on Smith

ALBUQUERQUE (N. M.) Sept. 22. (AP)—"The church is not fighting Gov. Smith because he is a Catholic, nor is it approving Herbert Hoover because he is a Quaker," Bishop Charles Mead, Denver, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, declared here last night. The church is fighting Gov. Smith because he is a wet."

He spoke at the New Mexico conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church here in the First Methodist Church.

RED WAR CHIEF GIVES WARNING

Says Soviet Ready for Possible Conflict

Commissar Makes Speech After Maneuvers

Commends Officers and Soldiers on Work

KIEV (Russia) Sept. 22. (AP)—A warning to the "bourgeois countries" as to soviet Russia's ever-readiness for war was given by M Voroshilov, War Commissar, last night before a large assembly of Red officers, soldiers and Communist civilians after the recently ended big Red army maneuvers in South Russia.

"The technique of our army is not worse, if not better, than that of our neighbors," he said. "We are forced to spend large sums maintaining an army without which we could not exist for a moment. Since there is no security from our being attacked at any moment, it is our immediate task daily to improve our technique as well as the fighting capacity of the Red army."

MAIL BOX SELLS STAMPS

BERLIN, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Berliners will soon not be obliged to go to postoffice to buy stamps. The first mail box containing a slot machine for selling stamps has been placed at a busy city corner, and more will follow.

Democrats Seek Campaign Fund in Radio Plea

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—Col. Herbert E. Lehman, Democratic finance director, tonight in a nation-wide radio appeal for funds disclosed that the party has in cash or pledges $1,500,000 of the $4,000,000 budget needed.

"Undoubtedly many people," he said, "have gained the mistaken impression that the Democratic National Committee is in possession of a large fund with which to carry on the campaign, and that therefore no widespread or popular financial support is necessary."

This impression, he believed had been created by several large gifts from personal friends of Gov. Smith and Senator Robinson. "We need the support of every man and woman in this country who admires or loves Gov. Smith," he said.

Owen Candidacy Denial Disputed

OKLAHOMA CITY, Sept. 22. (AP) Entering into the dispute between Gov. Smith and former Senator Owen of Oklahoma, W. C. Geers of Oklahoma City today charged that Senator Owen not only was a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1924, but deleted a dry plank from his platform to make it more acceptable to the New York and other eastern delegations.

Geers, now a publicity director in State Democratic headquarters here, said he was Senator Owen's campaign manager. The statements were made in a letter addressed to Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, and made public here

THRILLS FOR RACE FANS

Three Pacers Tangle on Pomona Track

Jockey Thrown from Mount, After Winning Handicap

Clown on Stilts Takes Fall Not on Program

POMONA, Sept. 22.—Thrills were the order of the day at the Los Angeles County Fair Friday, grandstand patrons at the matinee horse races in the afternoon witnessing a bad smash-up between three drivers in the 2:25 pace harness race, when William Marshall, P. H. Lillie and B. A. Munn driving Louise K., June Hart and Bob M., respectively, tangled on the first turn after receiving the word to go and were thrown to the track with their rigs smashed to bits. Fortunately none of them was seriously hurt although B. A. Munn was the only driver able to enter his horse Bob M., in the final two heats, placing sixth in the race despite his injuries. W. L. Potter, owner of Alberta Wood, substituting for his driver, G. H. Parker, in the third heat of the third race, was indefinitely suspended from further race driving for using rough tactics, while Jockey Carr, riding Sway in the Governor's Handicap of six and one-half furlongs and Jockey Adams up on Ike Davis was thrown on the home stretch in the four and one-half furlongs running race and badly bruised.

Gov. Young did the honors in the Governor's Handicap when he presented the winner of the stake, Jockey Thompson, riding Bobby Allen, with a huge floral horseshoe in token of victory in the feature race of the day.

CLOWN GETS HAND

Yesterday was an off-day all around, even the clown on stilts, taking a hard fall in his haste to get off the race track to avoid being run down by drivers in a harness race getting onto the track before he was through with his balloon-blowing stunt. He sorrowfully remarked, after getting a good razzing from the grand stand, "I guess I will have to pull that again Saturday to get a laugh."

The attendance reached the total of 21,700 paid admissions, the grounds being crowded throughout the day and evening, while the grand stands were packed to capacity for both the horse races and brilliant night horse show.

The night horse show proved to of another superexhibition of superhorseflesh, interest centering on the magnificent $1500 six-in-hand harness class, six teams competing and trying to outdo one another in a marvelous display of driving. Judging was withheld in this class, as each must show three nights before the decision of the judges is announced, last night being the second showing.

Miss Helen E. Davis, university coed from Vacaville, drove her trotter, Palos Cres, three heats in the second race today. She has won every start in the western circuit this year and five male drivers are out to get her scalp. Miss Davis, who is only 21 years of age, is a new driver, and classed among the greenhorns, but veteran drivers have been forced to shout in unison: "She ain't so dumb."

PREPARE FOR SUNDAY

Today being Los Angeles County Day, thousands of Los Angeles residents were taking advantage of the half-holiday, and by noon were flocking through the main gates in droves, fair officials predicting that all Saturday attendance records would be shattered. The grand stand was completely filled by 12:45, three-quarters of an hour before the horse races, while the exhibit tents were a swarming mass of humanity.

Large quantities of fresh fruits and vegetables and other materials were being brought in late this afternoon and evening to replace those which have become less attractive through the previous days of the exposition. All night tonight men will be at work brightening up the grounds and the interiors so that the crowds that come tomorrow will see practically a new fair as far as general appearances go. Every exhibit will be in its place as no move will be made to release anything until the gates are closed at midnight. Tomorrow the entrances will be opened at 9 a.m. as usual. In addition to other special attractions there will be band concerts by massed bands from all parts of the Southland. Interspersing the special events in front of the grand stand there will be practically a whole circus of acrobatic stunts, aerial acts and other features.

Bank Bandit Traveled in Rented Auto

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 22.—That at least one of the bandits who participated in the robbery of the Adams-avenue branch of the Bank of Italy here last Wednesday possessed a keen sense of humor was indicated this morning when a representative of Lail's Auto Livery, a Los Angeles concern, visited local police headquarters.

The touring car used in the hold-up was rented last Tuesday night about 8:30 o'clock by a man giving the name of A. Moore, who said he was a doctor and gave the Bank of Italy as a character reference, the representative told Captain of Detectives Paul Hayes. He said he wanted the car for two days and thought he would drive it about eighty-five miles.

San Diego is more than eighty-five miles from Los Angeles, but perhaps the humorous yegg was misinformed in this regard, police declared.

ACCUSED SHERIFF ON TRIAL

El Centro Official Makes Attempt to Undermine Grand Jury Probe

EL CENTRO, Sept. 22.—Defense counsel for Charles L. Gillett, Imperial county Sheriff, who is now on trial for asserted theft and malfeasance, scored a victory yesterday when C. W. McArthur, one of the grand jurymen who voted the indictments against the Sheriff, contradicted one of the original accusations. Among other charges, Gillett was accused of the theft of $3.95 from McArthur. The latter on the witness stand denied that he ever had been victimized by the Sheriff. and declared that he did not know such an accusation was in the indictments when he signed them.

Attorneys for the accused officer are making a determined fight to undermine the entire grand jury investigation, on which the indictments were based, and have the complaints dismissed without continuing the trial. Testimony was introduced yesterday to show that 152 of the 172 counts in the malfeasance accusation against Gillett refer to a previous term of office and are therefore outlawed. After a brief session this morning Gillett's preliminary hearing was continued until next week.

PNEUMONIA FATAL TO PIONEER WOMAN

VENTURA, Sept. 22. — Melissa Ellen Dobbs, 80 years of age, mother of Victor C. Miller, local attorney, died yesterday afternoon at the Big Sisters' Hospital, just a few days after she contracted pneumonia.

Mrs. Dobbs, who crossed the plains with an ox team in 1854, to Oregon, came to Ventura fourteen months ago from Washougal, Wash., to make her home with her son.

Mrs. Dobbs is survived by two other sons, Samuel C. Miller, Oakland engineer, and Roy H. Dobbs, Camas, Wash., banker; one daughter, Mrs. Catherine Davis, Reedley, Cal.; five grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

POOBAH GETS NEW JOB

UPLAND, Sept. 22. — In addition to bearing the titles of city engineer, water superintendent, plumbing inspector and building inspector, R. G. Manley today has a new title. When no one else could be found to qualify, City Council voted him the job, mostly title, of city health inspector.

ALTADENA, Sept. 22.—New light upon passages in the last books in the Bible, Revelations, may be shed by beams from a giant candlestick, according to J. E. Wells of 2764 North Lake avenue, who built the candlestick according to minute specifications said to have been revealed to him in a dream, the interpretation of which has baffled local religious authorities.

Wells, a 70-year-old carpenter, states that at 3 p.m. on July 12, he believes that he was allowed to die and enter the next world for a few moments. He felt himself "slipping away," he said, and after "passing through a great void," he heard a voice which directed him to build a seven-branched candlestick as high as an average-sized man. He was commanded to complete the candlestock on the seventh day of the this month "in order that humanity may have a true symbol of its past and future." Before he awakened, he said he saw a vision of the completed candlestick. It was only by using all the will power at his command that he was able to struggle back to "life and consciousness."

NUMBER INTROGUNG

In accordance with the orders given by "the voice," he set to work to complete the symbol in the space of 365 hours. He believes that some unearthly power assisted him and gave him strength for the work.

The numerical result of his completed candlestick is astounding, according to religious leaders in this community. There are 365 separate pieces in the standard, which, Wells says "just happened."

"I don't want any publicity or financial gain, but if anyone can help me to decipher the symbolism of my candlestick, I could die happy," the carpenter said today.

Wells says that he has never read the Book of Revelation, but a Bible student states that a candlestick of similar origin is suggested in Revelations.

SIGNIFICANCE TOLD

It is believed that the seven-branch candlestick is an article of furniture in the Tabernacle of the Wilderness. The twelve keys in a circle probably represent the signs of the Zodaic, twelve sons of Jacob, twelve months in the year and the twelve Apostles and each part of the device is similarly related to biblical teachings. Meetings in the tabernacle were held on the night of the new moon, and the crescent moon on the candlestick, is believed to be of great significance, according to Wells. He declared today that due to the fact that a powerful force directed his hand during the construction of the strange device, he could never reproduce it.

"All I can say is that something made me do it—I couldn't have stopped—I don't know what I shall do with it—unless I am taken under the shadow of death again."

MAY STOP SCHOOL BUSSES

State Law Said to Prohibit Cities from Paying Transportation for Pupils

GLENDALE, Sept. 22.—Action to determine the validity of the State law that prohibits the payment of transportation for school pupils living within the limits of an incorporated city will be initiated Monday when attorneys for the Pacific Electric Railroad will file a writ of mandate with the State Supreme Court, according to a statement today by Attorney Albert D. Pearce, a member of the Glendale Union High School board of trustees.

The legal action was instigated by the Pasadena school authorities and the Glendale board has associated itself with the case, following a conference yesterday with the Board of County Supervisors. The city that is most affected by the present law in the Glendale district is Tujunga, and many of the pupils are staying away from school because of the provision that forbids the payment of their transportation by the high-school district and that throws the expense on the students and their families.

The delegation from Glendale and Tujunga was advised by the county officials that no funds for transportation are available and that the payment would not be legal in any case. The action of the Pacific Electric attorneys will be based on agreement made with the Pasadena High School board for the transportation for pupils to and from the school contrary to the new statute, Pearce stated.

HUNDREDS SEEK TO BE SCIENTISTS

Caltech Completes Large Building Program

School Opens New Term Monday

Aeronautical Laboratory to Aid Aviation

PASADENA, Sept. 22.—More than six hundred embryonic scientists who are expected to register for the fall semester of the California Institute of Technology, which opens Monday, will find that an extensive building program has been completed on the campus during the vacation months.

The new Daniel Guggenheim Aeronautical Laboratory, containing equipment for all phases of aeronautical research work, will be ready for occupancy within a few weeks. The building was made possible by a $300,000 gift from the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for Aeronautical Research. It is five stories in height and the floors are 160 feet long and fifty-five feet in width.

The largest piece of apparatus is the Gottingen wind tunnel which provides ample space for testing wind resistance on new types of planes. A 500-horsepower, direct-current motor drives a fifteen-foot propeller, making possible a wind velocity of more than 100 miles an hour in the working section. This tunnel, said to be one of the largest in the world, is practically completed.

The Dabney Hall of Humanities, a gift of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Dabney, will be occupied next week. It provides headquarters for various undergraduate activities, lecture rooms, a "treasure" room for the display of works of art, and lounging rooms.

On the western side of the campus the William G. Kerckhoff Laboratory of Biology is in process of construction.

The freshman and sophomore students are now in training for the annual rope-tying and other contests between the two classes which will feature the first week of the new school year.

Grocers Hold Annual Confab at Riverside

RIVERSIDE, Sept. 22. — With practically every California city from Eureka to San Diego represented, the twenty-ninth annual convention of the State Grocers' Association will open its sessions here Monday morning. The convention will close late Wednesday.

After Mayor Dighton has welcomed the delegates, who will convene at the Mission Inn, a response will be delivered by President William D. Hadeler of San Francisco.

Then the grocers will plunge into a three-days' program which will include a variety of topics, covering many problems of the grocery business. The evenings will be devoted to sightseeing and special entertainment at the Southern California Fair.

The San Francisco and Northern California delegation will arrive at Los Angeles Harbor tomorrow by steamship. They will be met there by Los Angeles merchants and escorted to the county line where a caravan of Riverside county grocers will welcome them.

VETERAN OF WEST REACHES END OF TRAIL

PALMS, Sept. 22. — Another veteran of the covered wagon died this morning, when the end came to Henry Rose at his home, 3850 Motor avenue. Mr. Rose, who was 84 years of age, came to California in 1852 as a child with his parents, who had set out in the traditional conveyance drawn by the traditional ox team from Marion county, Missouri.

The Rose family settled first at Placerville, but when Henry Rose reached manhood he moved on to Palms where he homesteaded a large acreage. He became and has long been known, as one of the most successful ranchers of this section.

Mr. Rose is survived by five daughters, Mrs. Jessie Bell Sage, Mrs. Bessie L. Hinderer, Mrs. Elma P. Lewis, Mrs. Nellie A. Miller and Mrs. Rose Moreland, all of Los Angeles.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Tuesday, with interment in the family crypt at Inglewood Park Cemetery.

INGLEWOOD PLANS TO SHOW DAHLIAS

INGLEWOOD, Sept. 22. — The first annual Inglewood dahlia show will be given at the Woman's Club here, October 4 and 5, next, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Burch, amateur growers of dahlias here, whose blooms have won prizes at various shows in Southern California. The show is open to both amateurs and professionals, there being fifty entry specifications. Several silver cups are offered in addition to ribbons and other awards.

Judges will be Raymond C. Hayes, president of the Dahlia Society of Southern California; Frank Miller, manager of the dahlia show at the Biltmore, and Paul Doring, a dahlia specialist.

SOLEMN NOVENA BEGUN

ALHAMBRA, Sept. 22.—Annual solemn novena in honor of the Little Flower began today in the Church of the Carmelite Fathers here, and concludes on October 1, next, the feast day of the Little Flower. Devotions will be held during the week at 8 p.m., and on Sunday at 4 p.m. There will be rosary, sermon and benediction followed by special novena prayers and veneration of the relic of Saint Therese.

MEN BARE LEGS AT TUJUNGA

If Fad Goes Over, Town to Seek to Add to Fame as Style Center

TUJUNGA, Sept. 22. — A new sort of bare-leg epidemic has hit these parts and is likely to "go over" if sufficient adherents can be found.

As if in sarcatic protest against the present feminine display of rounded calves, certain men here have been seen gallivanting around in knee pants with their socks rolled down over their shoe tops. In their hope to create a new vogue they have the appearance of a cross between a Scotch gillie minus his bagpipes and a high-school boy in his gym togs.

If they "get away" with it, and the fad spreads, Tujunga can add to its fame by posing as one of the style centers of the country.

NO TRACE FOUND OF AGED MAN

Three Hundred Searchers Comb Mountains as Sons Post Reward Offer

SANTA ANA, Sept. 22.—Missing since last Sunday, when he wandered away from a hunting camp in the Santa Rosa Mountains, sixty miles southeast of Hemet, R. Felt, 79 years of age of this city, today was the object of a search by 300 men in that district, according to reports received here today. A reward of $100 has been offered for discovery of the missing man, it was stated at the garage of Felt & Dietrick here. Grady Felt of that firm, is a son and is now leading the search for his father.

The aged man, who made his home with his son here, was taken on the hunting trip with his sons, Lynn Felt of El Modena, Grady Felt and a Los Angeles man, leaving here the 13th inst. Camp was pitched in the mountains for the opening of the deer season last Sunday. On that day the party left, leaving the elderly man to watch camp. When the hunters returned, they found a note, stating that he had taken a shotgun and walked southeast from camp. No trace of him has been found since that time.

Lynn Felt rode horseback for two days to report at Hemet, where a searching party was organized. The missing man is said to be lamed in one leg and of poor vision, for which reasons it is feared that he may have fallen over a cliff.

New Agitation for Annexation

ALHAMBRA, Sept. 22.—Efforts to call an election to vote on annexation to Los Angeles, as proposed by Al Lawson, head of the San Gabriel Valley Progressive League, will be met by strong opposition, it was revealed today, following the action of the Los Angeles City Council yesterday in approving the circulation of an annexation petition here.

Many of the business men and civic leaders were outspoken in their disapproval of such a movement at this time, calling attention to the fact that when this city voted on annexation in April, 1926, it was defeated by a vote of about 3 to 1. There is less sentiment here now for annexation than at the time of the other campaign, it is said.

A petition asking for an annexation election must have more than 3000 signatures, according to the present registration figures. In 1926 there were 2862 votes for annexation.

Al Lawson, who heads the present annexation movement, is a former clerk in the city building department. He was discharged last June for undue activity in the city election campaign.

SUNDAY MAIL SERVICE GRANTED TO VAN NUYS

VAN NUYS, Sept. 22.—For the first time since the townsite was organized, Van Nuys is to have a movement of mail on Sundays. Postmaster E. D. Gibson has been notified that the additional service will start tomorrow. The mail will leave Los Angeles at 2:36 p.m. and will arrive here at 3:32 p.m. The outgoing Sunday mail will leave here at 3:45 p.m. and arrive in the Los Angeles postoffice an hour later. Heretofore persons wishing to mail letters on Sunday have given them to persons riding into Los Angeles on street cars or in automobiles, for mailing in Los Angeles.

COUNCIL TO DECIDE ON VALLEY SEWER LINE

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 22.—Members of civic organizations and business men of San Fernando Valley will appear before the Los Angeles City Council Monday morning, at which time the Health and Sanitation Committee of the Council will confer with the Council as a whole on the matter of building the proposed sewer line into the valley. Engineers have made a survey of the line and have made report on physical details and costs. In its conference with the Council it is understood the committee will base its recommendations on the survey and report in hand.

CHURCH FAVORS FIGHT ON VICE

Resolution Adopted by Methodists

Direct Guns on Boxing Law of California

Demands Enforcement of Prohibition

SANTA ANA, Sept. 22.—The seventy-eighth annual Pacific conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church today adopted unanimously the second sensational resolution presented by Rev. R. P. (Bob) Shuler, Los Angeles, when delegates approved active effort of the State Church Federation toward the repeal of the "iniquitous" prize-fighting law and pledged themselves to support the repeal by vote in the November election.

The resolution was drafted by the committee on temperance and social service of which Rev. Shuler is chairman.

Summarizing the resolution, it deplored lax law enforcement by corrupt and inefficient officers commercializing vice; it declared the man who purchases liquor from a bootlegger and drinks it, be he a man of the street or a Governor of a great State, to be lawless and a more menacing criminal than the bootlegger; it branded as a falsehood the propaganda of the society opposed to nation-wide prohibition that the Eighteenth Amendment has produced a wholesale drink habit among the youth; it demands honest efforts of the Federal government officials in enforcement of the prohibition law.

Rev. Howard Stickland, Ventura, reported the recommendation of the trial committee that leniency be shown Rev. J. F. Hegpeth, Visalia, on charges of misappropriation of funds on account of mental and physical condition of the defendant. The conference will act on the report at 2:30 o'clock today.

The conference will close Sunday night with the reappointment of the conference pastors.

To Take Land for Boulevard

ARCADIA, Sept. 22.—Preliminary procedure in the opening of Colorado Boulevard, Pasadena, to connect with Orange avenue in Monrovia and Arcadia, was taken at a meeting of the Greater Colorado Boulevard Association last night when jurisdiction for condemnation of property in the Baldwin estate was recommended to Pasadena by unanimous vote. The meeting was called by the Orange-avenue and Huntington Drive associations of this city, who requested that Pasadena accept jurisdiction and proceed with the project as outlined by Mayor Multer.

According to Multer's outline, the highway will begin at Allen avenue, Pasadena, and will terminate at Las Tunas avenue, east of Duarte, including a connection with Huntington Drive, in this city. It was decided to extend the road in as straight a line as possible with the present Colorado street in Pasadena, through the Baldwin property, to connect with Orange avenue here and on to Monrovia.

H. P. C. Besse, president of the association, presided over the meeting, at which Arcadia was represented by the entire City Council.

Mayor Chooses City Planners

COVINA, Sept. 22.—In accordance with a resolution passed by the City Council, Mayor Maxfield has completed the appointment of a City Planning Commission. Activities of the commission will begin Wednesday evening when members with Mayor Maxfield will hold their first session at the City Hall at 7:30 p.m. On October 13, the commission will entertain the city planning commissions of Southern California at the Masonic Temple here. The meeting will be prefaced with luncheon according to tentative plans.

Members of the new commission and the organizations represented are: I. Worth Everett, Lions; Tom Finch, Merchants; Dr. W. A. Griffith, professions; Roy C. Hanna, Chamber of Commerce; William Haynes, industries; Edward A. Hubbard, builders and contractors; Vern Johnson, Aero Club; John Koch, firemen; J. P. Overholtzer, churches; C. W. Potter, churches; L. L. Ratekin, growers and packers; I. G. Reynolds, transportation; W. A. Viney, Rotary; Frank H. Wright, public service; Charles Zug, American Legion.

IN THRILLING RACE AT RIVERSIDE FAIR

Mrs. Cecelia G. Cravens

As she will appear in exciting Roman chariot race.

Riverside Fair Will be Double Size Last Year

RIVERSIDE, Sept. 22.—The sixteenth annual Southern California Fair will be nearly twice the size of last year's celebration when it opens its doors on the 25th inst., according to figures and programs announced today by officials here.

The fair will last for six days. Tuesday, the opening day, will be crammed with festivities of a ceremonial character, the actual judging of live stock and exhibits not starting until Wednesday. The extensive program of horse racing, including pacing, trotting and running races, will also begin on Wednesday.

More than $30,000 in prizes is offered by the fair management this year, the bulk of which is to be awarded to winners in the various live stock and agricultural competitions.

Apart from the horse races, equine exhibitions will include jumping, trick riding, solo stunts by performing horses of international repute, and displays of draught and saddle animals of thoroughbred blood. Among these, C. A. Bowers's string of Shires, Jacks, Percherons, Belgians and Clydesdales will vie for honors with James A. McCleave's stable of blooded mounts.

CANNERY BUSY WITH BIG TOMATO CROP

FULLERTON, Sept. 22. — Approximately 150,000 cans of tomatoes have been canned at the Cutler Lobingier Cannery on South Highland avenue since the opening of the season about two weeks ago, it was announced today by H. L. Dalby, manager. The season is expected to be exceptionally successful this year, as the quality of the tomatoes is very good and prices are better than last year.

Although a full crew is not working, it is expected that about October 15, next, will find the cannery at the height of the season. Fifty women and thirty men are now employed. Tomatoes from the Pomona and Ontario districts will not be ripe for about two weeks. Much acreage has been contracted in that district for the local cannery. Tomatoes that are being canned now are from local fields.

BODY SENT TO DETROIT

OWENSMOUTH, Sept. 22.—The body of Mrs. Adrien H. Tanquay, 26 years of age, who died of septic poisoning following injuries suffered in an automobile accident last July, has been setn to Detroit for burial. She and her husband, who survives, had resided in this section several years.

NEW ESCROW OFFICER

TUJUNGA, Sept. 22.—Lauren C. Shaffer is escrow officer at the Tujunga Valley Bank, succeeding Mrs. Mary F. Scranton, who resigned. Scranton comes from Culver City, where he was with the Bank of Italy. He has bought stock in the local bank.

CAFE MAY REBUILD

ENCINO, Sept. 22.—In all likelivard cafes, will be rebuilt, it is most popular of the Ventura Boulevard cafes will be rebuilt, it is stated. The resort was virtually destroyed by fire at a loss of $11,000, during the early hours of the morning. Firemen were not able to determine the cause of the blaze.

TEN JOIN FEDERATION

Half of Cities Proposed for Colorado River Water District Come Into Organization

SANTA ANA, Sept. 22.—Out of twenty municipalities, proposed for membership in the Colorado River Metropolitan Water District, ten have signified their intention to join the organization, four have definitely rejected the proposal, and six are still to be heard from, it was revealed here today in a report read by James H. Howard, Los Angeles attorney, at the annual meeting of the Colorado River Aqueduct Association.

Following are the municipalities which favor the project and will submit the matter to the voters at the November elections: Santa Ana, Orange, Anaheim, Colton, Los Angeles, Beverly Hills, Glendale, Pasadena, San Marino and Santa Monica. Opposition to the proposed district has been registered by Fullerton, Ontario, Arcadia and Covina. Decisions for or against the proposal are to come from Burbank, Glendora, Whittier, San Bernardino, Redlands and Riverside.

The Supreme Court decision, in effect, Howard explained, is that the metropolitan district measure is a general law, and that no discrimination is involved, and that it does not take away from a municipality the right to conduct its own affairs and to regulate the levy of taxes within the meaning of the State Constitution.

President Hiram W. Wadsworth, Pasadena, president; Grant Holcomb, San Bernardino, vice-president, and Col. S. H. Finley, Santa Ana, secretary, were re-elected.

Méjico Extiende sus Líneas Aéreas

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Septiembre 22.—Se ha otorgado una concesión para establecer servicio aéreo postal, de express, y de viajeros, entre Veracruz y Mérida, la capital de Yucatán, a la Compañía Mejicana de Aviación, que ya efectúa un servicio análogo entre la ciudad de Méjico y las de Tuxpan y Tampico. El nuevo servicio empezará a funcionar el primero de Octubre, según noticias.

Aunque no se han publicado horarios, sábese que los aviones de la compañía referida harán el recorrido de 850 millas entre Méjico y Mérida en unas seis horas. Irán por el litoral para evitar el aventurarse muy mar adentro entre Veracruz y la capital de Yucatán.

Se están explanando aeródromos en ambas estaciones terminales, y se harán escalas en las poblaciones intermedias de Minatitlán, Laguna del Carmen y Campeche. Dícese que se extenderá el servicio a varios otros lugares que han carecido de buenas comunicaciones directas.

Mediante este servicio, el Estado de Yucatán, tan aislado geográficamente, será puesto por primera vez en contacto íntimo con el resto del país. Hasta ahora no ha tenido otro medio de comunicación que el mar, y ello explica por qué la gente de Yucatán se ha sentido ligada, más de cerca que con la capital de su patria, con las ciudades de Nueva York, la Habana y París.

Se Considera ya Segura la Línea del Sudpacífico Mejicano

NOGALES (Arizona) Septiembre 22.—Dice el gerente general Small, del Sudpacífico Mejicano, que ya se ha establecido la paz a lo largo de esa vía, hasta Guadalajara, y que no parece haber ya necesidad de las escoltas armadas con que el gobierno mejicano ha venido protegiendo los trenes.

Confíase en que toda la línea quede expedita y despejada para abrirse al servicio normal el primero de Diciembre. Para esa época se habrán terminado las reparaciones al puente sobre el río del Fuerte, que fué arrebatado por las aguas hace algunos meses, y al largo túnel incendiado cerca de Guadalajara.

En la seguridad de tener transportes, los cultivadores de hortalizas de la costa occidental están plantando mucho terreno y ven en perspectiva grandes y productivas cosechas.

Méjico Dicta Cuerdas Disposiciones contra la Lepra

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Septiembre 22.—La Dirección de Sanidad Pública (Consejo Superior de Salubridad) está llevando adelante una enérgica campaña contra la lepra. Según dicha oficina técnica, hay en la República 1450 casos conocidos de tal enfermedad. El Consejo está obrando con gran actividad en este asunto, debido a que se le informó de que hay muchos lazarinos trabajando en carnicerías y panaderías, así como en fábricas de artículos de alimentación.

El primer paso dado por el Consejo de Salubridad es tomar providencias para establecer colonias de leprosos o lazarinos en Méjico. Ha pedido desde luego la cooperación del público, que puede ayudarle procurando sean segregadas todas las personas sospechosas de mal de Lázaro. Para ello no tienen los particulares sino dar inmediato aviso de sus sospechas al Consejo de Salubridad.

Se Prohibe Usar el Nombre de la Ciudad para Fines Comerciales

Ayer firmó el alcalde Cryer una ordenanza municipal que prohibe a los solicitantes de anuncios o de parroquia para empresas particulares que hagan uso, para prestigiar el negocio que representan, de los nombres de funcionarios o dependencias municipales. La Junta de Obras Públicas y la Dirección de Sanidad han recibido quejas de hombres de negocios de que los solicitantes andan usando los nombres de esas dependencias técnicas para fomentar sus negocios o vender sus anuncios.

La referida ordenanza es terminante en su prohibición, y no deja pretexto ninguno por el que puedan los funcionarios municipales prestar sus nombres o el de la ciudad en beneficio de negocios particulares.

Marco Ha Ganado un Recurso Judicial

Alberto Marco, supuesto señor del vicio en Los Angeles, ha ganado ayer una victoria temporal en la lucha que viene sosteniendo para no ser llevado a la prisión de San Quintín mientras no se falle la apelación que ha interpuesto contra la sentencia dictada en su contra hace unos días, por el delito de asalto con arma mortífera.

A solicitud de Thomas P. White, defensor de Marco, el Tribunal de Apelación ha suspendido toda clase de diligencias en este asunto hasta el próximo 8 de Octubre, fecha en la cual los magistrados de apelación celebrarán una audiencia para conocer del recurso interpuesto por Marco, en el que éste pide se suspenda la ejecutoria de su sentencia mientras no se falle la apelación.

No es, pues, completa la victoria de Marco; pero es suficiente para impedir su traslado inmediato a la penitenciaría, y abre el camino a un probable fallo favorable en lo relativo a su petición de permanecer en el cárcel del condado mientras se resuelve lo de su alzada.

Se recordará, sin duda, que este conocido personaje fué sentenciado a reclusión, que puede variar de dos a veinte años, en la prisión del Estado, por el delito de felonía, consistente en haber disparado con arma de fuego sobre Harry Judson y Dominick Conterno, en Junio próximo pásado, en el Ship Café de Venice. El juez superior Doran, en cuya sala se vió la causa, concedió un plazo de diez días para la ejecución de esa sentencia, plazo que venció ayer.

MARINES LEAVE TO FIGHT FIRES

danger, reports indicate, as the conflagration was south of there.

Four new fires broke out shortly after noon today, word from Gordon's office indicated. One is burning on the Santa Ysabel Indian Reserve, another in the Rainbow between Fallbrook and Temecula, one at Valley Center, nine miles northeast of Escondido and the fourth two miles northeast of Santa Ysabel. Forces of men were dispatched to each.

AIRPLANE IN SURVEY

Fire surrounding the Deroni ranch owned by Garfield Jones resulted in a call on the Maddux Air Lines at Los Angeles for a plane to make a survey of the burning area. Jack Maddux, accompanied by Lieut. D. W. Tomlinson, leader of the navy's Sea Hawks in the recent National Air Races, responded. After circling over the 5000 acres that comprise the ranch, Tomlinson, who was piloting, lander on a cleared plot near the ranch house. The fire was covering a fifty-mile area, according to the survey. At 3 o'clock the wind, which had been blowing from the south, and menacing the ranch house and outbuildings, changed. By 4 o'clock the place was believed to be out of danger.

Three men were burned seriously yesterday taking supplies to the fire fighters near Magalia.

THREE FIRES BURNING IN TULARE COUNTY FOOTHILLS

PORTERVILLE, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Three grass and brush fires are burning in the Tulare county foothills and boundary of Sequoia National Forest. A fourth, which broke out along the border of Sequoia National Forest three miles below the California Hot Springs control yesterday morning was surrounded last night after burning 300 acres.

Men were being sent in this morning to a fire in the Camp Nelson area, which broke out three miles below there last night. The last report fire was fighting its way to timber three miles. About fifty men are on the line.

A crew of men last night surrounded a fire which broke out Thursday in the Kings River section. It is now being patrolled by a crew of twenty-five men.

Men working in the Badger foothill section have controlled a grass fire which broke out Thursday noon, according to report. About 1900 acres were burned over.

FOG BRINGS HEAT RELIEF TO BAY CITY

Torrid Weather Keeps Up in Many Inland Points of Northern California

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Heavy early morning fogs coupled with an onshore breeze brought the thermometer tumbling 35 deg., today to a maximum of 64 from yesterday's high of 95, bringing great relief to the Bay District.

Throughout the rest of Northern California, however, excessive heat continued to hold sway. At Red Bluff the mercury receded only 4 deg. to 100; at Sacramento there was a drop of 2 deg. to 100, and at Fresno, the fluid shot up to a maximum of 104 deg., 4 hotter than yesterday.

San Jose was cooler by 20 deg. than it was yesterday, today's highest being 80 deg.

By tomorrow the Weather Bureau expects the interior points will get relief, as the north and east winds of the last several days, one bringing the heat of the desert westward and the other bringing the heat of forest fires southward, will have been replaced by predominant west winds.

DRIVER DIES IN CHICAGO TAXI CLASH

Battle Over Stands by Rivals Begins With Fists and Ends With Pistols

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Taxicab warfare which police say has been brewing for several days broke out early today at a cab stand at Cottage Grove avenue and Sixty-eighth street, near the Granada Cafe.

Eugene Thivierge, 35 years of age, a driver for the Checker Cab Company, was shot dead.

Bernard Reichter, a Yellow Cab driver, was arrested shortly afterward. His face and body bore the marks of recent battle, police said. He told officers he had seen the fight but had no part in the gun play.

Word reached Checker Cab Company headquarters last night that some of their drivers had been threatened when they attempted to park their cabs at a stand near the cafe. Several drivers, armed with automobile jacks, went to the scene, police were told. The dispute continued until there was a general fight, terminating only when Thivierge had been shot down.

Police Lieutenant Dubach said the first indication of trouble between the cab drivers came a week ago when several drivers of the Checker company were arrested after a pistol fight with police who had sought to question them. Three drivers were arrested and charges of assault with intent to kill were placed against them.

Utilities Inquiry Here in October

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—Publicity activities of power utilities in Pacific Coast States will receive the attention of the investigation being conducted by the Federal Trade Commission during the week of October 7.

Although no definite dates or list of witnesses have been made public, the commission announced today that California, Oregon, Washington and perhaps other Western States will be covered soon after the inquiry into utilities affairs in the South is completed.

The southern phase of the investigation, which will cover Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and North Carolina, begins next Tuesday.

[illegible] debut of the University [illegible] Bruins as a Coast [illegible] football team, which took place yesterday at Moore Field, where the U.C.L.A. squad tackled the meek-looking Santa Barbara State Teachers' College eleven, was far from an auspicious occasion for the Vermont-avenue boys despite the fact that the locals won by a 19-to-0 margin. For the first seven [illegible] of the opening period the [illegible] looked like a "big-[illegible]," after that they seemed [illegible] fair game for they floundered over the field without [illegible] particular damage to [illegible] of their own reputation. CIRCUIT CLOUT SETTLES CLASH

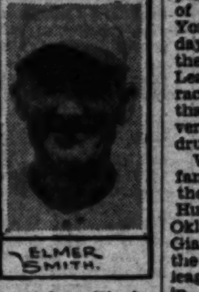
Star Outfielder Breaks Up Mound Duel in Tenth

Smith Raps Two Homers and Single in Tight Tilt

Sheik Slugger Bats in All Three of Local Runs

BY BOB RAY

Elmer Smith and his bludgeon blasted out a 3-to-2 triumph for Hollywood in a ten-inning thriller at Wrigley Field yesterday. All Smith did was to drive in all three of the Stars' scores with two home runs and a single, his final circuit clout coming with two out in the tenth inning to break up a perfectly good mound duel between McEvoy and Hulvey, who had taken over the hurling assignment from Rhodes in the eighth inning.



ELMER SMITH.

Smith's hard hitting not only brought the Stars out of the doldrums but pulled them to within two games of the leading Senators, who again lost to the Missions. There's still a chance for the Sheiks to come out on top in the second half and ball clubs have been known to start winning streaks from performances just such as Smith's yesterday.

The Oaks got eight hits off the combined offerings of Rhodes and Hulvey, and six of them were bunched in two innings. However, the three Oak safeties in the sixth were wasted when Brubaker made an unsuccessful attempt to stretch a drive off the left-field wall into a triple. There were two out at the time and singles by Arlett and Fenton followed. Rhodes yielded three more hits and two runs in the seventh and it was perhaps just as well that Vitt lifted him for a pinch hitter for Gordon was showing signs of weakening.

HULVEY STOPS ACORNS

Hulvey pitched faultless ball, but a squib double by Fenton after two were out in the tenth gave him a bit of uneasiness. However, Hank purposely passed Arlett and retired Brooks to get out of the jam.

McEvoy hurled well and would have got by all right if it hadn't been for Smith and his bludgeon. Smith began the scoring for the afternoon in the fourth inning when, after Lee had been retired, he walloped one of McEvoy's choicest offerings far over the right-field wall for his first circuit clout.

Rhodes held the Oaks to one hit for five rounds but was lucky to get by the sixth without a run scoring. With one away in the sixth Ray Brubaker bruised one of Rhodes's

Young Lochinvar Halts Thundering Cardinals

Ex-Texas League Star Shines as Relief Moundsman

Gothamites Now Only One Tilt Behind Western Foes

BY ALAN J. GOULD
Associated Press Sports Editor

POLO GROUNDS, NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—For the second time in three days Young Lochinvar, in the pitching person of gangling Karl Hubbell, stepped in to save the pennant chances of the New York Giants today and make the National League pennant race tighter than the proverbial bass drum.

John McGraw

While 40,000 fans roared their acclaim, Hubbell, lean Oklahoma youth who came to the Giants only a few weeks ago from the Texas League, throttled the league-leading St. Louis Cardinals in the midst of a fiercely fought battle this afternoon and beat them for the second straight time to the tune of 8 to 5.

TWO STRAIGHT

It was the third game of this spectacular series, the second straight victory for Hubbell and the Giants, and reduced the lead of the Cardinals to a single game. Triumph today for St. Louis would have extended their margin to three games and just about have settled the pennant race.

As it stands tonight, however, each club having eight games to play, it is a wide-open battle, the outcome of which may not be decided until the Cardinals and Giants meet again in the final game of the season here a week from tomorrow.

If Hubbell was the hero of this hectic fray, the goat was Taylor Douthit, speedy outfielder of the Cardinals, who let in the winning run in the seventh inning when he allowed Freddy Lindstrom's single to escape him in center. Douthit, coming in too fast, missed the ball, not only permitting Andy Reese, who had singled, to score from first with the winning tally, but also letting Lindstrom scamper across the plate. Andy Cohen clouted a home run into the left-field stands in the eighth to give a finishing flourish to the Giant attack, but the battle was safely won with Hubbell mowing down the Cardinals throughout the last four innings.

Less than two months ago the Giants bought this lean and lanky southpaw, Hubbell, from the Beaumont club for a reputed price of $40,000. He looked like a $140,000 star out there today and if the Giants should come through to win an eleventh pennant for John McGraw he can claim a full share of

STANFORD SPLITS EVEN

First Team Beats West Coast Army 21 to 8, But Card Second Squad Bows to Y.M.I., 7 to 0

STANFORD STADIUM (Palo Alto, Cal.) Sept. 22. (AP)—The Stanford first team pounded and passed its way to a 21-to-8 victory over the Army West Coast eleven here today, but the victory was a sour aftermath to the second team's 7-to-0 defeat by the San Francisco Y.M.I. It was the first game of the double-header which opened Stanford's 1928 grid season.

The Stanford first eleven, all veterans with the exception of Artman, right tackle, was not impressive in its victory. The team showed little of the power which it displayed last year in tying for Coast Conference honors. The Stanford victory can be accredited only to the greater experience of Warner's men.

Nick Potter sailed the six-meter sloop Harpoon to victory in an exciting race at Los Angeles Harbor yesterday with Al Rogers's redoubtable Synnove, in which the two yachts each held the lead three times before Harpoon beat the Newport boat to the finish by twenty-five seconds.

The race, which opened the fall racing program of the California Yacht Club, was started off Fish Harbor in a light breeze, but freshened to a hard westerly early in the race; the course being from Fish Harbor to Point Fermin and return, twice around.

Harpoon got the weather berth and worked out a good lead in the light going to the breakwater, but

Miss Glenna Collett Has Slight Edge to Carry Off National Laurels

[Copyright, 1928, by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

HOT SPRINGS (Va.) Sept. 22.—Miss Glenna Collett should be a slight favorite to win the women's national golf championship to be contested next week over the Cascades course here, although the Providence player has no such edge over the women's field as Bobbie Jones has in the amateur championship.

GLENNA COLLETT

Miss Collett has been for a number of years the outstanding woman golfer of America, but it has been her long drives and accurate hitting of the ball rather than her competitive temperament which has gained her fame and for this reason, some of the women who possess less skill but a keener competitive spirit, have scored victories over her.

This was nowhere more marked than when Miss Mary Browne, the former national tennis champion and a medium golfer, defeated Miss Collett in a semifinal match in the national championship played at the Rhode Island Country Club in 1924.

Many women are getting well over 200 yards off the tee. As with the

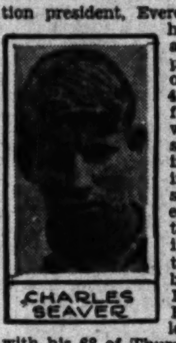
SEAVER STARS AT RIVIERA

Los Angeles Country Club Golfer Leads Juniors With 69 in Invitational Tournament

BY EDWARD LAWRENCE

Clicking off pars and birdies with equal abandon, Charley Seaver pulled a remarkable 69 out of his bag yesterday to lead a brilliant aggregation of junior golf stars in the Riviera invitational tournament.

Charley, 17-year-old son of the Southern California Golf Association president, Everett H. Seaver, had four birdies and thirteen pars, slipping only once in the 430-yard par-4 fourth hole, where he took a six. He was out in 34 and back in 35, clipping a stroke off par each way. It was the second time in three days that par has been broken, Leon Keller of Rancho still leading the way with his 68 of Thursday.



CHARLES SEAVER

The seventeen entries in the junior division as a whole played remarkable golf. Danny Sangster, 15-year-old Potrero golfer, had a 76, while Jack Mackey of Los Angeles

THOMPSON HAS LONG ROAD TO COVER BEFORE HE CAN BE CLASSED WITH JOE GANS

BY TOMMY LOUGHRAN
Light-Heavyeight Champion of the World

[Copyright, 1928, by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

They are talking a lot about Jack Thompson, who knocked out Joe Dundee in a couple of rounds It's natural that his quick victory over the champion would be hailed as a great achievement.

This Thompson must be a good fighter. When they call him a second Joe Gans it seems to be drawing things pretty fine. I never saw Gans. He was way before my time, but the veterans all seems to agree that he was a master at every trick of the game.

Offensively or defensively, it did not seem to make any difference. He could both box and hit, was a flash in short fights and could go a distance — yes, it appears that Gans was the old master.

It took a long time for Joe to

CHAFFEY JAYSEE BEATEN BY SANTA ANA GRIDDERS

ONTARIO, Sept. 22.—Despite the fact that the Chaffey Junior College football squad met defeat today at the hands of the Santa Ana Junior College squad by a 12-to-0 score, local fans were far from discouraged with the showing of the Panthers, coached by Bert Heiser, former U.S.C. star. The winning team incidentally is coached by another former Trojan star, Bill Cook.

BERT HEISER

Football is something new for the local Jaysee squad, and that they didn't get trampled on more thoroughly by the invaders strengthens belief in the Chaffey following that before the season ends Coach Bert Heiser's Panthers will be in the limelight of victory.

Today's game was a practice affair, with Coach Heiser showing his U.S.C. tactics for the first time to the public. A number of U.S.C. coaches and past gridiron stars from the Trojan institution sat on the side lines to watch their former mate put his Chaffee charges through their drills.

Rust did the scoring for the invaders, toting the ball over for the first touchdown in the first quarter, and he crossed the goal line again in the third.

Enthusiasm over football in this community is high this season, in that Chaffee Union High School won its first game of the season yesterday against Corona, 66 to 0, the first victory for the local high school in the past three years. Chaffee lightweights added another

SNIDER, DUFFIELD LAID UP AS RESULT OF GRID INJURIES

Jim Snider and Marshall Duffield, backfield players of Southern California, are laid up with leg injuries, as a result of Friday's two-hour scrimmage session with Loyola. Neither could take part in yesterday morning's workout at Bovard Field. Snider, who has been playing halfback, may be out for several days, while Duffield should be all right by tomorrow or Tuesday. Jeff Cravath superintended yesterday's practice, Howard Jones and other coaches being in the north scouting Stanford. Cravath let the varsity off easy, but scrimmaged the scrubs against Leo Calland's frosh for the better part of two hours.

Vanderbilt Coach Declares Southern Football Teams Among Strongest in Coun

Georgia Tech is Selected as Strongest Team

(This is the last of four dispatches by famous coaches surveying the college football outlook throughout the country. This story has been preceded by dispatches from Zuppke, discussing prospects in the Middle West; Roper, the East, and Howard Jones, the Far West. These four coaches will write exclusively for this paper during the football season.)

BY DAN E. McGUGIN
Football Coach at Vanderbilt University

(Copyright, 1928, by the North American Newspaper Alliance)

Coach Wade

The season has come when hundreds of thousands of young Americans in schools and colleges have begun preliminary work to make football teams. As in all things worth while, this calls for hard application, self-denial and capacity for taking pains.

There will be many disappointments by the way. One or more men on every squad will prove unsatisfactory. They will fail to do their best. They will lose that vital thing, precious to a boy, the respect and affection of team-mates.

Boys are exacting in this game of football. They demand from team-mates the best these team-mates can do.

JONES TO WRITE

At the end of the season there will be almost innumerable selections of all-American teams. The Times and the North American Newspaper Alliance have invited Mr. Roper, coach at Princeton; Mr. Zuppke, University of Illinois; Mr. Jones, University of Southern California, and myself to make a particular study of the teams and the individual players of our respective sections and at the end of the season to agree on an all-American eleven.

We are to observe and to inquire from all reliable sources, and to note the progress of teams and the development of players week by week. From the beginning of the season to the end we are to know whether a player is consistently good, or brilliant only at intervals, whether he shows any indication of selfishness or whether he forgets himself in the spirit of team play. Even this selection, carefully made, will be imperfect and unjust to some, but it should, nevertheless, be reasonably just and fair.

This invitation has caused me to abandon the policy I have long adhered to, that is, to refrain from writing for newspapers. It seems to me, however, that it does provide an opportunity to place teams and individual players of the southeastern section in a place of consideration.

It is naturally the disposition of every section to think its own the best. It is my observation that men the country over have generally the same physical ability. Through the influence of climate and other conditions they may be different in type.

Boys in the Middle West are inclined to be muscular, thick of chest and strong of thigh. The southern boy is more apt to be slender, thin of face, very often thin of chest, and with the long steel-like muscle of the pioneer.

The institutions of the north and east have on the average a far greater number of students. The south has not developed intramural activities as have other sections, though great progress is being made.

For the most part we perhaps do not have the traditions which, more effectively than muscle and bone, determine the outcome of a hard contest. But there is always at least one man in the south, and often a number, who deserve serious consideration for the all-American.

It is my task in this first article to give some judgment of the possibilities of the southern teams. A trained newspaper man can reel off paragraph after paragraph without hesitation, making it fresh and interesting to the reader, but it is hard for one not accustomed to that manner of writing to make a typewriter spell out the thoughts that arise and put them in such a garb that they will be interesting and clear.

There are twenty-two colleges in the Southern Intercollegiate Conference, beginning with Maryland and extending down to Tulane University. Numerous other colleges belong to the Southern Collegiate Association. A number of the latter have strong teams but as a rule not on a par with those of the conference.

WIN BIG GAMES

All these colleges at times have brilliant games and teams. Practically every college in the conference has one or more great elevens to think about, teams which have won at least one important intersectional game. V.M.I. has defeated Pennsylvania. Maryland and Virginia have won from Yale. The University of Georgia and Georgia Tech have many brilliant intersectional games to look back upon. Tulane, Florida, Vanderbilt and others have all surprised opponents of other sections of reputed greater strength.

Five head coaches have come into the conference, all men of fine character, experience and ability. These include Laval, South Carolina; Bachman, Florida; Cohen, Louisiana State; Mehre, Georgia, and Bohler, Auburn. Cody, at Clemson, is beginning his second year, having achieved much in preparation and organization during the first.

Most of the members of the conference have particularly large squads in training and have adequate coaching staffs. It is literally impossible for one man, or two men, to give the necessary instruction to a large group.

Coach Wade, Alabama, has Jess Neely and James Haygood. Cody has obtained Sanders and others and in the main from three to five competent instructors are engaged with the respective squads.

Most of the colleges have a large number of letter men. North Carolina State has thirteen, University of Virginia, fourteen; University of North Carolina, twelve; Washington and Lee, ten, and University of Georgia, Georgia Tech and others are well fortified with veteran material.

GEORGIA STRONG

Perhaps the strongest teams in the conference the last two years have been University of Georgia, Georgia Tech, Tennessee, Alabama and Vanderbilt, though this may be the year when the better teams will be found upon the Atlantic seaboard.

It is probable that the leaders along the Atlantic seacoast will be found among the Universities of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Maryland, Washington and Lee, North Carolina State, Furman and Virginia Military Institute, though Clemson may advance to a place equal to or in advance of these.

Coach Bachman of the Rockne school, with a brilliant record at Kansas Agricultural College, will apply his skill and organizing ability at Florida and might bring her into leadership his first year.

Mehre, at the University of Georgia, as first-year head coach, will have the problem of replacing three exceptionally good men in Smith, guard, and Shiver and Nash, ends. Ends of this unusual skill do not grow on every bush, as I found when Wakefield and Bomar left Vanderbilt. Mehre has a large squad of experienced men and all indications point to a continuance of the brilliant play of the University of Georgia of the last few years.

MATERIAL PLENTIFUL

Mehre has linemen sufficient to make two teams, I am told, while his group of capable backfield men is especially large. If he is successful in getting ends of ability his team will be hard to beat—hard for Yale, Georgia Tech, Alabama and all others. It has the outstanding fullback of the South in McCrary.

The University of Alabama will always have superbly coached hard-fighting, well-organized teams with Wade in charge. He has the outlook of a rugged line and a smart and fast backfield and has prospects now, apparently, of a first-class punter.

Wade lost several fine men from last year, including that excellent tackle Pickhard. But he was blessed with a bit of talent and will be able to fill such holes. Alabama plays Wisconsin early in November and it should be an outstanding battle, with Alabama fully upholding the southern banner.

Tulane promises to keep up her brilliant play of two and three years ago, having a remarkable back in Bancker. Cohen will be busy building for the future during this, his first year at Louisiana State. The University of Mississippi and Mississippi A. and M., have exceptionally large and promising squads. Coach Byrd, University of Maryland, has good material, and a very effective system of playing.

Bohler, at Auburn, a substantial addition to the conference coaching organization, will have a good team and also will be building for the future. The University of Tennessee lost fine veteran players in Barnhill, Dodson, Butcher and others, but has an unusually large squad, many brilliant men coming over from last year's freshman team.

We have more men to work with at Vanderbilt than in a number of years. Only two men, however, who have had more than one year's experience. Spears, quarter; Sharp, center; Creason, end, and Owen halfback, were men of remarkable skill, and we fear we will not look upon the like again soon.

We are fortunate in the return of Brown, two years ago the best guard in the South; and with him we have several other linesmen of quality. A center to replace Sharp, an all-southern man, will be difficult to develop, for our early games at any rate. We have a first-class back in Armistead.

For the first time in some years we are likely to have a good string of substitutes for replacements. And altogether, if we are able to bring forth a good center and a man to toss passes, we should be able to hold up our heads. We have a rather hard schedule, with Colgate coming early in the season, possibly to throw a cog into our development. But with a little luck Vanderbilt should be able to hold her place in the sun.

Sewanee is on theup-grade, her freshman team of last year being the best in years, and a variety of capable prospects are trying out for her freshman team of 1928. Virginia and Washington and Lee, along with most of the institutions, have many veterans. This appears to be a year when practically all the leading southern teams will have a number of veterans.

TECH TO RULE

It is the opinion that Georgia Tech is likely to have the best team in the conference. She had an unusually fine eleven last year, made up largely of sophomore material. She lost two excellent men in Capt. Crowley and Tackle Hood, but she is reported to have two fine men coming from the freshman team in Lumpkin and Dunlap, backs of power and speed. It is to be hoped that Thompson and Randolph will attain scholastic eligibility. With Fincher, an exceptionally fine line coach, and Miller, a veteran of the "Four Horsemen," to aid Coach Alexander, no team will be furnished with a sounder system of play.

In the Southwest, that is beyond the Mississippi River, the Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas colleges are in the Southwestern Conference. The student bodies are large, and nearly every boy is a potential athlete.

Southern Methodist University, under the brilliant and versatile coaching of Ray Morrison, has been making perhaps the most consistent record of recent years.

A squad made up of seniors as recommended by coaches of the conference was invited to play in Los Angeles, on Christmas Day, a team made up of seniors of Pacific and Rocky Mountain institutions. The southerners selected were Thomas, Maryland; Cardwell, Virginia; Spotswood, Washington and Lee; McDowell, North Carolina State; Estes, Georgia; Crowley and Hood, Georgia Tech; Butcher, Barnhill and Dodson, Tennessee; Thompson, Mississippi A. & M.; Cohen, Mississippi; Menville of Tulane, Bowdin and Packard, Alabama; Middlecoff, Florida, and Spears, Sharpe and Creason, Vanderbilt.

It is doubtful whether a better squad of football players was ever assembled. The boys had heads of scholars, manners of gentlemen and spirit and bodies of the veteran athlete. They won the game and this experience has contributed to a better understanding and better sportsmanship among the colleges of the section.

An examination of this squad would convince anyone that all-American material is to be found below the Mason-Dixon line.

GRID GOSSIP

BY BRAVEN DYER

"Whatever became of Bill Pumpkins, the all-State halfback who went to Stanford a couple of years ago?" inquired one of the railbirds at Bovard Field the other night.

"Oh, he's playing on the eighth or ninth team," was the reply from another spectator watching Howard Jones's Trojans in practice.

FIELD THOMPSON

BUD TEACHOUT

"Why doesn't Jones use Joe Punt more?" inquired the first railbird. Joe Punt was a great halfback at Excelsior or someplace and came to Southern California with a reputation that would knock your eye out.

"Oh, he's over there on the Spartans," was the reply this time. The Spartans, it might be explained, are the boys who spend their seasons taking, in as cheerful a manner as possible, whatever the varsity has to send.

Stanford had nine varsity teams in action the other night, which means that Pop Warner has a squad of more than 100 men. Southern California's field was overrun by ninety-six varsity candidates last week.

Ten years ago the Trojan varsity frequently hadn't enough substitutes to provide a decent scrimmage session during the week. Tommy Davis, captain of the 1915 team coached by Ralph Glaze, says there were exactly twenty-two men eligible for football at that time.

One of the greatest high school stars in local history was Field Thompson of L. A. High. Single-handed he beat Polytechnic 28 to 0 in 1921 and 10 to 0 in 1922. He could do everything and do it well. Field came to Southern California in 1923. He didn't make the team as a sophomore under Gus Henderson but finally got a chance under Jones in '25. He won his letter that year and again in '26, but the general public never knew of Thompson as a great Trojan star. Field is now athletic manager of Bovard Field.

Then there was Bob Lee, the Franklin High School sensation. Regarded as the greatest prep drop-kicker of his day, Lee entered Southern California and after winning two letters couldn't make the grade in his final year. On the same team with Lee at Franklin were Mike Godet and Bud Teachout, two stellar ends, but not as publicized players as Lee. They went to Occidental. Each played three years, taking part in virtually every minute of football that Oxy scheduled.

Rosy Ryan and Leslie La Velle were two outstanding stars of Glendale's championship prep team of many years ago. They enrolled at Southern California. Ryan, if we recall rightly, got into a varsity game a few seconds last year. Neither will ever be a Trojan regular. Had either gone to a smaller institution he might be playing all the time.

That's the way it is with half a hundred athletes at Stanford, Southern California and other large institutions of learning. Naturally, coaches of such reputation as Warner and Jones draw players from all over the country.

But after all it simmers down to this: Do the boys want to play football or do they merely want to be under the coaching eye of a famous mentor? There'll be fifty Stanford men and a like number at Southern California who won't get into a game this year.

With such an immense squad not even coaches as capable as Warner and Jones can know the true worth of their respective players. Of course, the big schools must have material. But it's coming to the place where the coaches are actually handicapped by an oversupply of dead timber.

But the angle we were thinking of is this: Who gets the most fun out of football, which is what the game is played for after all, the chap who subs for the Trojans and doesn't get into a single game, or the boy who goes to Whittier, Pomona, Occidental or Caltech and plays throughout most of the schedule?

If fellows like Thompson and Lee, who were the prep sensations of their day, could not be outstanding varsity players what chance has Jimmy Jones from Junction City? Yet Jimmy Jones goes to a big institution and sits on the bench.

And it isn't as if the boys wouldn't be well coached at other schools. You couldn't ask for smarter mentors than Eugene Nixon at Pomona, Fox Stanton at Caltech, Eddie Keinholz at Occidental or anyone of several other Southern California coaches.

WILCOX BROTHERS COMING S.C. STARS

Tom and Ralph Out to Win Regular Berths on Team

Two brothers from Strathmore High School who are battling it out with some fifty other candidates for positions on Howard Jones's Southern California varsity.

BY BRAVEN DYER

Rise of the Wilcox brothers to positions of some prominence on the Southern California varsity brings to mind famous brother combinations of gridiron history. Tom and Ralph are the Wilcox boys, the former a fullback and the latter an end under Howard Jones, boss of the Trojans.

HOWARD JONES

The most famous brothers of football were the Poes of Princeton. Jones and his brother Tad were almost as well known when they played at Yale. It is not generally known that Howard has two other brothers in addition to Tad, but they did not play football.

In the East and Midwest there have been brothers on many teams. Here are a few of them: The Workmans of Ohio State, the Granges of Illinois, the Sculls of Pennsylvania, Devines of Iowa, Fletchers of Illinois, Borns of Army and Navy, Thomases of Chicago and the Browns of Alabama. Then there were the famous Callahans, one at Yale and the other at Princeton. Both were captains, if memory serves correctly. The Steins, one of W. and J. and the other of Pittsburgh, are also famous brothers.

BLEWETTS FAMOUS

Here on the Coast the Blewett family has contributed a flock of brothers to the gridiron, California being their stamping ground. The Dougerys, the Evanses and the Gills are other famous brothers who performed or are still playing at California.

At Washington there were the Tesreaus, the Wilsons and the Brixes. At Stanford the Shipkeys and Posts. Many, many years ago the Jaccobberger brothers pulverized the opposition for Oregon.

In the Southern Conference there have been many famous sets of brothers. The Kirkpatricks, Weimans, Thomsons and Schweizers of Occidental; the Merritts, Elliotts, Sloanes, Lorbeers, Gillettes and Sturgeses of Pomona; the Groats of Caltech and the Murrays, Renneckers and Johnses of Whittier will be remembered for many years.

At Southern California there have been four sets of brothers as gridiron stars, prior to the advent of the Wilcoxes. The most famous of these were the Livernashes. Then came the Lindleys, who were twins, if we remember correctly. Then the Galloways, and, during the past three years, the Thomases, Lloyd and Max, who are brothers of the Chicago Thomases, Harry and John.

Tom is the elder of the Wilcox boys. He's 21 years of age; Ralph, 19. Tom tried out as a sophomore last fall, but injured his shoulder so badly in the first week of practice that he dropped out of college for the rest of the year. Thus the two brothers returned together as sophomores this fall.

They went to high school at Strathmore in the north, not far from Lindsay and Porterville. Each played four years of football there, Tom at quarterback and Ralph as an end and halfback. They were coached by D. R. Lightner, a former Southern California student.

FIREMEN IN FIRST GAME OF 1928 SEASON TODAY

First-hand information as to the 1928 strength of the Los Angeles Fire Department football team will come to the surface at Knickerbocker Field this afternoon when Coach Bill Blewett's huskies run up against the Santa Fe Athletic Club squad from San Bernardino. The game will be called at 2 o'clock and the field, the Union Pacific gridiron, is located at Ninth and Spence streets.

Blewett has decided to swing things off with a backfield consisting of Ellis Hemsley, quarterback; "Daddy" Moll and Eddie Tyler, halfbacks, and "Whitey" Murwin, fullback. On the line the men who will start will be Royce Wheeler and Mathews, ends; Ote Miller and Fisher, tackles; "Red" Hasenauer and Hawkins, guards, and Capt. Larry Casey, center.

This starting team will be shifted about considerably as Blewett plans to give most of his big squad a try today. The Less Gaunt, tackle; Johnny Hill-former California star has not yet decided upon the team which will head for New York early next month to meet the New York fire laddies at the Polo Grounds, October 21, for the interdepartmental championship of the world.

"Fatso" Levering, 200-pound fullback, will be the Gate City player to keep an eye peeled for today. Levering hits like a truck and will prove a thorn in the sides of the Smoke-eaters throughout the game. "Dinty" Moore, quarterback, and Capt. McCarty, veteran tackle, are other Santa Fe players certain to shine today.

Starting line-ups:

L. A. Fire Dept.		Santa Fe A. C.

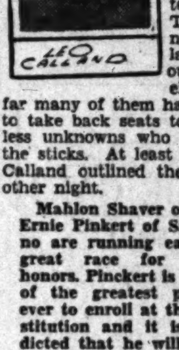
TROJAN FROSH OPEN SEASON WITH SAN BERNARDINO J.C. TEAM AT COLISEUM SATURDAY



LEO CALLAND

Leo Calland's Southern California frosh outfit opens the 1928 grid season on the same bill with the Trojan varsity, playing the San Bernardino Junior College team in a preliminary game to the S. C.-Utah Aggie struggle at the Coliseum next Saturday.

Calland has selected no first team as yet. There are any number of stellar prep players out for the frosh eleven, but so far many of them have been forced to take back seats to the more-or-less unknowns who come up from the sticks. At least that's the way Calland outlined the situation the other night.

Mahlon Shaver of Covina and Ernie Pinkert of San Bernardino are running each other a great race for quarterback honors. Pinckert is hailed as one of the greatest prep athletes ever to enroll at the Trojan institution and it is freely predicted that he will land a regular berth on the varsity next fall.

Van Ornum of Pasadena, Schnelle of Fremont and Keohan of New York are other promising signal-callers on Calland's club.

Leo has three pretty good-looking fullbacks in Musick of Santa Ana, Walker of Orange and Willingham of Calexico, the latter an unknown who has been going great guns of late.

Leading the inside halfbacks is Mallory of Pasadena, chunky individual built along the lines of Lloyd Thomas. Jensen of Anaheim is also performing in this position while Blackburn of Orange and Hammack of Lomita are among the best candidates for the outside half berth.

Williamson of Pittsburgh, Cal., and Baker of Kingsbury seem to be the best of the centers, with Butler of San Diego, Chlentzos of San Luis Obispo and Whittier of the San Diego Army and Navy Academy standing out among the guards. The latter weighed 251 pounds when he reported and 253 the next day. How much he has gained since then is a matter of speculation.

Richardson of Pasadena, Mason of San Diego and Hall of Texas are the leading tackles. Hall is a big fellow who will bear watching.

Jurich of Santa Monica, Bice of Hollywood and Joslin of Phoenix are getting the call at the end positions. Jurich and Bice are known to be fast, good ball hawks and strong on the defense.

Howard Elliott, former varsity quarterback, is assisting Calland in coaching the freshmen.

NIGHT FOOTBALL IN BRAZIL

Football is so popular in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, that games are now played at night by electric flood light.

Grid Hopes at Redlands Sink Lower

REDLANDS, Sept. 22.—Football hopes at the University of Redlands were dealt a crushing blow today when it became known that Dick Farquhar, veteran end, had been accepted at Ohio State University and will leave for the East Monday. Farquhar has played two years of football for Redlands and was counted on as an exceptionally valuable man this year. His going leaves a terrible hole, especially with Jimmy Fox out of the early season games with a broken hand. It cuts down Coach Trines's list of veterans greatly and indicates Redlands will have a team of sophomores and juniors.

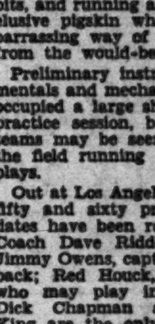
CITY LEAGUE FOOTBALLERS GRADUALLY ROUNDING INTO SHAPE FOR COMING SEASO

With the opening date of grid practice but two weeks old, speculation is more rife than ever before as to the comparative strength among the seven schools entered in City League pigskin chase.



DAVE RIDDERHOFF

The appearance of a new face in the ranks of head football coaches; Hollywood's chances of retaining the title they garnered last year; outstanding candidates for this year's all city eleven, and other kindred subjects with which the prepster whiles away a pleasant hour, are being discussed.

And meanwhile, squads of perspiring and panting gridders are being taken through their paces, with a round of tasks such as hustling the bucking machines around the gridiron, hurling themselves at tackling dummies suspended over sawdust pits, and running and falling on the elusive pigskin which has an embarrassing way of bounding away from the would-be snatcher.

Preliminary instructions, fundamentals and mechanics of the game occupied a large share of the early practice session, but now skeleton teams may be seen deploying over the field running through simple plays.

Out at Los Angeles High, between fifty and sixty prospective candidates have been reporting daily to Coach Dave Ridderhoff for duty. Jimmy Owens, captain and quarterback; Red Houck, of track fame, who may play in the backfield; Dick Chapman and Claybourne King are the only letter men returning. However, a great number of last year's substitutes, who saw service at one time or other, plus a considerable amount of beefy material coming up from last year's lightweight squad are working out daily.

Prominent among the heavies are Dalbert McGue, a six-footer who tips the scales at 190 pounds; McKee, a 195-pound lineman; John Gasper, 192-pound tackle, and Orville McComas, 215 pounds, also a tackle. From this material Coach Ridderhoff figures on turning out a squad that will be nobody's pushover.

Hollywood's chances of repeating last year's performance seem slimmer than ever. Only two emblem wearers, Thorny Rogers and Capt. Laurrie Vejar, have reported for practice.

Johnny Hillman, tackle; Ernie Oswald, end, and Chuck Griffith are about the only others of worth who are back. For the rest, Coach Vic Kelly must fall back on material to be developed from last year's lightweights.

Pop Bates, Lincoln High School coach, has already lined up four practice games with outlying high

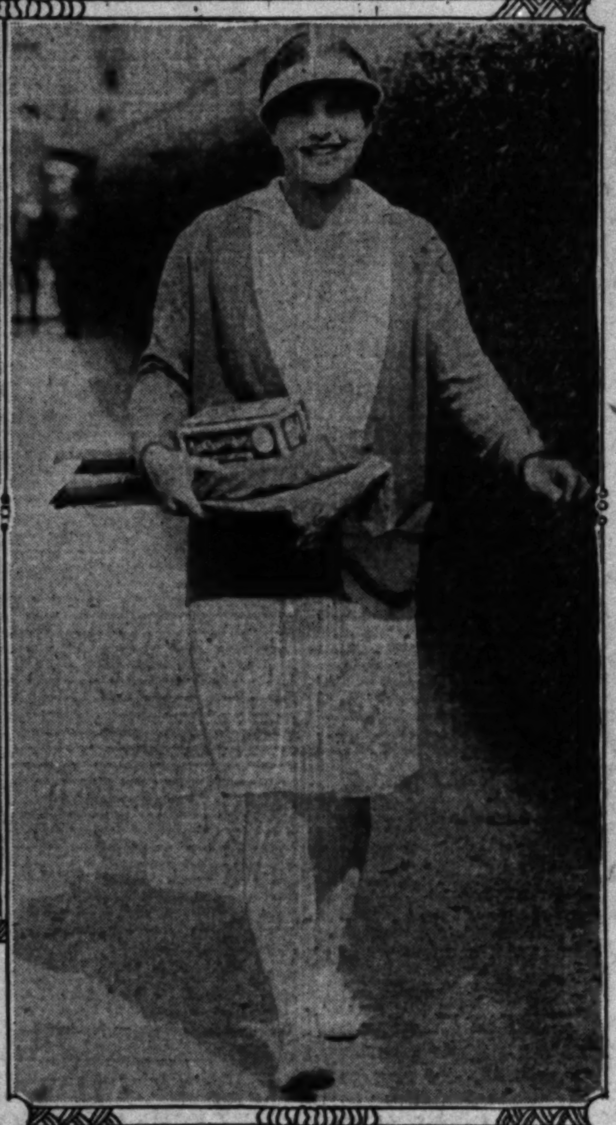
Helen Wills went abroad this year to annex the Wimbledon and other available foreign classics and then came home to retain her national crown. The appearance of both Cochet and Miss Wills will be their first in a tournament held in this city.



"FOX" STANTON REBUILDS LINE AT CALTECH; HAS PLENTY OF VETERAN BACKFIELD MATERIAL

(This is the first of a series of articles dealing with football teams of the Southern California Conference.)

BY BRAVEN DYER

Starting his twentieth season of coaching in Southern California, W. L. (Fox) Stanton is faced with the necessity of developing an entire new line at California Tech. The Engineers have but one veteran lineman back this fall. He is Exley, an end. Six other forward positions are as wide open as Boob McNutt's mouth and it will take considerable drilling on Stanton's part before the holes are plugged to his satisfaction.

"FOX" STANTON

The "Fox" has been in the game long enough to know that all is lost without a strong line, hence he's concentrating on the development of men to clear the way for his ball packers. This is Stanton's eighth year at Caltech and during that time he has turned out some mighty fine teams, despite only fair material and short working hours. The Engineer students are kept so busy with their studies that football is sort of an afterthought. Stanton has a squad of but thirty men.

GOOD BACKS

As far as the backfield is concerned the Caltech coach is well fixed. He has Capt. Elmer Muff, an elusive, speedy runner at one halfback, and Reid, a light, aggressive boy, at the other. Shields, regular fullback last year and a good one, is back, ready to pulverize the opposition. Cravitz, veteran quarterback, has put on so much weight that he scales well above 180 pounds and may be shifted to full, although Stanton indicated yesterday that he would keep him in the signal-calling position.

Kingman, sub quarterback who made his letter last year, is also available. Stanton lost a valuable back in Dickey, fullback on the 1927 frosh outfit. The Caltech coach had banked rather heavily on Dickey and his absence from the team was quite a blow.

In the line Craford from last year's pea green outfit is showing up well at the end opposite Exley, while Keeler, a sub last season, is also going well.

Tackles will probably be Daly, who won his letter subbing for Jou-Jon-Roche last year, and either Westlund or D'Arcy. Westlund played two or three years ago as a sub and has only returned to school this fall.

Right now Stanton is grooming Alderman and Stroud for the guard berths. Young Alderman is a brother of the famous "Horsey" Alderman of five years ago, one of the greatest backs in Southern Conference history. Kuhn, a sub fullback last year, has been shifted to center.

Most of these boys weigh in the neighborhood of 165 or 170 pounds, which means that Caltech will not have a weight edge on any of her conference foes by a long shot.

Stanton thinks Occidental has the best material in the conference and figures that the Tigers, along with Pomona and Whittier, are the teams to beat.

"Don't fool yourself about Pomona," said the veteran coach. "Nixon will have a good team. His material is experienced, with most of the players having done pretty well as high school boys. When the Oxy game rolls around Pomona will be strong."

"Whittier may have the fastest team in the conference," went on Stanton. "George and Payne are terrifically speedy backs and I would not be surprised to see Whittier do a lot of damage before the season closes."

Caltech opens the season against California Christian College next Saturday and plays U.C.L.A. at the Rose Bowl the following week. Stanton and his son Layton, who helps him with the coaching, saw the Bruins in action yesterday.

HUDKINS'S NEIGHBORS SEEK LOCAL FIGHTS

Two boys from the section of the country that produced Ace Hudkins arrived here yesterday in two of their manager, Joe Keller. The newcomers are Homer Sheridan, middleweight, and Johnny Burds, featherweight. All of them propose to make this city their home port. They are from Sioux City, Iowa.

Sheridan comes here with recent victories over Dago Joe Gans and one of Johnny Risko's sparring partners whom he licked on the program that starred Risko and Bearcat Wright at Omaha. Both Sheridan and Burds want to fight here.

Keller knows the Hudkins boys well. Ace Hudkins trained in his gym before coming to the Coast four years ago.

Veterans Form Backbone of All Teams in Minor City Football League

After two weeks of light practice and a little scrimmaging, football squads in the Minor City League are gradually assuming shape with veterans taking the lead in the formation of teams. Tentative first and second squads are being formed from record turnouts at all high schools.

Fairfax, 1927 undefeated champions and scored upon but once last year, is a strong favorite for this season's pigskin laurels. Eleven lettermen have returned and will be the backbone of the Fairfax eleven. A well-rounded team is expected, with a fast, heavy line and a versatile backfield.

Coach Welsh, Colonial mentor, is training a husky veteran forward wall composed of Capt. Johnson, star end; Rosenberg and Taylor, tackles, and Lawrence at the other wing, with other excellent men filling in at the two guard positions and at center. A plunging backfield is also being developed from stellar material at the Colonial institution, and is said to be the equal of any set of backs in the league.

With Sid Witherow coaching the Belmont varsity for the first time after three years' experience with the Green and Black lightweights, Belmont should have a fighting eleven. Known to the school as "Dynamite," Witherow is instilling a battling spirit in the Hilltopper squad. Capt. Howard Tipton, Barton, Lethin and Sabey, all excellent backfield men, and Collins and Cowan on the line will be the nucleus of the Belmont pigskin aggregation. Clark Lethin, a fast open-field runner, is expected to come through in a starring capacity this fall, and Olivas, Saunders and Short will come up from the lightweight squad of last year.

Under the tutelage of Coach George Dirck, the Fremont football squad is expected to afford strong opposition to the Fairfax championship hopes. Voltz, the best fullback in the junior athletic league; Snyder and Lewis, quarterbacks; Gruwell and Wells, ends, and Dennis on the line, will be the mainstays of the Pathfinder eleven. Voltz, in particular, should star in the minor league season.

Garfield High School has a new football coach this year, J. K. Belford. The Presidents will have a very light squad this fall, but Coach Belford expects to develop a fast team that will shine on a dry field. Garfield cannot expect a championship eleven, but unless wet playing fields spoil their chances, the team will finish up near the top.

The Roosevelt Rough Riders are given a dark horse's chance to land up in the team standings in the league. Under the able instruction of Coach Clark De Groot and led by Capt. Gordon Gerheardt, the Roosevelt squad may upset the dope this year, although very few veterans are back. In all probability, however, Roosevelt will have a big scrap with Harding over the cellar position. Little is known of the Harding squad, and although Dame Rumor whispers of an improved team over last year's cellar-sitters, Harding is conceded no chance to do anything but lose.

men, the long hitters have the advantage.

One hundred and sixteen women have entered the championship, for which there will be an eighteen-hole qualifying round for the thirty-two places at match play.

The field is complete. There is no woman golfer in the United States capable of winning, who has not entered. A number of Canadian players will also compete.

FOOTBALL FLASHES

PULLMAN (Wash.) Sept. 22. (AP)—The hoodoo aphorism of "no reserve strength," which has been tacked over the Washington State College football camp for several seasons is about to be yanked down. Coach "Babe" Hollingbery has inspected his 1928 material with a critical eye, and sees in it today the makings of a strong starting eleven with an abundance of alternates. There are forty-five men on the varsity squad, fifteen more than on the opening day last season.

Fourteen letter men are back fighting to hold the jobs longed for by an army of sophomores. At every line position there is a chance that new blood will seep in before the ten-game schedule ends Thanksgiving Day. In the backfield veterans seem to have the call, with the yearling graduates close behind.

A line-up that has worked together most of the time since practice began includes these veterans: "Brick" Graham, center; Ernie Hansen, guard; Harry Speidel and Meg Dressel, tackles; "Coop" Curry, end; Teddy Rohwer, shifted from half to quarter; Dan Horan, half, and Courtney Smith, fullback. Elmer Schwartz, 190-pound youngster, clings to a guard position, while Sam Hansen, brother of the great "Ox" of all-Coast fame, looks good at end.

State College eyes have been fastened on Porter Lainhart, new halfback sensation who bubbles over with power and speed. In Lainhart, Hollinbery has the makings of a smashing, bruising runner who will do much to balance the Cougar leather quartet.

PRICE SAYS CARDS, TROJANS FAVORITES

BERKELEY, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Finally prodded beyond the point of endurance by reports circulated to the effect that the University of California varsity football team is this season to reach championship heights, Coach Clarence (Nibs) Price rolled up his sleeves at scrimmage time today and talked turkey with the gentlemen of the press gathered for further observance of the Golden Bears.

"Many people have the erroneous idea that we should be favored to clean up in the Pacific Coast Conference. They are all wrong. Stanford, in my opinion, is the strongest team on the Coast with the University of Southern California second. Until these teams are beaten, that is the way they should be ranked."

This is most surprising language for Price. In all three of his seasons as football mentor, Price never before has made such a remark toward his principal adversaries. Heretofore it has always been: "We're not beaten yet and we'll give them one real fight."

To make so bold as to rate the teams or to prophesy results, in the past, has always been out of Price's jurisdiction. At the beginning of the season Price seemed to offer silent approval of the glowing tributes paid his material. He would neither affirm nor deny California's possibilities of a clean sweep on the Coast. Something has crept under the Bear boss's skin, however, and his explosive declaration today caused the press men to lift their eyebrows.

WOODROW WILSON STILL HAS HOPES

LONG BEACH, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The pall of depression that settled over the Woodrow Wilson High campus three weeks ago when it was first learned that fifteen of the seventeen lettermen from 1927 were lost to this year's football squad hangs as heavily today.

Although still an infant in swaddling clothes, the 2-year-old Long Beach high school has fond memories of the great team that last year swept all Bay League competition but Compton aside to lose the title by a shadow to Huntington Park, and the Bruins do not wish to lose any of that prestige.

Coach John Gartner's fears or hopes will be realized Friday when the Woodrows stack up against Harry Shueh's Huntington Beach Oilers on the local Stephens Field. Another practice melee, with Fairfax High at Los Angeles on October 5, will complete the preseason card before the circuit lid is lifted on October 12.

Capt. Ben Butler, quarterback, and Bill Soeberg, center and fullback, are the only Wilson lettermen from last season. The remaining members for the most part are as green as grass, although "Cowboy" Forbes, halfback, and Jim Weinheimer, guard, are veterans in point of experience.

While Wilson and Huntington Beach are at grips, "Deacon" Pine's Compton High outfit will be at Orange in their second tilt of the season. The Hubmen upset Hollywood High Friday and are already in preparedness for the season. With six lettermen on hand, Compton is the most-feared team in the Bay League this year. The backfield of Bus Barnes, Tom Yancey, Porky Smith and McKee appears to be the classiest in the circuit.

JAYSEES TANGLE WITH OCCIDENTAL

The three strongest elevens in the Southern California Junior College conference—Pasadena, Compton and Santa Ana—will mingle with big-leaguers Saturday when "Bullet" Baker's Pasadenans and the Santa Ana Dons tangle with the Occidental College varsity in a double-header at the Rose Bowl while Compton is battling with U.C.L.A. frosh in the preliminary to the Bruin-Arizona clash.

Coach Eddie Kienholz will divide his Oxy varsity into two elevens of approximately equal strength. One will be pitted against the Pasadena Pirates, Southern California Jaysee titleholders of 1927; the other will match touchdowns with Bill Cook's ambitious Santa Ana crew, cofavorites with Compton to lead the parade this year.

FREMONT SQUAD NEARING FORM

Fremont's official schedule follows: squad is rounding into form with forty-five men out as the days go by, but there is lots of rough spots in it that will need plenty of bolstering and smoothing up by Coach Dick. The line is proving to be one deep thorn to Dirck, as some of the men have never seen action before. They are as green, as the green shirts that are in vogue at the present time.

Dirck has uncovered a few likely candidates for the line in Denis, tackle; DeGruccio, guard; and Wells, end. Joe Grewell is a cinch for his position at end. He is the only returning letter man on the line.

The backfield is composed of three lettermen in Capt. Braden, Voitz, and Snyder. Miller, who plays a half and a letter man, has not reported as yet, and it is believed he will not report. Cy Bearson, who is playing half, is proving the class of the backfield. He is fast and hits hard. He was the one factor that helped stop the Manual backs in a recent scrimmage that was held last week, after they had broke away from the forward wall. Skeen, another fullback, is proving to be of some worth being found in the Manual scrimmage.

Fremon'ts official schedule follows:

October 19—Harding at Fremont.
October 26—Roosevelt at Fremont.
November 2—Garfield at Fremont.
November 9—Fremont at Fairfax.
November 16—Fremont at Belmont.

LA VERNE WILL START SIGNALS

LA VERNE, Sept. 22.—With the first week of practice completed at La Verne College without any serious casualties, signal practice is expected to start in full force next week. The past week has been spent in the learning of fundamentals and getting into condition for some good, hard, scrimmages before La Verne meets Oxy on October 6. Coaches Van Cleave and Whittemore seem pleased at the showings made so far.

In picking a first string in practice yesterday the following team was chosen with Root and Weybright, ends; Feree and Leonard, tackles; Hollinger and Virgil Brooks, guards; Nicholas, center, and in the backfield, Lathrop, quarterback; Milt Brownsberger and Hubble at the halfback positions, and Capt. Shirk at fullback.

In considering weight, the above line-up will probably outweigh any other football team that has ever played at La Verne and will also be plenty fast. With new enthusiasm over football aroused, La Verne expects the coming season to be one of its biggest in the gridiron sport.

NOT MUCH HOPE AT SOUTH PASADENA

After a week of drill under torrid zone conditions, Coach Ayers remains far from optimistic over the prospects of the middleweights at South Pasadena High in their annual Coast League schedule. With a comparatively small squad of less than thirty candidates, and a lack of experienced linemen, the job of putting a team on the field that will be real opposition for the powerful Glendale aggregation in the opening league contest is one of many worries.

Edwards, Lester or Bullock must be developed into a capable pivot man, and new guards for each side of them must be found. At the present Burrhus, Wilcox, Barrett, Lavaginio, and Hooper seem to be on a par for the position. With the loss of Cronshey as a tackle because of scholastic difficulties, Sundin, Englemann, Cleland and S. Sanson are leading the fight for the two tackle positions and with no one outstanding enough to make him a favorite. Weldon and L. Sanson, remodeled halfbacks, are holding the edge at the end positions, but capable reserve material is conspicuous by its absence. Matthews, Easterbrook, Thompson and Tillotson are being tried at the position to bolster it up.

Capt. Creswell is getting real competition from Avery who has been piloting the second string in signal drill and may replace the captain as he becomes more experienced. Likewise Misterley has been showing cleverness with Plumb as a halfback in packing the ball. O'Connor gets the call at fullback with W. Thompson improving rapidly on the reserve squad. McAllister ex-captain, and Tunstall will see service at a halfback berth.

Following Glendale, the fast-traveling Pasadena squad is met on the local field in an attempt to make a better showing than the 31-0 score of last year.

HARPOON WINS SLOOP RACE

Synnove caught her in the windward thrash to Point Fermin, only to be nosed out by Harpoon again just at the close of the first round.

Harpoon held her lead for most of the second beat up the coast, lost it for five minutes and then beat Synnove to the buoy by five seconds, increasing the margin to twenty-five seconds on the run to the finish.

The second race of the series will be sailed over the San Pedro-Long Beach course this afternoon.

KID PONCE, DEFOE TO MEET AT OCEAN PARK

Disputing, with their tactics, that the be-whiskered old wheeze that "discretion is the better part of valor," two rough-and-tumble leather pushers of the slugging school will tangle in the eight-round feature frolic at Ocean Park Athletic Club next Wednesday evening. The lads in question are Victor "Kid" Ponce, Wilmington whiz, and Billy DeFoe, former St. Paul battler, who is now trying his luck in the ranks of the Southland 130-pounders.

Johnny Mendez meets Gabriel Garcia in the semi-wind-up. Eddie Seres, newcomer from the East, clashes with Clarence Elliott in the special and two fours polish off the bill. Eddie Darden meets Carl Edwards and A. N. Bertram tackles "Bolo Boy" Gabuco.

HAT TO BLAME

The worst score Walter Hagen has ever made in a national open golf championship was 311, at Inwood, 1923. It was also the only time he ever wore a hat during a links tournament.

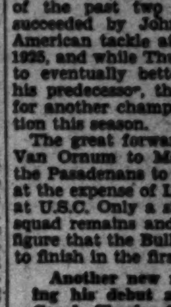
COAST PREPMEN SET FOR GRIND

Santa Ana Favored to Annex Loop Gridiron Title

Long Beach Certain to Have Contending Eleven

Expect San Diego to Prove Tough for Leaders

Eight squadrons of keen young men, are on their toes for a flying start down the trail of Coast League gridiron competition. Although the opening day conflicts are still two weeks away, the prepsters are marking time with a number of preseason matches. "Tex" Oliver's feared Santa Ana gang, with ten letter men on the bandwagon, lost no time in jumping the gun by engaging Huntington Beach High in a scrimmage battle last Friday. The Saints will open the campaign in earnest this Friday by playing host to Vic Kelly's championship Hollywood High outfit.



MANY VETERANS

Sporting a classy assortment of veterans headed by Capt. Doc Hearn, Alvin Reboin and Johnny Keeler, backs; Curtis Youel, center, and Red Cook and George Cook, wingmen, the Santa Anans have been installed as favorites this year. Russell Sprong's Long Beach Jackrabbits and George Hobb's Alhambra boys also loom as strong contenders for the pigskin supremacy.

Although the Long Beach ranks have been greatly weakened by the graduation of Capt. Bill Mittelsiedt, all-Southern California quarterback; Leroy Lake, Gerry Easterbrooks, Red Naughton and other luminaries from the near-championship eleven of last year, the Jackrabbits still have a wealth of talent available. Toplining the group is Capt. Walter Freeman at half and seven other insignia winners.

Coach Sprong will take his disciples to Los Angeles Friday for a battle with the strong Manual Arts outfit. On the following Friday, October 5, Hollywood High will invade the Jackrabbit corral in the final skirmish of the practice season. The Coast League campaign officially opens on Saturday, September 13, when Santa Ana goes to Long Beach, Glendale plays at South Pasadena, Alhambra treks to San Diego and Pasadena travels to Whittier.

PASADENA WEAK

Reigning champions of 1927, the Pasadena Bulldogs are expected to be little more than barking mastiffs this year. Harry B. Milbolin, producer of Pasadena's powerful elevens of the past two years, has been succeeded by John Thurman, all-American tackle at Pennsylvania in 1925, and while Thurman is expected to eventually better the record of his predecessor, there is little hope for another championship organization this season.

The great forward-passing duo of Van Ornum to Mallory that swept the Pasadenans to the title last year at the expense of Long Beach is now at U.S.C. Only a shell of last year's squad remains and league dopesters figure that the Bulldogs will be lucky to finish in the first division.

Another new mentor is making his debut at San Diego. Coach Charles Church, formerly of Alhambra and Fresno, has taken the reins at the Hilltopper institution. Prospects are only fair at the border. Five lettermen from last year's team remain and while the San Diegans may not finish on top of the heap they are feared by all rivals since they annually upset many of the favorites.

Alhambra, Whittier or Glendale may cross the critics to beat Long Beach or Santa Ana under the wire. Hobbs has six lettermen at Alhambra, Mick Madden has a like number at Whittier and Normal Hayhurst has a likely looking bunch at Glendale.

Hayhurst, having won world renown as the discoverer and coach of Frank Wykoff, sprint king, will be out for laurels on the gridiron also. He has Capt. Dave Hanson, halfback; Waldo Forrester, his running-mate, in addition to Don Marshall, Gene Hibbs and Merle Staub, all promising backfielders. The forward wall finds Muller, Hale, Smallhorst, Davidson, Willard, Key, Randall and Straus as the leading figures. With such an array of talent, the Dynamiters may repeat their track triumphs on the lime-ribboned turf.

Pasadena is booked to oppose Manual Arts at Los Angeles Saturday, October 6, in the only other practice duel scheduled. The Coast League card is little changed from former years. The only departure from the usual is the bye for all teams inserted on November 3. This breathing spell will allow the prepsters to witness the Stanford-U.S.C. clash at the Coliseum on that day.

Long Beach and Pasadena, arch-rivals, whose grid feud is the oldest in Southern California annals, will not meet until the closing game of the year. The Bulldogs have had the Indian sign on the Sprongmen for the past two seasons, thrashing them on both occasions, but the Long Beach boys say it's not in the cards to lose three in a row.

The Coast League schedule follows:

October 13—Santa Ana at Long Beach, Glendale at South Pasadena, Alhambra at San Diego and Pasadena at Whittier.
October 20—Long Beach at Alhambra, San Diego at Glendale, Whittier at Santa Ana and South Pasadena at Pasadena.
October 27—Glendale at Long Beach, Santa Ana at San Pedro, Alhambra at Whittier and Pasadena at San Diego.
November 3—Bye. U.S.C.-Stanford game at Los Angeles.
November 17—San Diego at Long Beach, Whittier at South Pasadena, Alhambra at Glendale and Pasadena at Santa Ana.
November 24—Long Beach at Pasadena, Santa Ana at Alhambra, Glendale at San Diego, Whittier and South Pasadena at San Diego.
November 30—Championship play-off between title winners of the Coast and Bay leagues.

CORRECTIONS TO GAMES

Mr. W. I. Lundy sends the following neat correction to Switcher game published in issue of September 2. (The game should have been numbered 2255.)

After the twenty-second move of game mentioned above the position is:

Black—1, 2, 4, 5, 7, 9, 11, 13, 24.
White—16, 18, 20, 21, 27, 28, 29, 31.
Black to play.

Instead of 1-6 as played, Black can win by:

9-14	28-19	14-18	3-10
18- 9	4- 8	12- 3	6-24
5-14	16-12-a	2- 6	B. wins

a—If any other move, then Black wins by 8-12.

Mr. W. Donaghy of Dorchester, Mass., writes that Problem No. 1235 credited to "unknown" should have been credited to "yours truly," as it was so published in the Salt Lake Tribune column about ten years ago and contributed to that column by H. Leiberman. (That is one on the editor not recognizing one of his own problems.)

Stars Get Last Chance to Bolster Flag Hopes Against Seraphs

HOLLYWOOD OPENS SERIES WITH KRUGMEN TUESDAY

Pennant-Bound Senators Play Host to Beavers; Seals in for Hard Week Against Missionites

BY BOB RAY

If Oscar Vitt's Hollywood Stars are going to give Sacramento any kind of a battle in this waning race for the second-half flag, they'll have to do considerable in the way of winning ball games during their coming civil war series with the avenging Angels, who return home Tuesday to do battle with the Sheiks.

OSCAR VITT

The Stars seem to have folded up completely since their disastrous series with Sacramento, but they still have a fighting chance for the flag if they can bowl over the Angels. The only hitch to this, though, is that Marty Krug's athletes always play as well against the Sheiks as they do terribly against the other clubs. The Angels just simply have the "sign" on Hollywood, as their record of fourteen victories in twenty-one games against the Stars will bear out.

IT'S ALL AGAINST STARS

Add that to the fact that the Stars can't win on their home lot and also that the Hollywood pitching staff is holding up like a politician's campaign promises and it would appear that the chances of the Vittmen to overhaul Sacramento are about as slim as the human skeleton's appetite. And if the Stars don't find themselves in first place at the end of the Angel series they can kiss their second half hopes a fond farewell, for Red Killefer's walloping Bells, who are playing the best ball in the league right now, furnish Hollywood's opposition in the final three games of the season.

Sacramento goes back home Tuesday for its final ten games of the race, the Solons meeting Portland in seven tilts starting Tuesday and Seattle three times to wind up the second half. Not much opposition there and Buddy Ryan's athletes figure to clean up enough games to insure their winning the right to meet the Seals in the play-off. Sacramento's pitchers haven't been performing any too steadily, but the Solons are batting in enough runs to protect the wobbling slabsters.

SEALS TAKE ON BELLS

Nick Williams's Seals return from the great Northwest next week for an important and probably tough series against the Missions. Our guess is that the slugging Bells will win enough games to knock the Seals out of the second half picture. However, if the Seals can get by the Mission series and find themselves only one game behind Sacramento they have a grand chance of sweeping both halves, or at least tie the Solons for the second half. A tie would result in a three-game playoff for the second half title. The Angels, who have been duck soup for San Francisco all season, meet the Seals in the Bay City in their final three games of the campaign and that looks like three more wins for Nick Williams's clan.

The fourth series on for the coming week pits Seattle and Oakland in one of those meaningless affairs that make the final stretches of the baseball seasons so tedious on all concerned.

TWIN BILL IS WON BY BUC CREW

Twenty-fifth Victory of Season is Turned in by Burleigh Grimes

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 22. (AP)—Pittsburgh made it four in a row over the Phillies by winning both games of today's double-header, 9 to 7, and 5 to 3. In the opener Burleigh Grimes registered his twenty-fifth victory of the 1928 campaign. Five Philly pitchers saw action, while in the second battle Ervin Brame was airtight in the pinches and had the better of Earl Caldwell and Johnny Milligan.

BURLEIGH GRIMES

The Phillies wasted lots of opportunities, having fifteen men left on the sacks. Thompson for the Phillies and Brame for Pittsburgh hit homers in the second game, and Wright, Pittsburgh, one in the first. Scores:

EX-CHAMP WINS

BALTIMORE, Sept. 22. (AP)—Battling Levinsky, former light-heavyweight champion, gained a decision over Herman Weiner, Baltimore heavyweight, last night in eight fast rounds. Levinsky displayed unexpected speed and a fast left jab which kept his youthful opponent from gaining the edge in a single round.

BIG LEAGUE SCOUTS HAVE EYES ON SEAL GARDENERS

BY BOB RAY

A minor league ball club possessing one outfielder who can attract the eyes of the major league scouts is pretty generally rated quite fortunate, but consider the case of the San Francisco Seals, who have three slugging fly-chasers that have had the scouts looking them over.

SMEAD JOLLEY

In Smead Jolley, Earl Averill and Roy Johnson the Seals undoubtedly have collected the greatest outfield in the minor leagues. In fact, there are several clubs in the majors who cannot boast an outer garden trio that ranks with the Seal triumvirate.

It's quite a task to decide just which one of the three is the better all-around outfielder. There's no questioning that Jolley is the greatest hitter of the group. His .400 batting average will verify that. Smead also can toss that agate far and with accuracy, but his drawback is that he is a bit clumsy in the outfield and not so good at running bases. However, you can forgive a guy a lot of things, especially when he hits the ball as hard and often as does Jolley. At that, Jolley has improved tremendously in his fielding during the past season and if he improves as much during the coming year, there can be no kicking against the way he performs in the outer garden.

Right now Averill is perhaps the best all-around outfielder of the three. Earl plays a great game in center field, has a wonderful arm, and he, too, can hit the ball plenty, although perhaps not quite as often and as far as Jolley. Averill, though, is not so much of a hefty swinger up at the plate as is Jolley, and, consequently is harder to fool. It's our guess that Averill would hit major league pitching better than Jolley.

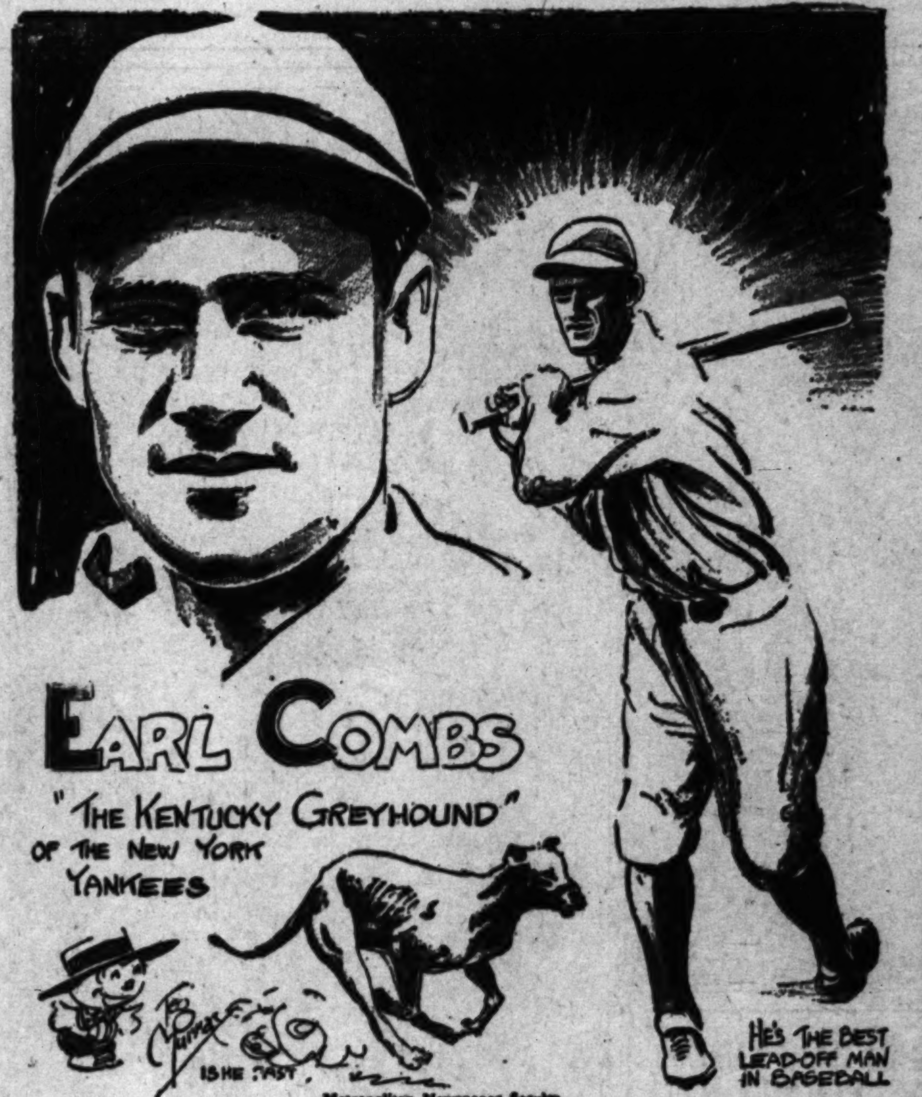
Johnson, the baby of the trio of clouters, is the greatest prospect of the three. Roy is faster than the proverbial greased lightning and covers more ground than one of Ringling's tents. He has yet to master the art of bunting and dragging the ball, but when he does it will mean about 25 points added to his batting average.

Johnson has the best arm in the league, is young and fast, and is now hitting above .350. What more could you ask of a young fellow in his first full season as a regular in AA ball?

They do say that Johnson is not "baseball wise," but there's no question in our mind that he'd be a star in the majors because he's still coming.

Averill, Jolley and Johnson were all picked up by the Seals for practically nothing. But you can put it down that the Messrs. Graham, Putnam and Strub will get plenty for these three athletes before the leagues obtain their services.

THE EARL OF PEBWORTH - By Feg Murray



EARL COMBS
"THE KENTUCKY GREYHOUND" OF THE NEW YORK YANKEES
IS HE FAST
HE'S THE BEST LEAD-OFF MAN IN BASEBALL
FEG MURRAY

Metropolitan Newspaper Service

CONSIDER Mr. Earl B. Combs of Pebworth, Ky., suh, as fine a looking ballplare as ever anyone did see—who, in spite of the handicap of batting in the lead-off position, is the opening wedge in nearly all the Yankee attacks and has kept his average well above the .300 mark ever since he came to New York from Louisville at the start of the 1924 season. They called him a "Second Ty Cobb" in those days, and then he broke his leg after batting .400 and had to begin all over again the next season.

But begin all over again he did, and rival pitchers will vouch for his success. "The hardest man I know to get out," is the consensus among the hurlers whom Earl faces throughout any given season. Combs is a sharp batter, and a good waiter, has a keen eye, is as fleet as a deer on the basepaths and in the outfield and is one of the most popular players in the game. As a proof of this last statement, let me state that a very representative group of bleacher fans—a negro, an Irishman and a Jew and an Italian among them—took up a collection among themselves and presented Combs with a token of their esteem last season.

EXTRA! PRO WILL BECOME AMATEUR

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. — In these days when the division line between professionals and amateurs is chiefly one of moral honesty, the recording of a star amateur "turning pro" is almost a commonplace, but the case of a star pro turning amateur is something else again. All of which is preliminary to the statement that Eddie Murphy, golf pro at the Ridge Country Club, will apply to the United States Golf Association for reinstatement as an amateur next spring.

Murphy, who left the football squad of the University of Nebraska to become golf professional at the Omaha Field Club, has been pro at Ridge for five years. Prior to that he was professional at the St. Joseph (Mo.) Country Club five years.

Joe Jeannette hit the floor thirty-two times in his fight with Sam McVea at Paris in 1909, yet managed to win the decision.

ATHLETICS HAVE EVERYTHING NEEDED TO PROVE WORTHY IF THEY REACH WORLD'S SERIES

BY GEORGE MORIARTY,
Manager of the Detroit Baseball Club

(Copyright, 1928, by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

DETROIT, Sept. 22.—The Philadelphia Athletics, who cavort under Connie Mack's guidance, have everything needed for keen competition in a world series. A just analysis grants them speed, power, intelligence and courage. The last requisite is theirs for the relentless battle they have staged in the last two months of the American League race.

LEFTY GROVE

While an inferiority complex seemed to grip them in two-thirds of their conflicts with the Yankees, that means nothing in a series wherein they will meet an entirely strange team. The Philadelphia club has a smashing, straight-away attack, but it can be diversified suddenly and smartly.

The punch is there in abundance, particularly since Mack inserted the youthful Haas and Orwoll in the line-up a few months ago. These two players gave an excellent balance to the team in its relation to age and ability.

Connie Mack is a great manager, and gaze at the array of coachers on the club. While Mack's fine youngsters furnish the perspiration. Gleason, Collins, Cobb and Speaker supply the inspiration.

Weigh the pitching talent. Walberg is one of the great left-handers of the last twenty years. Rommel is the knuckle-ball king. Jack Quinn is the premier spit-ball pitcher today. Earnshaw, a big, clever and deceptive right-hander! Then there is Orwoll, who when not first-basing can step into the pitching role and do it real justice.

Now a few words about Robert Moses Grove, left-handed fire-ball artist of all time, excepting Rube Waddell. Grove in his element furnishes something new and difficult in the way of speed.

The National League victors may contend that Grove is no tougher than Dazzy Vance, whom they have showered on occasions. But I think they may find a vast difference. Vance is gigantic and takes a vigorous wind-up. Grove is slim and wiry and winds up with a deceptive ease that whangs the ball across the plate like rifle-fire.

The result is that batters are a fraction of a second late in timing and trying to make contact. Other pitchers go to the rubber; Grove, in the true sense of the word, goes to the firing-line.

Last, but not least, Cochrane catches Grove, which makes it a near-perfect battery. In the last ten years there may have been a better catcher than Cochrane, but I have not seen him. He is truly so much of a standout that he forces Perkins, a great catcher, into second-string duty.

The Mack fly-chasers list as follows: Simmons, Haas, Miller, Speaker, Cobb and French. There is an outfield and something left over. Foxx or Dykes at either first or third, and Bishop and Boley around the pivotal section! Then there are Hale, Hassler and Hauser for emergency.

A team more brimful of talent in world-series togs cannot be assembled, unless one resorts to the all-star process of selection. Frankly I am prompted to give the Athletics a big chance to bowl over the opposition in any man's world series.

McINTYRE IN DRAW

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Ray McIntyre, Los Angeles bantamweight, and Raymond Montoya, San Diego, fought to a draw in a sensational ten-round bout here last night. McIntyre, the better boxer of the pair, had the edge in the early rounds, outhandling the local boy. But with the later rounds, Montoya got in the most damage to gain an even break in the eyes of the judges. Lorenzo Sison, Filipino bantamweight, and Clayton Goyd, Hollywood, fought a draw in another ten-round bout.

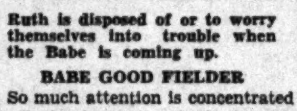
RUTH'S HOMERS GIVE HIM RIGHT FIELD JOB ON SCRIBE'S TEAM

This is the eighth of a series of articles by Irving Vaughan, veteran baseball writer, selecting the ten greatest players in the game today. Mr. Vaughan's earlier selections follow: Catcher, Hartnett of the Cubs; pitchers, Pennock of the Yanks and Benton of the Giants; first baseman, Bottomley of the Cardinals; second baseman, Hornsby of the Braves; shortstop, Jackson of the Giants; third baseman, Traynor of the Pirates. The remaining two selections will appear on succeeding Sundays in The Times.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—It is unfortunate for Paul Waner of the Pirates that he should be employed in right field, which also is the work shop of George Herman Babe Ruth of the Yankees. With Kiki Cuyler of the Cubs in eclipse for the season, Waner and Ruth stand out as the only two headliners in their chosen positions, and to rate one as superior to the other on the season's work is almost the equivalent of terming Tweedle Dee better than Tweedle Dum.

But the home-run exploits of George Herman cannot be discounted. Any time George Herman steps to the plate the enemy must regard him as a potential home-run hitter. There are no parks so large that the Babe ceases to be a menace. And his record for this season, let alone other years, is mute testimony to the fact that the fear, or respect, with which he is regarded is not unwarranted. Even though he may not hit, he is a perpetual hazard to the opposing pitcher and this accrues to the advantage of Ruth's mates. They profit by the tendency of many pitchers to ease up unconsciously after Ruth is disposed of or to worry themselves into trouble when the Babe is coming up.



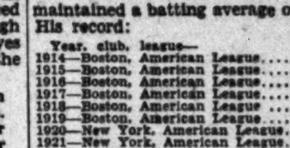
BABE GOOD FIELDER

So much attention is concentrated on Ruth's home-run deeds that his other baseball attainments are overlooked. Few ever have stopped to think that Ruth need take lessons from no man on the catching of fly balls. Few ever stop to consider that he has baseball instinct. How often has he been caught in the act of making a throw to the wrong base? How often is he outguessed while running the bases? He simply knows the right thing to do whether it is on offense or defense, and most of his effort is calm and deliberate. When you figure he has the handicap of a peculiar build, too much weight above the hips, you almost marvel at the ease with which he gets about the premises.

Paul Warner's supremacy among the National League's right fielders is mainly due to hitting. Where Ruth is a powerful, free swinger with a keen eye, Waner is the type that adjusts himself on practically every pitch. A hurler with good control can make Ruth look bad at times, but it takes almost perfect control to keep the Pirate lad from breaking loose. He shifts his position at the plate continually and he's liable to hit whether you feed 'em to him inside, outside or through the middle of the pan. Sharp eyes and quick, powerful action in the wrists account for this.

Outside of hitting, Waner can be equaled by several men. Cuyler, for instance, is a far more accurate and longer thrower, vastly superior as a fielder whether it be ground or fly balls, and three to one better as a base runner. The same can be said of Heathcote. Waner is caught too often between the bases to be considered especially strong in this feature of attack. He is inclined to run blind after passing first base, either on his own hits or the hits of men following him in the batting order. However, this fault could be remedied to a certain extent by strict coaching at first or third.

Ruth first broke into the major league in 1914, when he was sold to the Boston Red Sox by Providence of the International League. He was sold to the New York Yankees in 1919 for a reported price of $125,000. In his fourteen years in the major leagues Ruth has maintained a batting average of .349. His record:



Year, club, league—	Ave.
1914—Boston, American League	.300
1915—Boston, American League	.315
1916—Boston, American League	.272
1917—Boston, American League	.325
1918—Boston, American League	.300
1919—Boston, American League	.322
1920—New York, American League	.376
1921—New York, American League	.378
1922—New York, American League	.315
1923—New York, American League	.393
1924—New York, American League	.378
1925—New York, American League	.290
1926—New York, American League	.372
1927—New York, American League	.356

Ruth has played in eight world's series, three with Boston and five with New York. In 1915 he appeared only once as a pinch hitter and failed to hit. The following year he failed to hit in five times at bat. His world's series record:

Year, club, league—	Ave.
1915—Boston, American League	.000
1916—Boston, American League	.000
1918—Boston, American League	.313
1921—New York, American League	.313

MANUSH TAKES BATTING LEAD

St. Louis Outfielder Shows Way in American

Heinie Hits .372; Runner-up Honor to Goslin

Hornsby Passes Paul Waner in Senior Circuit

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Heinie Manush, the slugging Brown outfielder, who led the American League hitters in 1926 and then dropped down below .300 last season, is certainly making up for his disastrous performance last year. Manush, who was traded by Detroit to St. Louis last winter, has been steadily climbing and when the American League averages were released today Heinie's name was on top with a .372 percentage.

GOOSE GOSLIN

Manush had a great week against Yankee and Red Sox pitchers, pounding out thirteen safeties, including two homers, a triple and three doubles, in twenty-three times at bat to go on top. "Goose" Goslin, who has been leading or runner-up for batting honors all during the season, is one point back of Manush with .371, while Lou Gehrig, who topped the pack for a while, is in third place with .369.

Over in the National League Rogers Hornsby put on a hitting spree during the past week and spurted into the lead past "Big Poison" Waner, the clouting Pittsburgh outfielder. Hornsby's average was announced as .383, while Waner's dropped a couple of points to .380.

WHAT EX-COASTERS ARE DOING IN THE MAJORS

Sept. 13.—Sheriff Blake hurled a four-hit game and the Chicago Cubs had little difficulty in defeating St. Louis in a game witnessed by 45,000 fans. Frank O'Doul hit safely twice as the New York Giants nosed out the Boston Braves, 7-6. Jim Elliott hurled a six-hit game and Brooklyn scored a shut-out win over the Phillies. Heinie Sand and Dave Bancroft both hit safely twice in this contest.

"SHERIFF" BLAKE

Sept. 14.—Paul Waner further increased his batting lead with three safe hits. Ted Lyons pitched Chicago to a win over St. Louis. Frank O'Doul was the batting star as the Giants won a double victory over Boston and advanced to within one game of St. Louis for the National League leadership.

Sept. 15.—Jim Welsh's single in the ninth inning aided New York to defeat Brooklyn. Paul Waner is batting .382 to lead all National League batsmen.

HUBBELL DEFEATS LEADERS

Giant Rookie Tames Foes to Cut Cardinal Lead to Single Contest

the world's series spoils without the slightest argument.

Hubbell aroused the crowd and spurred on his team-mates with the coolness and steadiness with which he went into the game under fire in the fifth inning succeeding Fred Fitzsimmons with the bases full, none out and Jim Bottomley, slugging first-sacker of the Cardinals, at bat. Here was a situation to tax the mettle of an Alexander or a Pennock, especially with so much at stake for both clubs. He couldn't quite get by Bottomley, who smacked out a single that brought in two runs and put the Cards in the lead. But the youthful portsider was as solidly steady as the Rock of Gibraltar after that. He struck out Chick Hafey, then scooped up Harper's rap to start a double play that killed this Cardinal rally.

Only once after that in the remaining four innings was Hubbell in trouble. Wilson and Maranville opened the sixth with successive singles, but the rally was stopped by a double play engineered by Lindstrom. The Cardinals rushed in a flock of reserves in the eighth and ninth, but they all looked alike to Hubbell, who exhibited beautiful control in fanning Blades in the eighth and Martin, another pinch hitter, in the ninth.

For the first five innings it was a see-saw battle, with the lead changing or the tally being tied a half-dozen times. Clarence Mitchell, veteran spitball artist, who started for the Cardinals, shared the fate of his rival, Fitzsimmons, by passing out of the picture in the fifth.

Jimmy Welsh and Andy Reese, thorns in Mitchell's side from the start, and pace setters of the Giant attack, finally put the skids under the veteran in the fifth, starting the attack that once more tied the score.

REESE HOMES

Reese's home run with Welsh on base in the first inning had supplied the opening fireworks, and the same pair helped put the Giants back in the lead in the third after Bottomley, Hafey and Wilson had collaborated to tie the score. The "poison pair" were right back at their job in the fifth, after the visitors had tied the count again in the fourth and taken the lead in the fifth. Their successive singles sent Mitchell to the showers and summoned Bill Sherdel to the rescue. Like Hubbell, Sherdel had scored a victory in Thursday's double-header. He twirled craftily, but couldn't quite get out of trouble. Welsh and Reese advanced on Mann's infield out, Welsh scored on Lindstrom's scratchy tap that Sherdel failed to handle and Reese tallied the tying run on Hogan's rap over second, on which Frisch made a remarkable stop.

After that the Cardinals couldn't touch Hubbell with any substantial results or stop the fighting young men of McGraw, who have their eye on the pennant and don't seem to care who knows it. Score:

Browns Are Beaten, 5-3, by Boston; First-Sacker Hits Two Homers

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 22. (AP)—Todt hit home runs in two consecutive innings today and the Boston Red Sox won the final game of the series from the St. Louis Browns, 5 to 3. Strelecki held the visitors scoreless in the first six innings. He weakened in the seventh when Todt hit his first homer, which was followed by two other Boston runs. Coffman replaced Strelecki in the eighth, in which Todt again hit for the circuit. Manush, one of the leading league batters, got a homer and a single in four times at bat. Score:

HOCKEY SCHEDULE MADE

MONTREAL, Sept. 22. (AP)—Adoption of the schedule for the season 1928-1929 and announcement that Pittsburgh would again have a major league hockey team, featured the forenoon session of the meeting of the board of governors for the National Hockey League here today.

SMITH'S TWO HOMERS AND SINGLE WIN FOR VITTMEN

fast ones up against the left-field wall, the ball caroming off the bricks right on the foul line. The ball bounded back away from Smith and Brubaker attempted to stretch his two-bagger into a triple. However, Smith ran down the pellet and whipped a perfect throw to Holley that just nipped Brubaker at third on a very close play. Fenton and Arlett followed with well-hit singles, but Brooks flied to Carlyle to end the inning.

Rhodes was not so fortunate in the seventh when the Oaks bunched three more hits with a walk for their two runs and took the lead. Lary led off by bouncing a single over second but was forced at second by Verges, whose attempt to sacrifice was frustrated by Holley's quick play. Verges went to second while Heath was taking care of Read's slow roller and then along came McEvoy with a Texas leaguer to center that brought Verges in to tie the score. Frazier walked and Brubaker came through with a hit to center that scored McEvoy. Lee smothered Fenton's pop fly for the third out.

The Stars got runners as far as first and third in the home half of the seventh but Wally Rehg, batting for Rhodes, forced Bassler at second to end the threat to knot the count.

SMITH TIES UP BATTLE

Hollywood tied it up in the eighth, which started out with Twombly getting an infield hit and continuing on to second when Lary's low throw to first bounded over Fenton's head into the stands. Holley bunted Twombly to third and then Lee was walked. Smith came through with a single to left and Twombly scampered over the plate with the tying tally. Carlyle hit into a double play to kill off the rally.

Hollywood gave McEvoy a scare in the ninth but Ivan Howard uncorked a bit of successful strategy that prevented any run-making. Mickey Heath opened the inning with a one-base shot to right and was sacrificed to second by Kerr. Bassler's infield out moved Heath to third. Howard then decided to pass Hulvey, who is a pretty tough guy up at the plate, and take a chance with Twombly, whose .318 average didn't in the least annoy the Acorn skipper. Twombly didn't give the second-guessers a chance to spout, hitting a high foul which Read caught right near the screen.

Skipper Vitt also had to try a bit of strategy in the tenth and he got by just as successfully as did Howard. After Hulvey had disposed of Frazier and Brubaker, Jack Fenton dropped a double on the left-field foul line. Arlett was naturally walked and Mandy Brooks was the third out on a pop fly to Lee.

McEvoy retired Holley and Lee in the Hollywood tenth and then along came Smith with his second homer to bring the contest to what the writing boys are inclined to call a dramatic finish.

Two for the price of one today, folks, and if the Stars can cop both of them they have a good chance to climb back into the thick of the second-half fight. Shellenback and McCabe are slated to start for the Sheiks, while Howard will probably use Boehler and Dumovich. Score:

Indianapolis Team Nears First Flag

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Indianapolis virtually clinched its first American Association pennant in eleven years today by squeezing out a 7-to-6 victory over Toledo while its only rival, Minneapolis, lost to Milwaukee, 3 to 6. With but tomorrow's double-header to play, the Indians lead by a game and a half.

Minneapolis has but one game left and must win it, while the Indians lose two games to gain a tie.

Art Kussman, De Lara Win in Net Play

Favorites won yesterday in the semifinal round of the Sycamore Grove tennis tournament. Jack De Lara defeated Paige, 6-3, 10-8, in a hard-fought match to reach the finals, while Art Kussman, lanky Occidental College net star, won from Ed Woodall, 6-1, 10-8.

Likewise in the men's doubles Kussman and Weesner and De Lara and Williams advanced. Kussman and Weesner at the expense of Paige and Robbins, while De Lara and Williams defeated Lester Stoeffen and Ned Wheldon.

Kussman meets De Lara in the finals for the singles title tomorrow at 2 o'clock. The two also meet again in the men's doubles finals scheduled for 3:30 o'clock.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS

De Lara defeated Paige, 6-3; 6-2.
Kussman defeated Woodall, 6-4; 10-8.
Kussman and Weesner defeated Paige and Robbins, 2-6; 6-2; 6-3.
De Lara and Williams defeated Stoeffen and Wheldon, 6-3; 12-10.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE

Racquette Club Tourney Starts

The Racquette Club's fourth annual municipal tennis tournament gets under way this morning at the club courts at Thirty-eighth and Compton.

All of last year's champions are entered, plus many more up, and coming Southland net stars. Last year's title-holders are as follows: Ned Wheldon in the men's singles, Gladys Patz in the women's singles, Alice Bart and Leonard Dworkin in the mixed doubles and Ned Wheldon and partner in the men's doubles.

BAKER TAKES COUNT

RANTOUL (Ill.) Sept. 22. (AP)—The pile-driving punches of Les Marriner found their mark again last night and he stopped Oscar Baker of California in the third round of their scheduled ten-round match at Chanute Field. The Californian's seconds tossed in the towel to stop the bombardment. Marriner weighed 188 and Baker 189.

SENATORS UPSET BY MISSIONS

Bells Score Eight Runs for Early Lead and Win by 9-to-3 Count

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (AP)—The Missions walked away with Sacramento here today by a score of 9 to 3. The Bells took the lead in the first with four runs, followed in the next frame with an equal number, and topped off the contest by adding one more in the seventh.

McDaniel helped the Missions win with a homer, which swelled the total of hits to fifteen acquired by the winners. Score:

Indians Nosed Out by Seals

SEATTLE, Sept. 22. (AP)—Val Glynn held Seattle hitless today until the fifth inning and then again tightened until the eighth when he allowed the Indians to force over a run on two singles and a double. Hal Rhyne, Seal shortstop, saved a tie game in the eighth when he made a running catch to retire the Indians. Dave Barbee's homer in the ninth again brought Seattle within striking distance but the Indian hitters were unable to keep up the example set by Barbee and the game ended, 3 to 2, in San Francisco's favor. NEW YORK CLUB RETAINS TWO-GAME LEAD IN RACE

Thomas Hurls White Sox to 5-2 Triumph

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Alphonse Thomas pitched masterful ball today to score the first victory of his big league career over the Yankees by 5 to 2. The pennant race was not affected by the result, as the Athletics were defeated in Detroit, 5 to 4, enabling the leading Yankees to retain their margin of two full games.

MILLER HUGGINS

Henry Johnson essayed the box duties for the champions, but gave way under a four-run fusillade in the fourth. He was followed in turn by Fred Heimach, Myles Thomas and George Pipgras. The White Sox could do nothing with the southpaw slants of Heimach, but quickly pounced upon Myles Thomas after the St. Paul southpaw had given way to a pinch batsman in the eighth. Pipgras limited the damage to one run.

The Sox gave Johnson warning of what was to happen by belting him solidly in the second and the third innings, though not hard enough to affect the run column. Al Thomas never was in any real danger after he obtained a four-run lead, although a pass and two hits gave the Yankees two runs in the sixth.

The Yankee cripples, Ruth and Lazzeri, were in action once more, and both remained in the game until the end. Ruth, as a matter of fact, known always as a "quick mender," showed no signs of having wrenched his knee yesterday, but Lazzeri was cautious in the movement of his injured right shoulder. Score:

Tigers Upset Connie Mack's Outfit Again

DETROIT, Sept. 22. (AP)—The pennant road became even more difficult for the tiring forces of Cornelius McGillicuddy here today when the Tigers shaded the old man's Athletes by 5 to 4, in the final game between the two teams this season. The victory not only gave Detroit two out of three from the contenders, but prevented the Macks from gaining on the Yankees, who held their lead of two games even though defeated by the White Sox in Chicago, 5 to 2.

CONNIE MACK

The Tigers routed Rube Walberg in the very first inning with a four-run assault, and although they were able to do little against George Earnshaw through the rest of the game, run off Earnshaw as a result of Cochrane's error in the sixth, and this proved to be the ultimate margin by which the game was decided.

Vic Sorrell held the Macks hitless until the fifth when they began nibbling at him one run at a time. The crisis was reached in the eighth when the bases were filled with only one out on passes to Cochrane and Miller and a single by Foxx. Owen Carroll then was called to the box, and he limited the Athletic profit from this promising situation to one run, scored on Hauser's sacrifice fly to Rice.

In the course of the game, Connie Mack lifted Hale, returned Foxx to third base and sent Hauser in at first. Hale's fielding had been indifferent. The score:

Polo Contest on Tap Today

Polo rivalry is becoming so intense down at the Uplifters' ranch that the players have been practicing daily during the past week for today's match. Out to avenge last Sunday's defeat by the Uplifters Snowy Baker has assembled a new line-up for his Pirates. Lyle Puckett is riding at one instead of four, Frank Dazey at two, Snowy himself at three and C. B. Brunson at four. Although Eric Pedley will not play with the Uplifters today, young Will Rogers will endeavor to show polo lovers that he can play a game worthy of his famous dad. He made a brilliant debut for a 16-year-old boy last Sunday and he shows rare promise. He is a real horseman and his mallet play is surprising. He rides at one. A. W. Little, Jr., of Minneapolis, at two, Jim Colt at three and Dr. Wilson at four.

The game starts promptly at 3 o'clock at the Uplifters' field in Rustic Canyon, Santa Monica. Immediately preceding the game there will be a mile-and-a-half steeplechase as an added attraction. Such crack riders as Eric Pedley, Jim Colt, Snowy Baker and twelve others will compete over a fifteen-jump course. Snowy Baker and his mount, Raffles, won the last steeplechase and again rank as favorites.

Charley Seaver Clips Two Strokes Off Par to Lead Southland Juniors at

ROUNDS STIFF COURSE IN 69

Youngsters Feature Third Day of Tournament

Mixed Foursomes Scheduled on Program Today

Leon Keller's 144 Outshines Large Field So Far

had a 79. Seaver and Sangster scored as follows:

Par (out)	544	343	444—35
Seaver	443	363	434—34
Sangster	544	343	555—38
Par (in)	454	434	354—36—71
Seaver	434	434	344—35—69
Sangster	464	434	355—38—76

Seaver, like Keller in the senior division, is way out in front. The young Los Angeles Country Club golfer is 4 up on par, his nearest competitor being 5 down.

Unless the unexpected happens today, when many low handicappers will play their final eighteen holes, Keller will annex first place, 1 up on par for the thirty-six holes.

W. L. "Bill" Jeffries of Girard turned in a 76 yesterday, giving him an aggregate of 158. He is 9 down. Bill had a 40 going out, but came back in par figures.

His card:

Jelliffe (out)	554	444	445—40
(in)	445	443	354—36—76

Jack Gaines, former Los Angeles city champion, also failed to beat the course. He took a 77 for his first eighteen holes.

The tournament will wind up today with mixed foursomes featuring the day's play. Matches will start at 11 o'clock.

Following the two-ball mixed foursome event in the afternoon, winners in all events will be awarded their trophies, including the special prizes offered for the Florida relief sweepstakes.

The Florida sweepstakes has assumed great importance in the tournament. Ben Neal and Dick Smith figured yesterday that approximately $500 in cash would be realized from the play.

One of the most sought-after prizes is a set of two old English prints given by Mrs. Victor Herman. These will go to the married couple turning in the lowest net score.

Ollie Painter will be in charge at the first tee.

CHARLEY FLETCHER TAKES NEW JOB

Charley Fletcher, veteran golfer and instructor, has resigned his post at Desmonds, where he has been for the past year in the capacity of consulting golf specialist.

Charley announces that he has accepted the directorship of the new Hollywood Day and Evening Outdoor Golf Academy.

ARCHERY GOLF PLANNED AT RIVIERA

Don S. Duncan, director of archery at the Riviera Country Club, has some interesting ideas on archery golf, which may soon be tried out at the Santa Monica Canyon club. In which case members will likely be equipped with tin hats.

The archery department was recently installed at Riviera. The range is located near No. 1 tee. Bonarrow, or archery golf, is not new on the Coast as matches have been held at San Diego as well as other sections.

Archery golf can be played by two or four persons over a course from 2000 to 3000 yards in length. It will be interesting to watch development of the sport.

HAMILL WINS TOURNEY AT FLINTRIDGE

Kennedy Hamill finished even with par to win the match play at the Flintridge Country Club yesterday. Three tied for second place, 1 down. They were S. H. Baker, W. B. Pinney and W. E. Taverner. H. G. Schneider and H. B. Kelly — 2 down.

HELEN LAWSON

Brilliant young Wilshire Country Club golfer, who will play in the mixed foursomes at Riviera today. Miss Lawson is one of the finest of Southern California's feminine stars, and former Del Monte women's champion

TERRIBLES BATTLE AT BRENTWOOD

Merrill Wins First Prize in Tournament With 144; Two Tie for Second

Guests of Ned Dawson and Charley Russell, thirty-three members of the Terrible Twenty Tournaments enjoyed the Brentwood Country Club course to the limit on Thursday, as well as a near-banquet served between the morning and afternoon rounds.

Thirty-six holes at medal was the play, and some of the Terribles were hot in spite of the cool breeze right off the ocean, which is one of Brentwood's many desirable features.

Les Merrill won the silver cup emblematic of first prize for the tournament with 144 for the thirty-six holes. Fred Hambright and George M. Thompson tied for second prize with 150. This tie will be played off at the next tournament.

George Gartz won the play-off from T. K. Partridge for first prize in the last tournament.

Les Merrill, George Gartz and Fred Hambright placed first, second and third in the sweepstakes for the morning round, while Charley Pearson, George M. Thompson and Les Merrill divided the sweepstakes for the afternoon round. as follows:

T. K. Partridge and Ed Westberg tied for the blind bogey.

Scores for the thirty-six holes are

Les Merrill	72-72—144
Fred Hambright	76-74—150
George Thompson	79-71—150
George Gartz	74-77—151
Charles Pearson	83-69—152
Earl Heber	78-75—153

FLORIDA SWEEPSTAKES HELD AT CALIFORNIA

The Florida sweepstakes held yesterday at the California Country Club resulted in fourteen golfers tying for first place. A large entry turned out for the event

Those tying were as follows: C. A. Morey, J. S. T. O'Conner, A. P. Carmies, A. G. Lind, R. B. McLaughlin, A. E. Houghton, H. M. Ross, G. R. Hurst, E. J. Clement, H. W. Atterbury, Clyde Marshall, J. P. Hays, J. O. Crawford and Norman Robinson.

FLORIDA GOLFERS ADVOCATE PLAYING GAME BY MOONLIGHT

TAMPA, Sept. 22. (AP)—Persons seeking extra thrills in golf might try playing by moonlight, for Florida golfers say it is far from being as foolish as it sounds. Gordon Gibbons, former Florida amateur champion, helped their contention along by turning in a card of 75 after playing eighteen holes between 9 p.m. and midnight. Playing the par 70 course, Gibbons went out of bounds only twice. He had one birdie, was two over par on one hole, one over on three and equalled par figures on thirteen holes. Scores made by three companions were 76, 81 and 83. Recently four professionals attempted to break 40 on the first nine holes of a course for which par was 36, shooting after sundown. All failed to break the mark, but one of them equalled it. They were somewhat handicapped when clouds partly obscured the moon, and they had to equip their caddies with flashlights to mark the spots where the balls landed.

PUBLIC LINKS IN RAPID RISE

Southern California Leads Nation in Mushroom Growth of Pay as You Play Courses; Brookside Park latest Addition to Fast Growing Local Layouts

BY ONE UPPE

One of the most interesting and far-reaching developments in golf during the past few years has been the rapid rise of the public course in popular favor.

The idea of the public golf course is nothing new, the Van Cortlandt Park course in New York City dating back thirty-three years to 1895, while the Franklin Public course in Boston was opened in 1896. By far the greatest progress, however, has been made during the past eight years.

Statistical information for the year 1926-27, issued by the public links section of the United States Golf Association this year, throws an interesting light on the subject. It indicates primarily that Southern California is the fastest growing public links section in the country, while the entire Pacific Coast is showing great activity along that direction.

SAN DIEGO OLDEST

The San Diego municipal layout is the oldest public links in Southern California, and the second oldest in California, having been opened in 1917. Los Angeles broke into the public course business in 1923, when the Warren G. Harding Memorial course was opened. The Woodrow Wilson course came next in 1926. From July 1, 1926, to June 30, 1927, 117,705 rounds of golf were played over the Harding course, while 52,580 rounds were played over the Wilson layout during the six months from January to June, 1927.

Since that time local public courses have been sprouting up like mushrooms, and all are operating successfully. With a few months' time, the Sunset Fields course No. 1 was followed by course No. 2; Montebello Park's new course rates with the finest private courses in Southern California; the city fathers of Santa Monica opened their new municipal course a couple of months ago and play has been exceptionally brisk; Western avenue is another recent addition to the fold, and now the new eighteen-hole pay-as-you play course at Brookside Park, Pasadena, is about to be thrown open to the public. In addition, Long Beach has a fine municipal course, opened in 1925, on which will be played a part of the Long Beach $5000 open in December.

Ten representative California courses show an average cost of 61.4 cents a round, which is an exceptionally low figure. Fees range from 25 cents a round to $1.

San Francisco's two courses enjoy tremendous popularity. In 1926, 179,444 rounds of golf were played over the Lincoln Park course, which has sand greens. The Harding Park Memorial links with grass greens registered 110,947 rounds.

CALIFORNIA SECOND

The public course in Seattle is also heavily played. It boasts grass greens and cocoa mat tees. Rounds played in 1926 numbered 175,314.

Illinois leads all States in the number of public courses with twenty-six, the majority of which are around or near Chicago. California is given twelve, but now has seventeen. Both New York and Florida have sixteen, Michigan has fifteen and both West Virginia and North Dakota, thirteen.

In another two or three years at the present rate it is likely that California will be leading the field.

RANKIN COPS SAN GABRIEL MATCH-PLAY TOURNEY

L. D. Rankin, one of the foremost golfers in the Southern California Dental Golf Association, won the match-play-against-par at the San Gabriel Country Club yesterday, 76-6—2 up Second place in Class A went to S. Frank Condon, 81-8—1 up.

E. B. Hackler won Class B honors, 85-18—3 up. L. A. Palmer, 93-20—2 up, and W. P. Battelle, 87-18—2 up, tied for second place.

MRS. JONES PASSES UP TITLE PLAY

Brentwood Star Unable to Compete in National Golf Tournament

Mrs. Dan Jones, former State golf champion, will not be present to tee off tomorrow in the women's national golf tournament at Hot Springs, Vir. This announcement, made by Mrs. Jones herself, comes as something of a shock to golf enthusiasts of Southern California who were backing Mrs. Jones as a heavy favorite in the play.

MRS. DAN JONES

Various obligations and responsibilities in Los Angeles were given by Mrs. Jones as her reason for not competing in the tournament in which are entered such stars as Mrs. Harry Pressler, Mrs Gregg Lifur, both of Los Angeles; Virginia Van Wie, Glenna Collett, Mrs. Lee Mida and others of the East.

Although the loss of Mrs. Jones will undoubtedly be keenly felt, Southern California is being represented by ten players who together form the strongest sectional group in the country. They are Mrs. Harry Pressler, Mrs. Gregg Lifur, Mrs. Kathleen Reynolds, a last-minute entry, Miss Kathleen Wright, Mrs. Hunter Robbins, Mrs. Kryle Bellew, Miss Esther Klink, Mrs. Curt Rosenthal, Mrs. Roy Greene and Mrs. Gray Cowan.

Mrs. Anne Trabue, chairman of the woman's auxiliary of the Southern California Golf Association, will be present on the course during the play, but is there primarily as California's representative for bringing the 1929 women's tournament to the Coast. With her she carries the bids of the Los Angeles Country Club, Bel-Air, Riviera, Midwick and Monterey.

"Young" Stribling has scored 103 knockouts during his career in the prize ring.

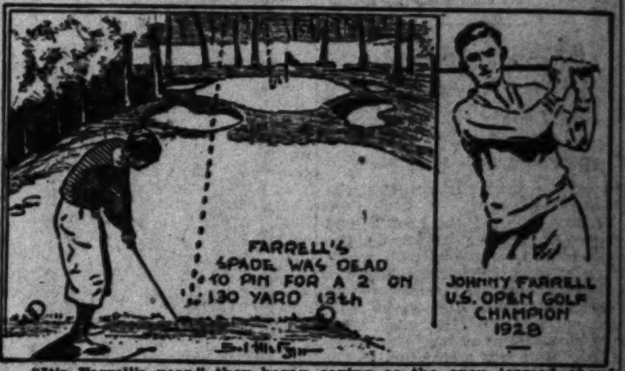
JOHNNY FARRELL WON OPEN BY PLAYING SHORT HOLES BETTER THAN BOBBY JONES---METZGER

BY SOL METZGER

GENE SARAZEN told me after he won the 1922 open golf title that if he had the shots of Johnny Farrell no one would ever defeat him. Johnny did have them at the time, no doubt as to that, and he has had them ever since. But it took the intervening years to temper his competitive soul, to make him a daring, bold linksman able to play them as calmly under duress as during a friendly round. Today, Johnny stands out as the open champion, a title won in a thirty-six-hole play-off against the greatest golfer of all time Bobby Jones, over as testing a course as there is and under conditions that demanded all the knowledge of strokes young Johnny possessed as well as all the will any man could summon

FARRELL BEST ON GREEN

They say, and there is little question that they are right, that Farrell is the last word when it comes to playing on and around the green. A year ago he proved this by taking about every important open title, except the national, that he entered. Then last winter came his miracle round of 63 in the La Gorce open, a round that was a mingling of sound and super golf, of holed out chips, of long putts that reached their mark of supreme play from every tee to every cup.



FARRELL'S SPADE WAS DEAD TO PIN FOR A 2 ON 130 YARD 13th
JOHNNY FARRELL U.S. OPEN GOLF CHAMPION 1928
Sol Metzger

"It's Farrell's year," they began saying as the open loomed ahead this spring. It most certainly was. I recall following him at Olympia Fields that first day when he was partnered with Bobby Jones The great crowds came to see Jones. They overlooked his master and came within a stroke of losing the title for the handsome Irish lad in the pell mell rush to watch the Atlantan. A milling mob spoiled shots for him all that day. Thus Farrell was forgotten as his score had mounted high. Then came his finish the next day, the birdie at the eighteenth that gave Johnny the tie with Bobby and caused the play-off.

A mob greeted him again, pressed about him to seize his hand, to slap him on the back and to photograph him in a dozen poses. "Get him away from this crowd," I told his brother Jim. Jim hiked him off to a quiet room and kept him quiet until the next day, when his biggest test was to come.

JONES LOSES SHORT HOLE

The matter with Jones, the question as to whether Farrell was to make a small fortune out of his golf for the ensuing year, all settled down to the last six holes of their afternoon round. Bobby got him a shot down at the par 4 twelfth, a hole that had been costly to Hagen, Sarazen and others on previous days. Then they climbed the steps to the tee of the 130-yard thirteenth, where Jones, holding the honor, laid one on the green but too far from the pin to insure a birdie.

No, you can't beat Johnny on the short holes. His game is tuned for them, his judgment of distance unfailing and his skill unmatched at playing them dead. He's a great golfer, as fine as they come and an even bet against anyone in the whole wide world.

Young Nationalista Says La Barba Never Able to Whip Him

HERE'S THE NEW NATIONALISTA

Young Nationalista's recent form after changing his style from a looping hitter to a stand-up boxer has earned him a match with Fidel La Barba. They clash at the Olympic Tuesday night at 123 pounds.

MASTRO BOXES PIELA

Featherweights Top Friday Night's Main Event at Hollywood American Legion Stadium

Earl Mastro, the young featherweight, who recently fought Fidel La Barba, goes against Jimmy Piela in his first Hollywood American Legion Stadium main event. Piela is a Hollywood product and was going fairly well until he hooked up with Young Nationalista, who set Jimmy back a few notches.

The Hollywood fight card features mostly youngsters who have class and color. They haven't reached the championship stage, but they are only a few paces from the leaders in their divisions. According to boxing men, Earl Mastro is a championship prospect. The boy is young in the game but he has all the earmarks (not cauliflower) of being a great fighter. Abe Atell, once featherweight champion, has seen Mastro in action and he likes the kid. Atell knows fighters, as he had to fight better featherweights than we have in the game today.

If he is to retain his high rating in this city, Mastro will have to win from Piela. The eastern kid is fast and clever. He hasn't a one-punch knockout like Piela, but he will be a moving target which proves so hard to hit and that's where Piela's grief begins.

The preliminaries have been carefully selected my Manager Tom Gallery. Jackie Mandell showed lots of class in beating Benny Purrell twice at the stadium. Mandell will meet Delos (Kid) Williams in the semi-wind-up. Williams is a veteran at the game but not old in years. He will be the toughest fighter Mandell has ever fought and the outcome will be watched with interest.

In the special event, Johnny Albin meets Vearl Whitehead. They are youngsters who have in the past given satisfaction and are working their way to the top.

Jack O'Brien will battle Jesse Hobson in one of the four-rounders and Tony Bevo fights Frank Delgado in the curtain-raiser.

COLIMA DRAWS IN BOUT AT PHOENIX

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Billy Rogers of Phoenix and Bert Colima, Whittier (Cal.) middleweight, fought ten fast rounds to an unpopular draw here last night. Newspaper men and ringside critics gave Rogers five rounds, three to Colima and called the others even. The verdict of the judges and referee was greeted with boos by one of the largest fight crowds ever gathered here.

Colima seemed unable to get started in the early rounds, Rogers carrying the fight most of the time and continually beating his opponent to the punches.

According to press score cards, Rogers won the first, fourth, sixth, seventh and eighth rounds, Colima took the third, ninth and tenth with the second and fifth even.

Fans Flock to Pomona Races

POMONA, Sept. 21. — The largest crowd of all time was present at the closing days' matinee horse races of the Los Angeles County Fair this afternoon, the estimate being placed conservatively at 8000.

The main grand stand and bleachers were closed at 1 o'clock, one-half-hour before the start of the races, while the bleachers filled by 12:30 p.m. Late comers were forced to seek gaps in the mass of humanity that grouped themselves around the rail the entire distance around the half-mile track. No one was disappointed today, the races were all over par, and close to record time was run in all events. The feature race of the day, the 2:20 trot, was won in handy fashion by Miss Helen Davis driving her great trotter, Palocres, in straight heats, but it was a race in all heats, with J. P. Quinn behind Forest Wayland crowding her at all times.

FIRST RACE—2:10 pace; purse, $1410:

Hal J. Logan (C. R. June).....	4	5	4
Lord Silk (G. Machado)	2	2	2
Borden McKinney (P. H. Lillie)	5	3	3
Colonel Pointer (H. Hellman)..	1	1	1
Little Bear (C. F. Silva)......	3	4	5

Summary—Colonel Pointer, first; Lord Silk, second; Borden McKinney, third; Little Bear, fourth; Hal J. Logan, fifth. Time, 2:08.

SECOND RACE—2:20 trot; purse, $1400:

Loie Sands (J. C. Wallace)......	4	3	4
Peter H. (J. A. Alshouse)......	5	5	D
Forrest Wayland (J. P. Quinn)..	2	2	2
Palocres (Helen Davis)..........	1	1	1
Miss Guy Great (F. E. Ward)..	3	4	3

Summary—Palocres, first; Forrest Wayland, second; Miss Guy Great, third; Loie Sands, fourth; Peter H., fifth. Time, 2:10½.

THIRD RACE; free-for-all trot; purse, $700:

Northern King (C. R. June)....	2	2	2
Harry I. (G. Machado).........	1	1	1

Summary—Harry I., first; Northern King, second. Time, 2:08½.

FOURTH RACE—Running, four and one-half furlongs; purse, $200: Maryland (Snodgrass) first, Shasta Rapids (Thompson) second, Ida Newell (Ross) third, Valor (Buckley) fourth. Also ran: Golden Stirrup (Roberts,) Pat Roach (Lyons.) Time, 0:56½.

FIFTH RACE—Running, six and one-half furlongs; purse, $150; Falcon D. (Snodgrass) first, Voorflor (Buckley) second, Marble Arch (Evans) third, Red Planet (Burke) fourth. Also ran: Royal Gorge (Russell,) Los Trancos (Roberts,) Running Link (Studley,) Big Wig (Ross.) Time, 1:25.

SIXTH RACE—Running, one and one-sixteenth miles; purse, $200: Watershot (Buckley) first, Chilliwack (Roberts) second, China Rose (Burke) third. Time, 1:52.

PLAYOFF DETAILS TO BE DISCUSSED SOON

Representatives of the four first-division clubs of the Pacific Coast Baseball League will meet in San Francisco, the 26th inst., to prepare for a possible play-off. This announcement was made here yesterday by Harry A. Williams, president of the league.

Should San Francisco win the second half there will be no play-off, but the meeting is called to provide for all possible eventualities. Two or three tentative schedules will be drawn.

ESHOE FLINGERS READY

tered in the tourney are Robert Nunn of Oxnard, State champ in 1923-24-25; Dean Brown of Riverside, winner of the title in 1926, and S. L. Hiatt of Long Beach, defending champion.

There are nine events scheduled. Tuesday, the 25th inst., is the last day for making entries, according to Manager Krinbill.

LACK QUARTERS IN NORTHWEST

Dearth of Signal Callers to Hamper Coaches

Hollingbery Misses Meeker at Washington State

Guttormsen's Successor is Problem for Bagshaw

PORTLAND (Or.) Sept. 22.—Funny how these football problems come up in bunches. Often there is a year of good teams or a year of poor teams in an entire district, and when they have weaknesses these weaknesses are frequently in the same department.

GEORGE GUTTERMSON

All of which is to say that several Coast Conference teams in the Pacific Northwest are worried about the same thing this year—a lack of quarterbacks and field generals. The call for quarterbacks is going up from Washington, Idaho and Washington State. The Oregon Aggies and Oregon both have their veteran keymen back and right now the Aggies seem to be the best fixed in this department of any team in the Northwest.

Baggy at Washington sorely misses Guttormsen. It is hard to replace a pivot man of that caliber and the Huskies have no one in sight that promises to do it. Bob Buzard appears to be the most likely prospect, but there are several other holdovers and two or three of last year's freshmen who are out for the job. Baggy has a lot of problems on his hands this year, but not the least of them is the development of a quarter who can hold up against the competition that the Huskies must face.

Then there is Washington State where the departure of Butch Meeker has left a big hole. Tonkin, a sophomore, is a promising possibility there, while Meeker had three understudies, Buckley, Linden and Luck, all of whom have returned to school. There is a pretty contest for Butch's berth, but it is possible that no one of them will fill it.

Hollingbery has intimated that he may shift Ted Rohwer, his flashy half, to quarter, and it would not be surprising if this were the solution. Rohwer would make a great quarter and the only question is whether he would be more useful to the team there or at half.

Erb is the third coach who is casting about for just the right quarter. Red Jacoby will be greatly missed at Idaho. Erb has a weighty team and he could get along with a fairly light man at quarter, if he can find just the right one. That is the main thing they are trying to settle on the Moscow campus right now.

The two Oregon schools have worries of their own, but the quarterback position is not among them. Howard Maple is back at O.A.C., so that Schissler right now undoubtedly has the best quarterback in the North. The Aggies' play this year will be developed around Maple, who includes among his qualifications ability as a star passer. Ira Woodie will probably hold his old berth at quarter at Oregon. Woodie is playing his third year and can hardly be dislodged this season. Nevertheless McEwan has a fine reserve man in Parks, who was field captain for the freshmen last year. Parks is the logical successor to Woodie next year and undoubtedly will be used considerably this season as a reserve quarter.

All in all the lack of quarterbacks is the most serious deficiency noted on Northwest squads, although there are several others. For instance there is the problem of ends at Oregon, where it was thought that all of the regulars would be missing. Now word has been received that Ted Pope probably will be back. If he is, McEwan will have one veteran wingman who can hold his own in almost any competition, but it takes more than one good end or one set of ends to complete a strong team these days. It may be remarked that Baggy at Washington is also giving out word that he could use a few more good ends than he can yet discern in the material on hand.

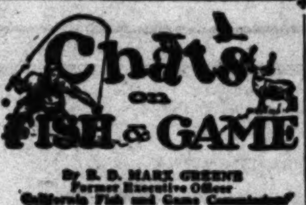
Mat Champ Due Here This Week

Ed "Strangler" Lewis, world's heavyweight wrestling champion, who has been training in one of the lumber camps of Wisconsin for nearly two weeks getting in condition after his two months' tour of Europe, will arrive in Los Angeles within the next few days to complete his workouts for his title match with Joe Malcewicz at the Olympic, October 3.

STRANGLER LEWIS

This match will be Lewis's first since he returned from Europe, and it probably will be his biggest and most important of the year. In Malcewicz he meets one of the greatest 200-pound wrestlers who has stepped on the mat in the last ten years. He has demonstrated his ability to the fans of Southern California in six matches. Three of his opponents have had to be carried from the ring after being thrown with a backward body slam, Malcewicz's winning hold.

Nick Lutze was the last victim When he failed to regain consciousness in the ring, and later in the dressing-room, where he was carried on a stretcher, he was taken to the Receiving Hospital, where it was found that he was suffering from several torn ligaments in the neck and concussion of the brain.



Chats on Fish & Game
By B. D. MARX GREENE
Former Executive Officer
California Fish and Game Commission

BY B. D. MARX GREENE

Former Executive Officer California Fish and Game Commission

(Mr. Greene's articles will appear weekly in this paper. He will answer questions on any fish and game topic. Address him care of Sports Editor, this paper. The reply will be either direct or in this column.)

Time rolls along. It seems only yesterday that the duck season closed and now guns are being oiled and hunting paraphernalia overhauled for the opening day of a new season of the sport which seems to give Californians such a thrill. I presume, since everybody is wetting his whistle and practising his duck calls, that the wetting of the whistle is being done strictly according to Hoyle in these prohibition days.

Duck hunting, we hope, will be good this year. The commercial clubs have been taken in hand by the State authorities and after the experiences of last year I do not believe that hunters will be disappointed in receiving proper accommodations when they reserve in advance. The evil of commercial duck clubs in the past has been that they have oversold for the number of blinds on the grounds and every year disgusted parties, arriving after a long and expensive trip, have found no place to shoot and no redress possible.

RESTRICTED

The last session of the Legislature put the so-called commercial clubs under the jurisdiction of the Fish and Game Commission which has prescribed drastic rules to govern their operations; chief among them is the one requiring the club not to accept hunters unless they have sufficient blinds to accommodate them and another governs the numbers of days in the week on which shooting may be had.

As this is the first of our articles about the duck situation, it probably will interest you to know of the deliberations and arguments on this question at the meeting of the Western Association of Fish and Game Commissioners held in Seattle recently. This session was held jointly with the International Association of game officials.

FOR PROTECTION

Questions of limit and season played no part in the discussion. All concentrated on and gave their best thoughts and opinions to the creation of game refuges, particularly as the same affect migratory waterfowl. The big problem which concerned these men who are entrusted with the conservation and perpetuation of our game was not the actual toll now being taken by the hunter, but the method of compensating for the ravages caused in the numbers of our ducks from other reasons, notably the drainage of former flooded areas where the ducks used to congregate, rest and breed.

The passage of the Phipps bill opens the way by giving Federal aid to our first important duck refuge on the Bear River marshes in Utah. Every conservation agency in the country is now working wholeheartedly for the passage by Congress of the amended Norbeck bill which authorizes the appropriation annually by the Federal government of $1,000,000 for the establishment of further refuges.

Question—Why is it that commercial fishing of salmon and bass is not permitted on Saturdays and Sundays?

Answer—That is part of the conservation program of the State which insists, particularly in the case of fresh water spawning fish, that enough of the run must be allowed to escape capture in its progress upstream so as to be sure to replenish the supply. Size limits and net restrictions help along this line, but there must be a certain period during the spawning run when the fish may proceed upstream entirely unmolested.

Q.—Are lobsters caught in Northern California?

A.—No. This species of fish does not seem to thrive in the colder waters along the Northern California coast. They are found to some extent along the southern areas, but the greater portion of our supply is brought in from Mexican waters.

Q.—Can a county make a law shortening the season allowed by the Legislature for any variety of game or fish? I have particular reference to an ordinance framed in one county closing down on the quail season.

A.—No. When our constitutional provision was adopted giving the Legislature the right to divide the State into fish and game districts and to prescribe seasons and methods of taking fish and game, the Supreme Court was called upon to construe the power of counties to enact ordinances further restricting the right to hunt or fish. The court said in no unmeasured language that the sole power to frame fish and game laws vested in the Legislature of the State and that the counties had no jurisdiction whatever.

Q.—Under what authority can the State Board of Health prohibit the taking of mussels during certain portions of the year when the Legislature has not prescribed a season?

A.—A law was enacted in 1917 which made it unlawful to take oysters, clams, mussels and other shell fish from any tidal waters from which the taking shall be determined to be a menace to health. The State Board of Health was given the authority to make an examination and determine whether such taking constituted a menace. This is a very wise provision and was called into force very energetically by the State Board of Health at the time of the epidemic which resulted last year from the taking of mussels which had been poisoned from some very obscure source.

Victorville to Stage Speedway Program Today

With more than fifty leading drivers and riders entered in the all-day automobile and motorcycle racing program to be held today on the speedway at Victorville, officials and citizens of that little desert town are preparing to care for one of the largest crowds ever assembled there, according to information reaching here. The mile track has been thoroughly reconditioned and is reported in splendid shape.

The motorcycle races, which are to be held under sanction of the Western Federation of Motorcyclists, will start at 10 o'clock in the morning. The automobile events will get under way at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The galaxy of stars in the automobile division will include Melvon McKee and E. C. Woodward of San Bernardino, bitter rivals for racing honors; Johnny Thiele and Ernest Chamberlain of Riverside, ancient enemies of the speedway; Cliff Wilson, Long Beach; Bill Bundy, Bryn Mawr; Jimmy Sharp, Los Angeles; Fred Cooper, Los Angeles; Francis Quinn, Pasadena; Speed Hinckley, Pasadena; Barney Kleophfer, Los Angeles, and Ted Mahoney, San Pedro.

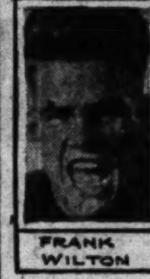
SELECT WILTON AS CARD STAR

Fumble Champion is Hailed as Coming Sensation

Expected to Replace Hyland in Stanford Ranks

Old Miscues Said No Bar to Rise to Prominence

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 22.—Who will be the stars of the 1928 Stanford eleven? Who will be the fair-haired, fleet-footed boy or boys that will break away from all tacklers and dash to touchdowns and enviable positions on all the sports pages?



FRANK WILTON

Dick Hyland was the chief spectacle Pop Warner had to offer last year, and now, while the sweat-shirted toiler work out each day, bystanders are saying that Frank Wilton, Hyland's understudy and rival last year, will supply the thrills that shifty Dick once provided. One photographer recently posed Hyland surrendering his old football shoes to Wilton, clearly indicating that the latter now has an open field to fame.

SCORNS HYLAND

Wilton, however, has no desire to fill Hyland's shoes, although both gentlemen wear No. 7s. Frank is an independent youth and wants to get there under his own motive power. Although he is studying journalism, the writing side of the profession appeals to him less than to Hyland. Wilton wants to be an advertising man.

The only thing that Stanford followers think stands in the way of Wilton becoming a great halfback is his fumbling at critical times. The boy actually fumbled but three times last year—far more infrequently than some of his mates—yet each time the boot nearly cost Stanford the contest. The first erratum was in the St. Mary's game, the second in the U.S.C. fracas, and the third in the Pittsburgh game. Each time the bobble led to a touchdown for the opposition.

After he had made the boner that allowed Pitt to score, Wilton began to realize his life wouldn't be worth much on a Stanford football field thereafter. But the break soon came for him, and when Bob Sims was tackled and fumbled on the 5-yard line, Wilton snatched the ball and, reversing the field, made the touchdown which put the Cards out in front. He redeemed himself then; this year he says that his days of crucial fumbles are gone by.

DRURY FUMBLED

How great a part fumbles can play in making or unmaking a player's reputation was seen in the U.S.C.-Stanford thriller here last fall. Morley Drury, Trojan captain, fumbled the ball behind the line of scrimmage. Wilton and Walt Heinecke, center, had the jump on the rest of the pack and an open field to the goal. Both tried to take the ball, however, with the result that they were downed on the getaway. Had either converted the fumble into a touchdown, it is possible that Drury's all-American chances might have gone glimmering.

Wilton holds no grudge against Drury, however, as his 1927 rival does. He admits it is perhaps just as well that that fumble turned out to be no more costly to Drurp than it did. Frank is a great sportsman, and although he plays the game hard, with the sole purpose of winning, he doesn't holler when he has to take the short end. He took the short end all last year, but this is another year—his.

Joe Anderson Due Today for Hudkins Fight

Joe Anderson—premier fighter from Kentucky and runner-up to Ace Hudkins and Mickey Walker in the middleweight division—will arrive here at noon today for the best two-fisted battle that has been made in California this year.

The Hudkins-Anderson shot at the Olympic is getting a wide tumble among boxing fans and borders on to being another such fight as the Sergt. Sammy Baker duel, which drew $93,000 outdoors.

For a few hours last week there seemed to be a chance that the bout would be halted as an indoor show and that it would be taken outside for a ball park gigantic. But the ruffles on the waters calmed down and the match is definitely on indoors.

Boxing men estimate that the same bout, if staged in Wrigley Field, would draw a gate of $60,000 to $75,000. The Olympic is scaled so the "take" can be close to $40,000, which is quite sufficient to net profits all the way round.

The Olympic management announces that the tickets will be on sale Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock. The demand has mounted in reservations so that there is little doubt but what the show will be a financial success.

Fight fans are universal in thinking that Hudkins has picked on one of the toughest men in the division. It will be double tough for the Wildcat, since he has not been in the ring since last June, when he fought Mickey Walker in Chicago for the middleweight championship.

Anderson and Hudkins have signed to box at 160 pounds—the middleweight limit.

RABBIT PUNCHES

By PAUL LOWRY

A COMPARISON

FOR those who like to compare the musty past with the glorious present, some truly alarming disclosures can be made concerning the football turnouts at the University of Southern California within the past decade.

Take the year of our Lord 1919, for example, when "Gloomy Gus" Henderson flivvered down from Seattle with Leo Calland in "Gloomy's" hearse with a black plume at the masthead.

It was "Gloomy's" first year at the local institution, and by dint of much scurrying hither and thither Warren Bovard, who was very energetic in the days before he put on avoirdupois, managed to talk nearly twenty-two simple souls into reporting for varsity football practice.

His handsome assistant, Mr. "Hank" Bruce, grew a few more gray hairs in the process but he dug up enough weather-beaten old jerseys, trousers, sox, shoes, etc., to outfit the candidates.

These twenty-two warriors bold reported to Henderson with the self-assurance of real football players. "Gloomy" took one look at them and immediately reported to the press that they all came from Marblehead, Vt., and were trying to live up to their name.

"GLOOMY" IN FORM

"GLOOMY" said there wasn't a man on the squad that knew the difference between a forward pass and a complimentary ticket. He broke down and wept when he attempted to describe the situation. He said the line was so full of holes it would make a Swiss cheese blush with envy. The ends were called such because when you saw them play football you knew it was the end. Anyone could be sued for libel for calling the players next to the ends tackles. The only thing the guards could guard would be a piece of cheese not old enough to walk. The center was merely the center of gloom and sorrow.

Words failed "Gloomy" when he got around to the backs. He said they couldn't find a hole if it was as big as the entrance to the Second-street tunnel. He asked one back to try a punt, and the back replied he couldn't do it, but he could turn a cartwheel.

STUMPS HENRY

BUT the old order changeth.

In Howard Jones's fourth season—the tenth since "Gloomy Gus" took up the coaching cars at U.S.C.—we find twice as many backfield candidates—forty-four—as Henderson had for an entire squad. And there are some fifty linemen.

Forty-four backs! Think of that, you folks who remember the lumpy turf of old Bovard Field, the field that ran east and west with the funny bleachers on each side and the quaint press box at the foot.

I saw Henry Monohan, who has been catering to the railroad wants of Trojan athletic teams for a good many years, meditatively stroking his chin as he reflected on the situation the other day.

"Gosh, taint like it used to be," Henry solemnly declared.

ENOUGH FOR ALL

FORTY-FOUR backs!

Why, there's enough to give each of the seven colleges in the Southern California Conference a good backfield apiece and still have enough left over for a first-rate combination with three subs for every position.

The same situation exists in regard to linemen. Jones has so many aspirants on hand that it will be a month before he learns their first names.

But football is big business these days and big business requires plenty of pawns. University of Southern California has them this year—in quantity—and if a couple of unknown heroes aren't developed out of that vast assemblage I miss my guess.

LITTLE FEET

ALTHOUGH it may mean little or nothing on the open market the hoof size of this year's Thundering Herd is sub par.

Mr. Arnold Eddy stopped to say hello the other day and he was in great mental distress over the situation.

"I don't know what to make of the matter," said Mr. Eddy, who is responsible for seeing that all the football warriors at U.S.C. are properly clothed and shod for action.

"Here I go and order my customary assortment of shoes and now I find that I haven't enough small sizes. Why, there isn't a shoe in the house under No. 8. I've got lots of the mover No. 8 and on to No. 11, which is the way the demand has run in past years, but I haven't a one under No. 8.

"I'm afraid some of the boys are going to turn out to be dancing masters instead of football players," concluded Mr. Eddy, who got his start at U.S.C. during the Henderson regime.

CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

The House of Doyle, blossoming again in the classics of fistiana at America's most elaborate boxing arena, Olympia Auditorium, offers Fidel La Barba and the fiery Manila wildcat, Nationalista, for its upholstered mitt festivities next Tuesday evening down Grand avenue near Washington. At first blush the fortunes of La Barba seem to shine forth with a peculiar luster, but if one stops to ponder one is confronted with conditions not so lop-sided. It doth seems that the Filipino marvel has waxed wondrous at the Hollywood Stadium recently, scoring two knockouts out of three starts. This kind of work should put the prowess and courage of a Tartar into his spirit and temper him to meet the flashy Fidel with all the aggressive impetuosity of the dark-skinned warriors of his ilk.

If one is aching for a horizontal thrill, one will probably get it from the stiffened figure of the foreigner, probably after a fervid onslaught of fast-flying gloves. La Barba is at his best just now and is almost invincible. He is the most cautious baby of his weight in the squared circle today and as for foxiness, buttressed by the hypnotic eyes of Manager George Blake, he hardly bears an equal. Nationalista is fast and aggressive; it is therefore begging the question that the tilt will be colorful as long as it lasts.

Hey, ye warders, let down the portcullis; Abe Attell, the real old champ of champs, is breathing the luscious air of Los Angeles again, and this time covertly hints at making it perpetual motion. Abie has just turned his forty-fifth milestone and to all appearances is one of the best-preserved minions of fistiana on God's footstool today. He parks up to the musical greeting of globe-trotter, but wishes it strictly understood that he is not a full brother to Jack Grace, the silver noodled dean of boxing bugs. Abie tells a good one on his side-kick and pal, Jack Kearns, that is a pip.

It all came off one time when he and Eddie Merino were barnstorming the wide open spaces of the great Northwest. Kearns had Merino, but no dough. The pot simmered instead of boiled. The trio were in Idaho, far from the big white way, at a palooka burg called Sand Point. Attell tossed a swell diamond ring to Jack, who soaked it for 300 smacks. Kearns hired a big hall and drew a $4000 house to see the great Attell and Merino in a ten-round go. Jack himself refereed and to his utter consternation found Abie on the floor in the first round.

He gave the prone pugilist the movie picture slowed-up-one-eighth count and yet the yiddisher fox remained on the canvas up to nine. As Abie sloshed to his corner Kearns yelped, "Whatinhell are you trying to pull off?" For three more rounds Merino pounded his opponent's nose until it looked like a beaver's tail. Kearns was figuratively tearing his hair out. In the beginning of the fifth round Abie wailed in a subdued tone, "I'll get him from now on, Jack," and suiting the action to the word he made Eddie look like a bunch of crinkled tissue paper thereafter.

Now the funny part of the whole shooting match was that Abie was pulling off one of his practical jokes. Kearns wasn't hep and in his confusion was tempted time and again to make Merino take a humpty-dumpty knockout, whether he was hit or not. It was only when Attell stopped his horse play and got down to brass tacks that Jack Kearns was saved the paradoxical situation of having a million-to-one champion on his hands.

Jack Grace, the veteran boxing promoter and globe-trotter, is about the wittiest follower of the game today. In describing a tightwad palooka to "Dutch" Meyers and Bob Roper on Main street last Tuesday afternoon, he slyly winked, as he let loose—"He could put his hand farther down into his pocket than Farmer Burns, and that's going some." Then Roper squared the count by swinging a Michigan City mitt miser who bought a paper from a frozen stiff kid one afternoon (thermometer ten below zero) handing the newsie a nickle. He waited two minutes for the poor lad to pull off an ice-covered, woolen glove. When two pennies had been counted into his ponderous lunch hook, he patted the news vendor on the shoulder—"that's the riffle, kid, when you double these, fifty times, they run into a buck and every buck counts nowadays."

Jack Masinter, the hustling, local boxing manager has Nick Antonelli under his wing. Nick was the greatest bantamweight amateur ever turned out in New York. He was to have represented America in the Olympic Games but drew a substitute when he injured his hand. Antonelli is the only Italian-Jew boxer in the country today and his amateur record of 73 knockouts in 102 bouts almost stands as a boxing mark. On October 12 he boxes the semi-wind-up at Hollywood, where he has been going great guns lately.

Little Boxers Top Bout Card

Giving his patrons more speed than they have seen in the series of heavyweight scraps which have been prevailing at the Pasadena Arena, Manager Morrie Cohan has booked, as a matter of variety for his Thursday night show, what looks like the greatest featherweight engagement he ever put on. In it will appear two little fellows who last Thursday fought the most sensational of recent battles at the Arena, Richard (Rib) Frazier and Bobby Hayden.

This ten-round bout of the fast little fellows will be their third and is presented in answer to a wide popular demand, following their great battle of last week. They were then on in the six-round semifinal. Frazier had quite a point lead and there was but one minute to go when Haydén slipped over a solid smack to the stomach which put his opponent out for the full count.

Their first meeting was a draw, showing how evenly the little fellows are matched.

Ritchie Aguayo and Marcelino Ortega, two walloping junior welters, will fight the six-round semifinal.

DEVINE TAKES IT

WORCESTER (Mass.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Harry Devine of Worcester, 126-pound national amateur champion and a member of the United States Olympic boxing team, made his bow as a professional last night and scored a decisive ten-round victory over Tony Santello of Worcester. Devine weighed 128 1-2; Santello, 125.

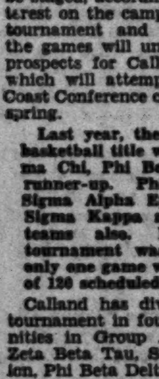
FRATERNITIES IN CAGE PLAY

Leo Calland Has 250 Players in Action at S.C.

Sigma Chis Out to Retain Title Won Last Year

Tournament Slated to Get Under Way October 1

Leo Calland, who handles the job of director of intramural athletics at the University of Southern California in addition to his work as frosh football and varsity basketball coach, yesterday announced that a big interfraternity tournament for basketball players will start October 2, as a preliminary to the opening of the Trojan basket season.



LEO CALLAND

Twenty-three fraternities, including 250 players, will take part in the tourney, while practically 120 games will be staged, according to Calland. Interest on the campus is keen in the tournament and it is likely that the games will uncover a few good prospects for Calland's varsity five which will attempt to retain the Coast Conference championship next spring.

Last year, the interfraternity basketball title was won by Sigma Chi, Phi Beta Delta being runner-up. Phi Kappa Tau, Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Phi Sigma Kappa all had strong teams also. Interest in the tournament was so high that only one game was forfeited out of 120 scheduled.

Calland has divided play in the tournament in four groups. Fraternities in Group A are Delta Chi, Zeta Beta Tau, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Phi Beta Delta, Phi Kappa Tau and Delta Sigma Phi. Fraternities playing in Group B are Kappa Sigma, Kappa Alpha, Pi Kappa Alpha, Tau Epsilon Phi, Phi Kappa Psi, and Pi Kappa Epsilon. In Group C are Theta Psi, Phi Nu Delta, Sigma Tau, Gamma Epsilon, Phi Sigma Kappa and Theta Sigma Nu. In Group D are Delta Phi Delta, Alpha Nu Delta, Sigma Chi and Tau Delta Phi. Winners of each group will play off for the championship.

University of Southern California expects to stage the biggest intramural program in history this year. Last year, which was Calland's first as director of intramural athletics, he had 2500 men competing in interfraternity, all-university and interclass athletics.

back 34 yards and put the ball within scoring distance when he made 24 yards more on a reverse play. Capt. Hoffman carried the ball over for the touchdown.

Keegan, Army left end, scored a safety later in the first quarter when he blocked Hoffman's kick and dropped on it behind the goal line.

Two long passes by Hoffman, one of them to Wilton and the other to Preston, put the ball on the one-yard line twice in the second quarter, and both times Stanford was able to go over for a touchdown. The score at half-time was 13 to 2.

In the second half, the Stanford players seemed exhausted and the superior condition of the Army men enabled them to put over a touchdown in the fourth quarter on plain football tactics. When the game ended the Army team was threatening to put over another touchdown.

The defeat of the second eleven was disappointing to the 5000 Stanford supporters who saw the game. The Y. M. I. victory came in the last minute of play after the teams had battled to a scoreless tie throughout the game. Storm, Y. M. I. half, made the winning touchdown when he intercepted Rothert's pass and raced 87 yards to the goal.

CARD BABES HOLD ARTILLERYMEN EVEN

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 22—A 6-.. tie was all the Stanford freshmen were able to realize in their game with the Twenty-fifth Coast Artillery here this afternoon. The army outfit scored in the second quarter on a pass blocked behind the line of scrimmage, Friedman taking the ball. Dusty Allen of Glendale scored for the frosh in the third period of an inside-tackle play after an army pass had been intercepted on the 25-yard line and the ball advanced by a succession of smashing bucks. Attempted conversion by Marks failed, as did the army's try.

Rintala, former San Francisco high-school star, was the best man for the Babes.

Jaysees Give Philbrook's Quakers Tough Workout on Poet Gridiron

Coach George Philbrook's Whittier Poets had their first real scrimmage of the season yesterday afternoon when they took on the tough Compton Junior College eleven on the Quaker gridiron.

Philbrook's team showed occasional glimpses of power, but have quite a lot of work yet to do before they can be called polished.

Two touchdowns were made during the afternoon's work with Poet backs carrying the ball over on both occasions. Walker, Payne, Tripp and Weaver all took turns packing the pigskin, ith Walker and Payne showing to best advantage.

Ed Suggett, coach of the Compton eleven, has a hard-battling squad this season and gave the Quakers a tough workout. Spike Stevens stood out on the line, while Schott and Vic Williams shone in the backfield.

Philbrook started part of his second-string line-up but soon inserted his first eleven, Clevenger, Sheldon, George and Costo going into the line, while Weaver went into the backfield, he being the only one of the first four ball packers not starting. The starting line-up.

three touchdowns in the final quarter.

The game opened with the Colorado kicking off. McBride received for the Mississippi and ran the ball back 25 yards. They then gained 15 yards on a pass and were held for the following four downs.

The Colorado then commenced an aerial attack which took them down the field at a rapid pace. Two completed passes, Swissheim to Dooley, netted the Colorado sailors 60 yards.

The Mississippi then took the ball down the field with a series of line smashes and end runs which finally ended with Lawrence tearing through center for five yards for a touchdown. McBride failed to convert.

Swissheim received the Mississippi's kick-off and raced the ball back 45 yards and Dooley evened the score by a 40-yard run around right end to score a touchdown. He failed to convert and the period ended with the ball on the Colorado 35-yard line.

The Mississippi team, strengthened by a number of substitutes sent in by Coach Lannom, ran wild in the second period and scored three touchdowns. The Colorado sent in most of her second-string men in an attempt to save her first team for a rally in the second half.

The first touchdown was made when Emilio of the Mississippi snatched up a blocked kick on the Colorado's 10-yard line and went across; Walters scored the second touchdown of the period when Hickman received a long pass from McBride and made a sensational 40-yard run to a touchdown. Walters also scored in this period on a 15-yard trip around left end.

THOMPSON FAR BACK OF GANS

win that title. To say that Jack Thompson is another Gans on the strength of one victory seems to me to be jumping at conclusions. It was quite a trick to stow Dundee away, but I don't think the man who did it is a Gans yet.

He may turn out to be one of the greatest welterweights of all time, but only time can tell that. He must show more than he has yet shown. Very probably he will be matched with the winner of the Young Corbett-Sergeant Sammy Baker fight, which takes place in Brooklyn next Wednesday.

If Thompson can beat either of these fellows, he'll get a chance at Dundee with the welterweight title at stake. Then, if he really is another Joe Gans, he'll repeat the trick he showed in Chicago.

LOTS OF FIGHTS

This winter should provide plenty of fistic entertainment and lots of work for boxers, with Tex Rickard, Humbert Fugazy and Tom McMahon running big clubs.

Tom was matchmaker at Madison Square Garden for years, and before that at other places.

He has an enormous place in uptown New York. They say that McMahon has the inside track with Jack Kearns, the manager of Mickey Walker. Of course everyone knows that Kearns and Rickard have not been the best of friends since the Dempsey-Kearns split.

THOMPSON OFF FOR SAN FRANCISCO DATE

Young Jack Thompson, colored welterweight sensation who knocked out Champion Joe Dundee in the East recently, left last night on the Padre for San Francisco, where he is to meet Jackie Fields in a ten-round bout October 1.

THE REAL HERBERT HOOVER

I was not there to discuss politics with him, and told him so. I went to Palo Alto to really ascertain, if possible, what the real Herbert Hoover, and not the Presidential Candidate Hoover, might be like. I wanted to learn to what extent he is human, to get a glimpse of his soul.

I was, of course, glad to find him strong of body and keeping himself fit for the tremendous physical strain he will have to undergo if his countrymen shall decide to put upon his shoulders the burden of the affairs of the greatest nation history has yet known. He will have hard work ahead of him if chosen for the high office for which his party has named him. America works its Presidents like galley slaves. Two or three of them in later times have had health shattered and have been brought to untimely deaths merely by the effort to meet the clamor of the crowds, while the actual physical and mental labor a President must perform is alone enough to kill a man not blessed with great physical strength.

On the eve of his fifty-fourth birthday Herbert Hoover appeared to be physically fit in every muscle and artery of his strong body. To start with, he has the inheritance of a healthy, sturdy ancestry. And God was good to him in his boyhood by setting his hand to the plow in the glebe of a prairie farm.

The Stanford gym and his fishing, hunting and camping days in the great redwood-forested mountains of Santa Cruz must have put more good fiber in him. Since then, he has lived very much out of doors for long stretches at a time in the pursuit of his profession as an engineer.

I asked him if he falls back on the proverbial "daily dozen" now that he must be tied up to a desk to a great extent. Yes, he exercises regularly for an hour every morning. But he has to "kick" himself into doing it. He said he doesn't see how it must be necessary for him, yet he does it, dutifully, on the theory that doctors ought to know best. Still, why should a man naturally strong and healthy have to submit to such drudgery?

Here was a man after my own heart. "A bas the daily dozen," I said. And it was then that the first good laugh broke. We were old friends from that moment—there is such magic in a laugh.

Mr. Hoover laughs easily. It is no trouble at all to lure a smile from him. And even the poor wit of a newspaper man was good for chuckles and even voiceful hilarity. He has that saving sense of humor that he will so greatly need if he shall be chosen at the election, and which he would need probably even more were it to be otherwise.

TO BE HAPPY—AND TO BE KIND

To be happy—that's the thing. And to be kind. It is worth the trouble that any journey might be to find a man who has these two gifts from God in his heart. And, at my journey's end, I found them both in the heart of Herbert Hoover.

We kept on the trail of these things as we talked. The subject was so much more enticing than politics or statecraft could possibly be. And because of that, I think I must have proved a singularly welcome visitor. Happiness and kindness—these are the wassail of life. And the good zest of humor.

And what do you suppose he regards as a disappointment in his strikingly successful life?

Well, it is really one of his disappointments that he seems to have failed to qualify as a humorist. He envies humorists—those who have the power to bring into the hearts of men the gods' good gift of laughter. We went over a speech he made last year at a meeting of the Izaak Walton League of America, full of whimsical humor that somehow failed to register. His subject was "A Remedy for Disappearing Game Fishes." The speech had a lot of funny cracks in it. Every true fisherman should have a copy. And yet the disciples sitting at the banquet board, big fishermen and little fishermen, deep-sea trawlers, fishers who use worms and fishers who use flies, truthful men all, but tragically devoid of a sense of humor. Mr. Hoover says that he failed to get a rise out of them. And it has greatly discouraged him ever since.

His trouble, of course, is the opposite of that of the professional humorist who, try as he may, cannot hope to establish a reputation as a seriously minded man once he has made a name as a jester. I remember the case of a celebrated man who for years and years made the world laugh. Then he turned preacher, but even when he preached a funeral sermon people could hardly keep their faces straight. They were always expecting a joke from him.

THE HEART OF A BOY

You see, Mr. Hoover's activities so far have been of a very serious nature, indeed. His profession has had to do with the hard thinking best expressed in logarithms. He has had to feed starving populations, shelter homeless heads, care for those made helpless by the cruel blow of disaster. He has had little time to woo mirth in the waking hours of his busy hard-working life. Yet, as I remember him that day in his home in Palo Alto, his heart is still the heart of a boy.

And we talked of boys, too. He has the fullest faith in the American boy as he was and as he is today. He has two sons of his own, and he knows a lot of other boys, also. He hears them talk. He knows what they are thinking about. And he has no fears for the present young generation of Americans.

Moreover, he is still impervious to the sad disillusions that beset most men after they have passed middle life. I was sure of that when the talk drifted to memories of his boyhood on the prairie farm.

"Some one once told me," he said, "that these recollections of my boyhood are only the illusions of forty years after, but I know better, for I have been back and checked it up—back to the old swimming hole and the great, long hill where, on winter nights, we slid down at terrific speeds with our tummies tight to home-made sleds. Years that were not all play, but which had their full share of chores and labor. Tasks that leave no scars on the boy who comes from the farm."

And then came again his intriguing laugh. "The only scar I bear," he said, "is on my foot. I could show it to you now if I were to take off my shoe. I got it by stepping on a red-hot iron chip in my bare feet at my father's blacksmith shop."

PLOWBOY OF PRAIRIE

And so, I said to myself as I looked down from the broad piazza of the house on the yellow walls of Stanford, this is the blacksmith's son. This is the boy whose hand was set to the plow in the glebe of the prairie. He who has gone upon a long road since then, and whose feet may go farther still. The blacksmith's son, the prairie plowboy whose name became a loved word at all the firesides of the world, a hope in despair, a song of courage in the haunts of fear.

After a while I asked him what was perhaps a rather bold question. But I wanted to penetrate the very soul of the man and not to grope into the thoughts of a Presidential candidate. I wanted to know the real Herbert Hoover—the Hoover that the people want to know and not the Hoover that partisan opponents in the acrimonies and acerbities of a bitterly fought campaign are at pains to boogyboo.

The rather bold question I put to him was, what would he prefer to do with the rest of his life if he were left entirely free now to decide.

The musket fire at Lexington bridge wasn't really the shot heard around the world. The shot that was heard around the world was the first explosion of gas in an internal-combustion engine. That was the most momentous noise that has ever been heard.

Will the airplane change life in as great a degree?

NORTHCOTT DENIES CRIME IN COLORFUL LIFE STORY

Desert Bonfire Yields 'Murder Farm' Clew

Partly burned articles from a middesert bonfire discovered yesterday fifty-two miles south of Riverside are believed by Sheriff Sweeters and Deputy Sheriff deCrevecour to be the most important discovery yet made in the investigation of the asserted Riverside county murders for which Gordon Stuart Northcott and his mother, now under arrest in Canada, have been indicted in Riverside county.

A sheet of writing paper, half destroyed by the fire contains handwriting in a childish scrawl and has sufficient imprints on the remnant to submit to a handwriting expert for a comparison with Walter Collins, are asserted to have been mistreated and slain by Northcott and his mother.

Several strips of mattress ticking, which apparently were used for binding purposes, were found to contain dark stains and will be submitted to a chemist for analysis. A leaf from a book, the contents of which the officials would not make public, will be checked with a book similar to one known to have been drawn by the Winslow boys from the Pomona Public Library shortly before their disappearance.

OTHER THINGS FOUND

Bits of white cloth, apparently from shirts, and several pieces which officers believe to have been part of knit underwear, also were found in the ashes.

Discovery of the spot was made several weeks ago by C. L. Howe, 8137 South Madison avenue, Southgate, while hunting for specimens of snakes and other reptiles. It is in a remote section of the desert between Riverside and Indio.

Officers said yesterday they give considerable weight to the discovery following the statement made Friday by young Sandford Clark, Northcott's nephew, and the youth whose expose of conditions at Northcott's chicken ranch precipitated the investigation, in which the youth declared Northcott told him he took the bodies of his three youngest victims "fifty miles into the desert." Clark said he checked on the speedometer and found the Northcott car had traveled a little more than 100 miles since it had left the ranch that morning.

A search around the fire spot failed to reveal the mound Howe said also had been there and from which he said a stench was coming when he visited the place last. Evidence that earth had recently been removed was found, officers said.

The fire also had been covered with dirt and it was only after careful sifting of sand and ashes that officers found what they believe to be evidence in the case.

From pieces of a suitcase, with charred edges found in the ashes, police believe the destroyed material had been carried there.

REPORT ON WELL

Simultaneously with Howe's revelations, a report was received by Chief Assistant Deputy Sheriff Bright that an abandoned well on vacant property to the rear of the Mint Canyon cabin rented last February 25 to April 25 by Northcott had been disturbed and quicklime poured into it.

Bright plans an exhaustive investigation of the Mint Canyon site as the result of yesterday's information, and also because of a statement made by Art Brown, a near-by rancher, who told of a bonfire which was built after dark in the rear of the cabin the night following Northcott's renting and which he said burned more than four hours.

When Northcott moved into the cabin, according to the story of a neighbor, Mrs. Logan Goodnight, his only equipment was a pick, shovel and spare tire.

Young Clark told officers when they asked him to clear the mystery of why all buttons had been cut from the clothes found in the investigation.

"Stuart cut them off, put them in a can and then scattered them from the window of an interurban car on the way to Los Angeles," the boy said.

BATTLE LOOMS

In addition to Frank Lyon, a Vancouver barrister retained by Northcott to fight his case for him, Attorney M. G. Neil of Los Angeles, appeared at the Riverside Sheriff's office yesterday morning and announced that he has been retained to act in Riverside for Northcott. At the same time J. Harvey Hearn, 235 Ellen street, Del Rey, former Saskatoon, Sask., barrister, received a wire from J. McKinley Cameron, a Calgary barrister, to represent Cyrus G. Northcott now held in the Riverside jail as a material witness in the case.

Cameron was instructed to retain Hearn by Mrs. Winifred Clark, mother of Sandford, the informer, and daughter of the aged man.

HASTE ADVISED

Mrs. Clark is stopping in Calgary, where Mrs. Northcott, indicted as her son's accomplice, is held by authorities for extradition to California.

Canadian authorities, becoming impatient at the delay in the extradition proceedings, yesterday again wired Sheriff Sweeters of Riverside to expedite efforts to have Mrs. Northcott and her son returned to California to face trial.

Reports that Chief of Police Ritchie of Calgary plans to free Mrs. Northcott unless faster action to extradite her is taken, were denied by that official last night. Chief Ritchie said he will hold the prisoner until California officials come for her," if, naturally, it is within a reasonable length of time.

Investigators Quinn and Kelly of the Riverside District Attorney's office expect to depart from here at 6:10 o'clock tomorrow night for Sacramento to receive extradition papers and then proceed to Canada.

Sheriff Sweeters yesterday informed Canadian authorities he would take Mrs. Northcott from Calgary and requested that she not be taken to Vancouver because of possibility of communicating with her son.

Today county chemists are expected to complete their analysis of stains found in the basement and other parts of the Northcott's Los Angeles home, 1239 Brittania street, and which they already have said are bloodstains.

Lays Charges to Clark's Love of Melodrama

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Sept. 22. (AP) Sitting in the visitors' room at Oakalla prison late this afternoon with several armed guards around him. Stewart Gordon Northcott, accused of killing four boys on his father's chicken ranch at Riverside, Cal., told a newspaper reporter that the "charges against me are melodramatic to the extreme." The youth told his story in a convincing manner and embellished it with quick gestures while a disarming smile often flitted across his face.

"For a time after my arrest," he asserted. "I was deeply worried for myself, for murder is not a nice charge to face, but now I can look on it calmly and if the accusation was not so serious I might even look upon it as a joke.

"My real worry now is for 'little mother.' I am afraid that the worry and strain may break her down.

TELLS LIFE STORY

"Imagine a woman of 64, of slight build, wielding an ax with fragile hands. It is impossible for anyone who knows mother to picture her in such a role. How I wish she (held in Calgary) would be brought here quickly so that we could aid each other.

"Do I look like a murderer? I do not think I flatter myself when I say that I look just like any other young fellow of normal mind and disposition.

"I will tell my whole story, for it has a bearing on the charges made against me now.

"I was born in Bladworth, Sask., on November 9, 1906. Cyrus G. Northcott is my father and Louisa Northcott is my mother. I have one sister, Winnifred, Mrs. Clark.

"Winnifred was married to John Clark when I was a baby. Sandford Clark and Jessie are their children. There are two other children in their family.

PLAYED PIANO

"We left Bladworth and for a time lived in Edmonton and Vancouver, then four years ago we went to California.

"I played a piano in a movie theater and also worked in grocery stores. Three years ago I bought a poultry farm near Ontario. I also sold automobiles for a time.

"Hard work made the poultry farm pay and I had 900 laying hens in addition to hundreds of other birds.

"Winnie commenced to have trouble at home in Saskatoon and was compelled to work in order to support the family. She wanted mother to take the children.

"I drove from California to Saskatoon and when I returned to the United States I brought Sanford with me. I erred in declaring I took him across the boundary by saying that he was only going into the country for a short time. The statements that I kidnaped him are ridiculous. He came of his own accord and with the full knowledge and consent of his mother, my sister Winnie. I should have gotten in touch with the immigration authorities when it was decided that he was to stay on the poultry farm with us.

TROUBLE WITH NEIGHBORS

"Sanford was a stupid boy and one extremely hard to handle. I never abused him, though. I did punish him at times but then in a mild way. The lad was a source of continuous trouble and one time disappeared and I had to make an extensive search for him.

"About this time I had trouble with neighbors. As a result of this trouble some of them were jailed. This did not make me at all popular in the district. The police records will show of this trouble.

"Diseased hens were put among my own fowls and as a result I lost many of them.

"Those digging for bodies on the farm will find many bones of these fowls. Let them dig. They will find no human remains. Knowing that land I can say they will have worn their hands to the bone digging and then will not find any evidence. There is no evidence to find.

"Jessie was to come to us for a visit. I was to meet her at the boat but got to the dock a little late and found that she had disappeared. I made a frantic search and police records will show that I appealed to the authorities at this time for aid. She eventually turned up and gave no explanation but seemed disappointed that her disappearance had not been the cause of much notoriety. She is of the type that likes sensationalism and publicity.

FAMILY DIFFICULTY

"During her stay with us she was in constant consultation with Sanford and the two seemed to be plotting something. The situation became so strained that she was ordered from the farm and went to Los Angeles, where she joined father, who left the ranch some time before. She joined with him and there was considerable trouble. Father had to leave the place on my demand because he had struck mother. He has not spoken to me since that trouble, which was six or eight months ago.

"Things went from bad to worse. Then Jessie reported to the immigration people regarding Sanford's entry into the country.

"I saw Judge Farrell, Weber Building, Alhambra, about the matter. As he was a city judge and was to hold court next day he referred me to R. D. Wickham, another attorney in the Weber Building. He told me that the immigration authorities could make it hard for me owing to the manner in which Sanford had been entered and as I intended to come to Canada with mother, he advised me to lie low there until the case was disposed of.

"It was on his advice that I retained a counsel on my arrival here and went to Mr. Lyons as he had been recommended to me.

"It was not anxiety about any murder charges that led me to seek him but to obtain legal protection in case of a charge arising out of the immigration laws. Mother left me in Vancouver and went to Saskatoon and brought Winnie to Vancouver so that she could meet Sanford when he was deported. She had joined us to fight any absurd charges made against us by Jessie, her own daughter, as to the kidnaping. Do you think that if there was any part of the charges true that she would aid me against her own children?

READS OF CHARGES

"Just before mother and Winnie arrived in Vancouver on the 14th inst., I picked up a newspaper and read the terrible charges against me and how police were seeking the bodies of my supposed victims on the ranch.

"Winnie took charge of things and decided that we would take mother back to Saskatoon to get her out of it all and we would return and fight the case.

"It was Winnie who bought the car in which we drove away.

"I read of us living in different places while we were in the city. We stopped at but two houses.

"It is true that we took blankets from one of the places but we left $8 on the table in the room to cover their cost.

"I guess we were panicky but who would not be, facing such a mass of allegations.

"We drove to Spence's bridge, where we separated from mother, Winnie and I separating at Princeton.

"Then I was arrested. I had read of my declaring that I would shoot it out with anyone attempting to arrest me and when the officer asked me if I had a gun I laughed and declared that I carried three. Neither mother nor I possessed a revolver.

CALLS IT MELODRAMA

"The charges against me are melodramatic to the extreme. They are born from the brain of a boy who has read too many lurid detective and mystery stories and from the mind of a girl who likes sensationalism and notoriety.

"I cannot understand the statements supposed to have been made by my father. We differ in the matter of religious belief. This difference may have something to do with it or it may be that he thinks to aid me by making my actions appear to be those of one insane.

"I will fight extradition not through fear of the charges; but to be taken back to the United States to face scores of reporters, press and movie photographers and the grilling of detectives is not a pleasant ordeal.

ASKS FOR PRIEST

"British Columbia officials have treated me splendidly. Each and everyone has acted in a gentlemanly manner."

Concluding his statement, Northcott turned to his counsel and said:

"There is a favor I would ask. I would ask you to have one of the fathers from the Jesuit Church in Point Grey see me. Tomorrow is Sunday and I think he can cheer me up."

Lyons made an immediate request for the admission of the priest to the prison and this was granted by the officials.

Jessie Clark, young niece of Northcott, may be able to give a new insight into what took place on the farm if she is called as a witness. This much was intimated by tight-lipped British Columbia authorities today, who had given the girl police protection while the hunt for Northcott and his mother was under way.

It is indicated the girl may make a good witness because of statements made to her by her brother, Sandford Clark. Jessie also is said to be aware of other happenings on the ranch which are expected to have a bearing on the case.

HE SEALS HIS LIPS

Although young Northcott is locked in a cell at Oakalla prison here, he is visited daily by his attorney, Frank Lyons, and prison officials. The mother is under arrest at Calgary.

Before engaging the attorney yesterday the youth chatted freely, but vigorously protested his innocence. British Columbia police have no power to question him. They pointed out, however, that there is nothing to prevent the California authorities from questioning the boy when they arrive in Vancouver next week. It was revealed today that Northcott had remarked that the deputies who are searching for human remains on the chicken ranch will have a difficult task digging on the ranch, for the reason that it has not been irrigated for a long time and the soil is baked to a rocky hardness under the hot sun.

BAIL NOT SOUGHT

In conversation at the jail with his counsel, the youth said he and his mother came to Canada to halt deportation of Sandford Clark. Gordon and his mother feared that the deportation would result in the loss of their chicken ranch at Riverside, because the boy had been employed there in contravention of United States immigration regulations, the attorney said.

When he was not chicken ranching, Gordon Northcott played minor roles in the films at Hollywood, he told Lyons, his acting returning him $5 a day. He purports to have been the next in rank above an extra in the acting profession. Northcott announced through his attorney today that he will not seek freedom on bail, but will await the result of extradition proceedings which may take a month or two.

LONG BATTLE LOOMS

Attorney Lyons has requested provincial police to bring Mrs. Northcott to Vancouver.

The fight to extradite Northcott will not begin until the United States deposition has arrived. The case will be heard by a Vancouver county court judge. From the court decision an appeal can be taken on habeas corpus proceedings to the Supreme Court. Extradition must be confirmed by the Minister of Justice and officials said the proceedings may take two months.

Anticipating a strenuously contested extradition case, the defense lawyer announced he will apply for the production in Vancouver of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination. He said he wants to check the story of Sandford Clark.

CONVENTION OF NURSERY BODY NEARS

State Association Will be Convoked Thursday for Three-Day Session

The eighteenth annual meeting of the California Association of Nurserymen will begin Thursday morning at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel and continue through Friday and Saturday. The annual banquet of the association will take place Friday night.

Problems of the industry will be discussed by leading nurserymen of the State and by representatives of the State Department of Agriculture. One of the features of the convention is expected to be the address on Friday of C. E. Cary, director of the educational division of the American Association of Nurserymen, who will make a survey of the whole industry and report on the national association's four-year publicity campaign.

In connection with the convention there will be an exhibition of new and little-known plants, flowers and fruits, and improved machinery and appliances.

More Enroll for Extension Classes Here

Increased enrollment over last year was shown in opening classes last week, a report made public yesterday by the University of California extension division shows. Nearly 1800 enrolled the first three days of the week, compared to 1500 in the same period last year.

Last Monday night the heaviest enrollment of the week was made with 778 entrants, compared with 740 in 1927.

Business firms interested in courses of benefit to their employees have sent groups to the university extension courses in the Hillstreet Building. The second week of classes will start tomorrow night. Two classes are being conducted in salesmanship.

OUTDOOR CHRISTMAS PLANNED

Chamber of Commerce Will Launch Campaign Next Tuesday to Exploit Southland's Winter Clime; Mary Pickford Heads Chief Committee

A city-wide movement to make Los Angeles and Southern California known the world over as the land of "Christmas out-of-doors" has been undertaken by the Chamber of Commerce, according to an announcement yesterday by President Eastman of the chamber.

The campaign calls for the lighting and decorating of thousands of outdoor Christmas trees during the holiday season, according to President Eastman. Mary Pickford has accepted the chairmanship of a general "Christmas out-of-doors" committee, which will hold its first meeting Tuesday noon in the Biltmore music room, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. The general public has been invited.

The idea originated in the exploitation and exposition committee of the chamber, which is headed by A. Carman Smith. Careful details of the city-wide campaign have been worked out whereby almost every civic, social, educational, service, religious and fraternal organization will participate in the campaign.

"It is the intention of this committee to let the whole world know of our splendid Christmas weather," stated President Eastman. "We will do this by lighting and decorating thousands of Christmas trees in the lawns of private residences, schools, clubs, churches, parks and other places."

Improvement associations in all parts of the city will conduct the campaign in their respective localities, working under the guidance of the general committee. The campaign is expected to result in the permanent planting of thousands of living Christmas trees to be decorated and lighted year after year.

President Eastman will open the Tuesday meeting, outlining the plan, and then turn the affair over to Miss Pickford. The general committee has been appointed and the campaign will be under way within a few days after the initial meeting.

"BE KIND" IS CREED OF HERBERT HOOVER

Not Wealth Nor Power but to Make Happiness Possible to All is His Ambition

He answered instantly and without the slightest hesitation. "The public service," he said.

I had not known what answer to expect, but I am quite sure I did not expect this answer. The public service—the traditionally thankless job. Yet, after years of it, that's the thing to which he would continue to devote himself. But, why?

I had a good opportunity now to analyze him as he fell into a vein of serious thought. It would make a long story to tell all he said. But the burden of it was the conviction he conveyed of his deep desire to solve the riddle of civilization, to untangle the seemingly hopeless entanglements of life. He seemed to be groping for some way by which he could standardize happiness; synchronize God's bounteousness of rural production with the requirements of congested populations. It seemed to me that the brain of the engineer was now at work. And the brain of a man who had achieved such stupendous results from his success in the co-ordination of efforts.

TO MAKE HAPPINESS PERMANENT

"We ought to be able to make happiness a permanent condition instead of the illusive thing that it has been throughout the ages of the past," he said. And it seemed to him that our own country is best suited for the experiment. For, we are a people so apposite to be guided and directed. The American acts quickly, he has initiative, he responds. And in these ways, as in many others, he is different from the European.

In the countries in which he has had such tremendous experiences, Mr. Hoover learned, often at serious cost, that only two or three men in an average European community can be depended upon for intelligent action in an emergency, while in America practically the entire community can be depended upon.

For instance, during the Mississippi flood, Mr. Hoover called upon ninety communities in the South to meet quickly and effectively sudden emergencies. They were called upon at forty-eight hours' notice to feed, shelter and in every way care for sometimes thousands of refugees. And, of these ninety communities, only one failed to function. No such achievement could be hoped for in Europe.

And so, he is proud of his countrymen. Not only is he proud of them, but he has a deep and abiding love for them. And it is out of this love that he is thinking ahead for their permanent happiness. It is a theory to which he has given the name of "Constructive Joy."

EXPONENT OF CONSTRUCTIVE JOY

Constructive joy? What might this mean? It sounded vague and almost platitudinous to me. But, I signed up for it when the Secretary of Commerce got through.

The old saw that a man should put in not more than eight hours at work, eight hours at sleep and eight hours at play (meaning leisure to dispose of as the man desires) still holds good. In a country with our resources and possibilities there should be no greater than an eight-hour job for every man to set his hand to, and a bed upon which he can nab eight hours of sleep. But what about the other eight hours? This is where the theory of "constructive joy" comes in. Shall it be eight hours of leisure devoted to mischief, devilment, back-sliding and evil mindedness with their inevitably tragic results, or shall it be eight hours of wholesome sport, good reading, attendance at clean amusements and all that makes for real happiness?

Mr. Hoover believes that this is something that must be thought of. Because we are to continue to progress; we are to continue to prosper. Already almost the poorest man in our country has a home, a radio, some kind of a motor vehicle and lots of other conveniences, comforts and luxuries that poor men in other parts of the world do not have, and cannot yet hope to have. Consequently, Americans have leisure and are destined to have more. And if this leisure be used wisely and with a wholesome thought, why, then, the republic will endure. The rocks upon which other civilizations were wrecked are far away from us.

In past civilizations, leisure has wrecked the souls of the people and caused empires to totter. Once Rome was the richest and most powerful nation in the world, as America is now. Greece, Babylon, Assyria and other nations also reached the place that we occupy today. Wealth and power were their portion. Their citizens found much leisure at their disposal. Then they deteriorated. Morally and physically they became soft and soon their glories were folded away with ten thousand yesterdays.

Wherefore, thought must be given to a time—however far off it may be—when history will repeat itself and the curse of misused leisure will menace those who are to come after us in future generations. A curse that it is possible to evade if we shall begin to think ahead and to think right.

NOT POWER; NOT WEALTH; HAPPINESS

Looking ahead to the continuance of happiness. Thinking of ways to construct greater joy for the human heart. Such are the thoughts in this man's busy brain. He does not seem to be thinking of power, nor of wealth. How shall the world be made permanently happy? That's the problem he is eager to solve.

I began to feel humble in his presence. And I felt that there is nothing to fear from him if power be placed in his hands. Nothing to fear, and so much to be hoped for.

I write of the man simply as I found him. I came away from Palo Alto with a certain pride in my heart that Herbert Hoover is my countryman.

Twenty-nine men have now presided over the destinies of this nation, and it is a proud boast that none of them disgraced the high office with which he was entrusted. Not all of them were great men, but they were all true. Some of them were statesmen, others politicians, one or two mere political accidents. Several were soldiers.

Each brought something to the office. Some only little, and others very much. But this man, if he shall sit in the chair of Washington, will bring something to the Presidency that none of his predecessors ever brought—the subdued, contrite and understanding heart of a man whose lot it has been to succor a world in the blackest hour it has ever known.

I spent an unusually long time with a man whose time is so nervously clamored for. And the eager, impatient pilgrims at length crashed the gate and brought my visit to an end.

But I was satisfied. I had had my hour. I had found the ladder of Herbert Hoover's ambitions. I know what is going on in his big, deep brain. I have caught a glimpse of his soul.

sisted by Maria Flohre and Eleanora Flaige. Following the performances of "Tosca" on the opening night, these dancers will present the American premiere of "The Flowers of Evil," by Cui, based on the Baudelaire poem. They also are providing ballets for "Faust," "Carmen" and the great throne scene in "Turandot."

SEASON'S REPERTOIRE

The repertoire and dates are as follows: October 3, "Tosca;" October 5, "The Love of Three Kings;" October 6, "Turandot;" October 8, "Madame Butterly;" October 9, "The Jest" ("La Cena Delle Beffe;") October 10, "Carmen;" October 11, "Faust;" October 13, the double bill, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci;" October 15, "Andrea Chenier."

Director Gaetano Merola has divided the nine performances between three conductors, including himself. Others who will share the baton are Maestro Pietro Cimini and Wilfrid Pelletier of the Metropolitan.

R. J. Schweppe, chairman of the general seat-sale committee, has launched his campaign with nearly 200 representative Southern Californians and reports the most enthusiastic interest in the coming season. The box office this year has been opened in spacious quarters at Barker Brothers' an especially convenient place for parking, where seats for all performances are on sale.

CALIFORNIA VETERANS TO GATHER

Two Thousand Expected at Reunion of Famous Ninety-first Division

Two thousand veterans of the famous Ninety-first Division, A.E.F., are expected at the division's tenth annual reunion next Saturday at Patriotic Hall, according to Karl Marks, secretary.

The occasion will be a twin celebration, marking a decade since the closing of hostilities overseas besides being the tenth anniversary of the forming of the organization. The program will start with registration of veterans at 10 a.m. with Van Hogan, past secretary, in charge.

Maj. Walter H. Gregory is general chairman of program.

In the afternoon the first of two big entertainment programs will be given in the autditorium. At 6:30 p.m., the annual dinner will be served in the dining hall under the direction of Louis Ruff, past president of the association. Following the dinner the main program of the reunion will take place on the top floor of the building.

Rites Tuesday for Southwick

Funeral services will be conducted at the Little Church of the Flowers Tuesday at 2 p.m. for Harold I. Southwick, who died in Rome, Italy, August 24, last, after an illness lasting ten days. Interment will be in Forest Lawn Cemetery. Pierce Brothers are in charge of funeral arrangements.

Mr. Southwick, who was in the automobile financing business on Vermont avenue, was making a pleasure tour of Italy when stricken. He was ill only ten days. He was a graduate of Polytechnic High School and had attended the University of Southern California law school.

He leaves a widow, Nellie B. Southwick, and a son, Donald M. Southwick, who reside at 2850 Sunset Place.

ART TALK ANNOUNCED

Miss Donna Schuster, member of the faculty of the Otis Art Institute, will give a talk on "American Artists of Today" at the Hollywood Plaza Art Salon tomorrow evening. Miss Schuster is one of the young American artists of Los Angeles and has received a number of prizes and honorable mentions at various exhibits both here and in the East. After the discussion she will show a number of her latest paintings in the art salon.

ATONEMENT DAY TO BE OBSERVED

Synagogues Will Celebrate Yom Kippur Today

Traditional Kol Nidre Will Usher in White Fast

Services Scheduled in All Temples This Evening

Jews of Los Angeles today will begin, in synagogues and at their homes, the celebration of Yom Kippur, the most sacred and solemn day in the Jewish calendar. At sundown today the chanting of the traditional melody of Kol Nidre will usher in the great White Fast.

In olden days sacrificial pomp was used to bring man to atone for his sins, but with the destruction of the temple and the exile of the Jews, the rabbis made repentance and contrition the dominant features of the day.

RABBI WINKLER SPEAKS

A sermon on Yom Kippur was preached yesterday by Rabbi Mayer Winkler at Temple Sinai. He spoke in part as follows:

"Tomorrow evening at sunset the Jewish people will usher in and celebrate Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. This day marks the culminating point of the penitential season commenced on New Year, Rosh Hashanah.

"The Day of Atonement exerts a wondrous influence upon the Jew. It is a day of fasting, feasting and praying. From sunset to sunset we refrain from eating and drinking and show our readiness to have the spirit prevail over matter. The weakened body and the strengthened soul are instrumental in the creation of real repentance and atonement. Repentance cannot be attained through outward ceremony. It is rather an inner process of purification, a whole change of character, of habits and customs with the firm resolution to lead a life pleasing to God and to man."

SERVICES BEGIN TONIGHT

Services at Temple Israel of Hollywood will begin at 7:30 p.m. today with Joseph Diskay singing the Kol Nidre. Rabbi Isadore Jacobson will preach on "Self Honor and Courage." Next Monday at 10:30 a.m. Dr. Isaacson will speak on "Attention to Our Own Affairs Our Chief Duty." At 4 p.m. tomorrow memorial services will be conducted. Music will be furnished by Virginia Flohri, vocalist, and Samuel Albert, violinist, and Dr. Isaacson will preach on "Faith and Fortitude."

"Yom Kippur is a Jewish contribution to the growing spirit of America," said Rabbi Herman Lissauer of Temple Emanu-El. "It teaches a people, accustomed in the main to look outward upon the world of tangible things, to introspect and to provide spiritual values. The American people, who have shown such tremendous vigor and zest of life, need to be taught to pause and reflect. No people, save Israel, has a day of atonement, in which, without mediation of priest, every man is guardian of his own soul and makes his own peace with God. The American spirit stands in need of such a theme as this."

MEMORIAL PRAYER TOMORROW

The Yom Kippur day of fasting and prayer will be inaugurated at Temple Emanu-El this evening with the rendition of the Kol Nidre by the Emanu-El Choir, assisted by Maurice Amsterdam, 'cellist, and Dr. Arthur Freedman, violinist. Rabbi Lissauer will preach.

Devotions will be resumed tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. Memorial services will take place at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

SECTS UNTIE FOR CAMPUS MOVEMENT

City's Religious Leaders Organize to Meet Needs of U.C.L.A. Students

Combining the forces of virtually all sects and denominations, religious leaders of Los Angeles have organized under a charter just granted by the State for the purpose of providing a universal religious atmosphere for the University of California at Los Angeles. Incorporated as the University Religious Conference, the organization will have for its purpose ministering to the religious and moral welfare of students and others associated with the university.

The incorporators include prominent Catholics, Jews, Protestants, as well as students associated with campus societies. A number of business men also are lending support to the movement which has the indorsement and co-operation of the faculty.

One of the aims of the conference is to provide quarters adjacent to the Westwood campus containing libraries, lecture and assembly rooms, dormitories and other facilities for the social and moral welfare of the students.

It also proposes to encourage the establishment of places of worship in the vicinity of the campus.

The officers of the conference are Dr. James B. Fox, president; Father Thomas K. Gorman, vice-president; Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin, second vice-president; C. I. D. Moore, treasurer, and St. Clair Evans, executive secretary. The headquarters at present will be Newman Hall, adjacent to the present campus.

Legion to Name Officers Friday

Representatives of the local American Legion post will be present at the annual meeting of the Legion's Los Angeles County Council next Friday evening, when the annual election of officers takes place. The session will be held in Patriotic Hall.

Several names have been mentioned for the office, including Lloyd Nix, San Pedro attorney; Dr. J. T. Connolly of Culver City; Bert Mann of Owensmouth; E. W. Gilliland of Glendale; Shofstall of Maywood, and Clarence Kincaid of Hollywood.

NEW STORE TO BE OPEN NEXT WEEK

Hollywood Retail Branch of Sears, Roebuck & Co. Will Cost $2,000,000

The third retail department store of Sears, Roebuck & Co. in this city will be opened on October 4, next, when the Hollywood branch of the nationally known merchandising concern throws open its doors. With the opening of this store, Sears, Roebuck & Co. will have eighteen stores in operation in the Southwest district, with headquarters in Los Angeles.

The new store, which represents an investment of $2,000,000 for ground, building, fixtures and merchandise, is on Santa Monica Boulevard near Western avenue. It is a new three-story building containing 95,000 square feet of floor space, of which 75,000 will be used for the display of merchandise.

According to J. L. Gurney, general manager of Sears Roebuck & Co. retail stores in the Southwest, the store will employ 250 persons.

The customary feature of free parking for Sears, Roebuck patrons will be afforded the shoppers at the Hollywood store. More than 200 automobiles can park in the space which will be provided.

C. R. Cook, general manager of Sears, Roebuck interests in this territory, announced also yesterday that soon after this store is in operation the parent organization will open two more stores in this section of the country, these being at San Diego and San Jose. The two Sears, Roebuck stores already operated in Los Angeles are at Vermont and Slauson avenues and at Boyle avenue and Ninth street.

Loyola Drive Generals Ready to Seek Funds

John R. Quinn, former National Commander of the American Legion, and Benno Brink, attorney, yesterday divided honors as the first two generals to complete their divisions of 125 men each in the campaign to raise a fund of $4,000,000 for the construction of Loyola University.

Arriving at campaign headquarters almost at the same moment, Quinn and Brink yesterday filed a report with Judge Myers, general chairman, that they had completed their team organization and are ready to seek funds to construct the seventeen buildings of the new Loyola University on the Del Rey Hills.

To Dr. George Winfield Scott, a captain in Quinn's division, goes the honor of having the largest team in the organization. He has seventeen lieutenants.

McCarthy Heads Pier Ballroom

George T. McCarthy, pioneer Southland amusement man, has been appointed manager of the Egyptian Ballroom at the end of Ocean Park pier, according to announcement of E. P. King, general manager of the pier.

GEORGE T. McCARTHY

McCarthy entered the show business here shortly after returning from service with the A. E. F. in France. His wide experience as theatrical producer inspired many prominent amusement enterprises in Los Angeles. He is said to have been one of the prime movers in the effort to popularize public dancing when he first took over the direction of the Cinderella Roof several years ago. He recently has been associated with Bill Paine in the management of a cabaret.

THOUSANDS GET HELP OF CHEST

Aid Given 263,917 During Last Twelve Months

Milk for Children Saved Many Young Lives

Aged Assisted and Mothers Provided Care

The Los Angeles Community Chest aided 263,917 individuals who were either sick, crippled, destitute, aged or orphaned during the past twelve months, according to statistics made public yesterday by its social welfare department. An additional 96,482 persons, principally children, benefited by better citizenship organizations and neighborhood settlements.

The services thus rendered 360,399 men, women and children are divided between the institutional members of the Chest as follows:

Twenty-one welfare agencies served 20,383 destitute families.

Two agencies distributed gratis 602,634 quarts of milk to undernourished children in schools and homes.

One emergency home sheltered thirty-four mothers with their forty-nine children.

Thirteen children's orphanages and schools sheltered, cared for and gave training to 2805 dependent small boys and girls.

One agency placed 333 waifs, deserted or orphaned children in adoptive homes.

YOUNG LIVES SAVED

One children's clinic distributed to 116 infants 43,808 ounces of mothers' milk, thereby saving many young lives.

Seven day nurseries gave daily care to 931 fatherless children, while their mothers were at work.

Three agencies provided relief and employment to 9014 persons.

Four agencies gave lodgings, meals and other services to 56,322 homeless men.

One agency assisted 21,349 travelers and transients, locating relatives and obtaining food, medical attention and shelter.

Six agencies performed services for 56,800 persons in public hospitals, sanitoria and prisons.

Four women's agencies made and distributed 13,303 garments.

Two loan associations made loans to 1758 persons in poor circumstances.

AGED CARED FOR

Three homes for the aged have as residents 208 men and women without relatives, who are unable to care for themselves.

Ten homes gave preventive or protective care to 1658 problem boys and girls.

Six agencies stood as friends and protectors to 3077 boys and girls against neglect, abuse and demoralizing influences.

One child guidance clinic gave physical and mental examinations and corrective treatment to 579 children.

One vocational service bureau made 668 placements and gave vocational information, guidance and special service to 2196 poor people.

Nine hospitals and preventoria cared for 3201 children and 3001 adults, including cripples, blind people and sufferers from tuberculosis.

Three children's clinics examined and gave follow-up treatment to 16,296 infants and children under 16 years of age.

One agency examined 5297 babies and instructed mothers how to keep them well and train them in correct habits.

Seven general clinics for all ages examined and treated 42,401 individuals.

MOTHERS GIVEN AID

Four maternity homes gave care before, during and after confinement to 227 young women and 222 babies.

Seven veterans' agencies assisted 16,428 ex-service men and their families, providing relief, employment and other assistance.

One employment bureau provided 6927 ex-service men with 29,606 temporary jobs and 508 permanent ones.

Sixteen better citizenship organizations have 89,518 boys and girls as active members. The average yearly income of 70 per cent of the families was $1750, showing that the poorer people were those benefited.

Eleven community centers in poor neighborhoods have a house membership of 6964, and had an aggregate attendance last year of 300,168. They provide musicals, motion pictures, dances, playgrounds, and other means of social contact for families too poor to pay for any amusement or recreation outside of their own four walls.

Antirodeo Bill Gains New Foes

The central coast council of the California Development Association has voted unanimously to oppose initiative No. 21, otherwise known as the "Anti-Rodeo Bill," and to urge the central board of directors of the State association to take similar action.

The council represents virtually all phases of industry and agriculture in the nine central coast counties from Contra Coste county on the north to San Luis Obispo on the south, and it was the expressed feeling of the meeting that the initiative measure represents a serious menace to the live-stock industry of the State, and therefore to agriculture in general.

CHEST CHIEFS NAMED

Carey Hill and C. C. Hine Will Aid in This Year's Drive

Carey S. Hill, vice-president of Bond, Goodwin & Tucker, has accepted one of the vice-chairmanships of the central division of the Community Chest. In announcing the appointment, J. A. H. Kerr, campaign chairman, stated that Mr. Hill will form soliciting committee No. 5. The central division will solicit the larger donors in this year's campaign.

C. C. Hine, vice-president of the Globe Grain and Milling Company, also has been enrolled as one of the vice-chairmen. Mr. Hine will form soliciting committee No. 12.

MARCO WINS COURT TILT ON APPEAL

Asserted Vice Lord Will Not Go to Prison Until Justices Act on Stay

Albert Marco, asserted vice lord of Los Angeles, yesterday won a tentative victory in his fight against being taken to San Quentin penitentiary pending a determination of his appeal from conviction on two counts of assault with a deadly weapon.

At the request of Thomas P. White, Marco's attorney, the Appellate Court suspended all proceedings in the case until October 8, next, on which date the Appellate justices will conduct a hearing on Marco's plea for a stay of execution pending a decision on his appeal.

This is not as complete a victory as Marco sought, but it has sufficient effect both to prevent his immediate removal to the penitentiary and open a gateway for a possible favorable ruling on his petition to be kept in the County Jail until his appeal is decided.

At the same time Marco was sentenced to serve from two to twenty years in the State prison on felony charges growing out of the shooting of Harry Judson and Dominick Conterno in the Ship Cafe at Venice last June, Superior Judge Doran granted a ten-day stay of execution, which expired yesterday.

Later White asked for an extention of the stay pending a ruling on the appeal, which the judge denied. White immediately petitioned the Appellate Court to issue either a writ of prohibition restraining the Superior Court and Sheriff Treager from sending Marco to prison or a stay of execution, which would have the same effect.

The Appellate Court denied the writ of prohibition, ordered the hearing on the stay of execution and suspended all proceedings pending the hearing.

ELK ORGANIST WILL GIVE RECITAL TODAY

The 123rd recital of Sibley G. Pease, resident organist of the Elks' Temple, opposite Westlake Park, will be given today at 4:30 p.m. and will feature the Third Sonata by Felix Borowski. The recital is open to the public without charge.

OLD FURNITURE COMPANY SOLD

California Concern Bought by Eastern Group

Sloane Has Its Chief Store in New York City

Faith in Los Angeles Cited in Transaction

The California Furniture Company has been sold to W. J. Sloane & Co., A. H. Voigt, president of the furniture compa[illegible] [illegible]ounced yesterday. Terms of the sale were not made public.

The California Furniture Company was established here twenty-three years ago. Now it passes into the hands of a national concern.

W. J. Sloane & Co. was established in New York eighty-five years ago. Its main store is on Fifth avenue at Forty-seventh street in New York City and it also has stores in San Francisco and Washington, D. C.

RUGS FEATURED

The purchase of the local store was negotiated by W. M. Stevenson, head of the Sloane company's San Francisco store.

The Sloane stores carry complete lines of home furnishings. They make a special feature of oriental rugs and other floor coverings. They purport to have been the first concern to bring oriental rugs commercially into America for resale. For many years they have been the sole selling agents for some of the large carpet mills in this country.

The Sloane concern also owns and operates a large linoleum plant at Trenton, N. J.

FAITH IN FUTURE

In commenting on the local transaction, Mr. Stevenson said: "We have great faith in the future of Los Angeles as is evidenced by our important investment in this community. Los Angeles long since has developed beyond the experimental stage. It is essentially a home city and an aesthetic city as is indicated by its magnificent homes and its cultural advance.

"The Sloane company is an institution of conservative and yet aggressive ideas and we hope to become an integral part of the commercial and cultural progress of this city.

"We realize that in taking over the interests of the California Furniture Company we are stepping into a ready-made recognition which we hope to perpetuate by maintaining the same high ideals and practices which have established the name Sloane in homes of America."

Today's Bible Text

O satisfy us early with Thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days. Psalm lxxxx:14.

SOMETHING MOLDY

The Socialists in Denmark increased by 60,000 their vote in the recent elections. Back in the days of Hamlet there was something smelly about Denmark, and maybe this has something to do with it.

FACING BOTH WAYS

Said that Gov. Smith made his western invasion while putting trust in suspenders and an old-fashioned nightie. Back on Broadway he always wore a fancy belt and swathed himself in pajamas when he climbed into his bunk. Is this toting fair with the public?

UNDER CONVICTION

Within a few days Los Angeles juries convicted two men of murder and decreed that they should hang. Both the men killed the women they were supposed to love and both were under the influence of liquor at the time. Intoxication is no longer any defense against the gallows, but juries in other days frequently considered it as such. Just now the juries appear to be carrying conviction with them.

WORLD'S FAIRS

New York is planning to hold a world's fair in 1932 as commemorative of the two-hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. More than twenty civic and business organizations are already discussing the plans. At the same time Chicago has made much progress upon the preliminaries for her own international exposition, which will be pulled off in 1932 in connection with the centennial of the city's founding. Possibly there is room in the world for two big shows—a year apart, but it would have been better had Gotham kept out of the game. The citizens have Coney Island and "Abie's Irish Rose." What more do they want?

FAVORITE SONS

California, Kansas and Arkansas have never been represented on the national tickets of the major parties until this campaign and the citizens of these States will now proceed to roll up majorities for their favorite sons. It is a rather safe bet that Los Angeles county will give Herbert Hoover the largest majority that any county in the United States will give any candidate—this having due consideration for the massive figures oozing from such great centers as New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. There are five different counties in what is known as the metropolitan district of New York. The Smith vote there is necessarily divided.

THE GREAT SILENCES

Said that a Hollywood movie director wasted about $2000 worth of film on a sneeze. These articulate pictures or talkies have to be made on sound-proof stages. The director may no longer yelp at his hirelings through a massive megaphone. The actors must know what to do or say before the clicking begins. In this particular picture the director himself had a sneezing spasm in the midst of a love scene and when the thing was tried in the projection room it was found that the sneezes registered so vividly that the situation was wrecked. The scene had to be done over again. Thus showing that our pet industry has acquired a new hazard.

THE BIG LEAGUES

It would seem that Argentina is definitely out of the League of Nations. The government has not been participating in League affairs since the first assembly. At that time the representatives put on their hats because Germany was not admitted on terms of full fraternity. Nevertheless, Argentina kept up its dues in the big club and could have sat in at any time had the government been so minded. But under President Irigoyen this tie has been severed. The budget committee has cut out the appropriation for League charges, and the country is aloof from its Old World connections. The citizens want a league for the western hemisphere, but not one that includes Europe. This thing may shape up like our baseball combinations. There will be a National League across the Atlantic and an American League on this side. But watch for the world series.

SMITH AND THE TARIFF

Whether Gov. Smith proposes, as he has intimated, to "let well enough alone" with regard to the Republican tariff system, his first specific reference to this subject at the outset of his swing around the country indicates two highly important facts, first, that he is ignorant of the subject, and, second, that he regards it with prejudice.

His speech at Omaha was intended primarily as a discussion of farm problems, but his incidental comments on the tariff revealed an astonishing lack of knowledge. The Democratic Presidential nominee is an able man and has, in New York, accomplished many worthwhile improvements in State government. Hence, he merely detracts from his earned place in public esteem when he essays to speak authoritatively on matters concerning which he shows himself to be uninformed.

An essential part of the Republican application of the tariff is production for the products sold by the American farmer. Experience has shown that regardless of the amount of production, the farmer's chief market is in America and that his prosperity depends upon the sale of his products, at a reasonable profit, to his own people. The farmer is thus protected from unfair competition with the agricultural products of other lands, where living standards and purchasing values are lower than our own. He gains additional advantage through the fact that no tariff duties are placed on the essential equipment needed for the operation of his farm.

Yet, Gov. Smith in his Omaha speech informed his hearers that the farmer is selling in an unprotected market and buying in a protected market. The specific instances he mentioned to prove his case included references to an increase which he said was due to the tariff, in the price of harvesters and binders—items of farm equipment which are on the free list.

Reference to this inaccuracy was made by Dr. Work, chairman of the Republican National Committee, who also corrected the Democratic nominee in his charge that the tariff has caused a rise in the cost of shoe manufacturing. Shoes, likewise, are on the free list.

The New York Governor might do well to emulate the example of Grover Cleveland, who confessed to his admiring supporters that he knew absolutely nothing about many essential phases of Federal government. The American people are prone to weigh the abilities of men and not to demand the expert knowledge which can come only by study and experience.

And while it may be a matter of Republican gratification that the Democratic leader has sounded a note calculated to attract the unfavorable reaction of the country, it is far more important to the country as a whole that an aspirant for the Presidency is engaging in seemingly irresponsible consideration of a problem so vital to national well-being.

It is to be expected that Smith will draw the critical fire of Republicans in the present campaign; in this instance he has himself been the means of establishing a foundation for some of the criticism.

Thus the Democratic nominee inadvertently again emphasizes the real importance of the tariff as a basic issue in the Presidential campaign—an issue which is of greater concern to the people of California than the New York Governor's views on many other important matters.

The Republican tariff protects California products and California producers, and the economic welfare of the State will take precedence over other considerations, whether they be personal preferences or political prejudices. In the logical application of the California viewpoint the opinions of Candidate Smith and his half-formed conclusions will contrast most unfavorably with the record, the experience and the known convictions of Hoover—a responsible exponent of the fundamental principles of the protective tariff.

THE PASADENA PLAN

The smell of varnish has hardly left the junior-college idea, and now comes the announcement to the educational world that staid Pasadena is about to develop her junior college course into a full-fledged four-year curriculum. Diplomas of highest rank will be delivered at the homes. Culture while you wait to grow up will be dispensed. Evidently more than old fogies gather around the Board of Education in the Crown City Hall.

It is an experiment with the cultural world standing by watching. If Pasadena succeed, the infection is likely to spread to other towns and cities. Indeed, nothing can hinder rural communities from having their union universities in the future.

Will the present State and other institutions of higher learning weather the change? Possibly these may be driven to graduate and research work. Vocational training and specialization will occupy their energies.

Already one university has sensed the times and has discarded its freshman and sophomore years. When the present grist of students in these two classes shall have run out, no more will be matriculated. Will other universities follow?

Under the Pasadena plan in operation, it is declared that boys and girls will be able to live at home and receive the best a professional faculty force can give. Degrees can be picked off the bushes in any back yard.

From the standpoint of economy, it will have its distinct advantages. Whether this will be popular with ambitious youth chafing against restraint remains to be seen after fair trial. Whether youngsters will develop as rapidly under the shadow of the parental roof-tree is another uncertainty. Whether rough corners of character can be rubbed off at home as well as in a dormitory or frat house, may occasion discussion. Flinging a fledgling out upon its own wings and resources has its disadvantages—and advantages.

At all events we are in a transition age. Few appear to know exactly where they are headed. Some values may be lost in sloughing off the old. Other benefits may accrue. That youth will be better educated goes without saying. That the prospective regime will be better for both character and scholarship will be an experiment.

The LEE SIDE o' L.A.

BY Lee Shippey

WE ARE indeed glad that we are not a celebrity. We have some friends who are celebrities and their lives are not their own. They are on parade all the time. Wherever they go, people point and whisper. Every day they have to go to places which bore them to profanity—but, because they're celebrities, they have to keep smiling. Every day they have to change clothes two or three times.

Recently a Class A celebrity, one who is deluged with unrefusable invitations and pointed out and interviewed wherever he goes, in America or Europe, arrived in Los Angeles for a couple of months. He'd like to stay here all the time, but a couple of months is the longest he can stay anywhere. It happened that some of his dearest boyhood friends also were friends of ours. His parents once had invited us to dinner with their guest, Irvin Cobb. And so we wrote the celebrity a note of welcome to our city. He replied with a telegram—fancy telegraphing from the Biltmore to the Times Office—saying he often had heard his dad speak of us and was eager to see us. He'd give us a ring the very first chance he got. But weeks passed and he never got the chance.

How They Suffer

Poor chap! Think what he's missing. Probably his own wife has to make a date three weeks in advance when she wants to have dinner with him on a certain date. We know, from the way he was reared and from our mutual friends, that he'd enjoy nothing else quite so much as lolling around in old clothes on some old-fashioned farm where they still take pride in blooded horses. He hates to dress for dinner every evening. He'd give his shirt—or a dozen of his hardest shirts—to trade places for a day with us. But we wouldn't let him give 'em to us, for we have no use for 'em. We have not had on a hard shirt in twenty years. We haven't even had on a hard collar for eight years. We never wore evening dress but once, and we wouldn't have the nerve to ask the friend who loaned us that suit to trust us again. You see, we were so clumsy as to spill an ice on the trousers, and sent them to the cleaner, and the cleaner lost them. We tried to keep that from our trusting friend by substituting another pair of trusers. But next time he put the suit on—on what was to have been the grandest occasion of his year—he discovered our strategy and was so vocal about it that we got angry and vowed we'd never borrow his clothes again, and he agreed that he'd bet his life we wouldn't. We felt he was very unreasonable, for we had given him good measure. The substituted trousers were not only just as big as the ones which were lost, but five good inches larger in the waist.

Blessings of Obscurity

Yes, we're mighty glad we're no celebrity. If we were, how would we dare sit at ease in one of those nice comfy places in which you can look over last year's magazines while you get your only pair of shoes half-soled? Now we don't feel the least bit self-conscious, for nobody knows us. We can go into any old shop and inquire the price, and say: "Let's see something cheaper, please"—but if we were a celebrity we couldn't. Now we think nothing of wearing our tan shoes with our dark suit or our other suit. We can smoke old Virginia cheroots without being sneered at, or a cob pipe, instead of two-bit cigars.

Fair Warning

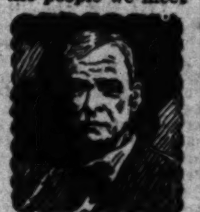
Why, we won't even attempt to get into evening clothes for the Woman's Press Club, which has been foolish enough to invite us to its press studio dinner. Not that we wouldn't do nearly anything for the dear ladies of our profession, but how can we? So few newspaper men have dress clothes to lend, and we know that none of the ladies could lend us evening clothes in which we wouldn't feel painfully embarrassed.

OH! MR. SHIPPEY

Ed Howe

We believe Ed Howe is the quaintest, most original thinker in America. What most of us think is merely what we have absorbed from the ancients and give out more or less shaped—and diminished—by our own minds. Ed Howe thinks as originally as a child would—a child guided by seventy years of varied experience, wide knowledge and exceptionally keen observation.

We have been surprised lately to find how many of the people we meet around town are readers of Ed Howe's Monthly. It must have thousands of readers here, as it has in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and elsewhere. Yet somehow there is something different about even the addressing of that little paper. O. G. Lord and L. W. Lord of Los Angeles, who live together, subscribe for one copy. Sometimes it comes addressed to "The House of Lords," sometimes to "O Lord!" sometimes to "The Lord Boys," and so on.



INSECTS

Insects decided the location of the country's capital on the Potomac. At least Dr. R. C. Williams, Jr., president of the American Entomological Society, credits the mosquito with driving the capitol buildings out of Philadelphia to Washington, D. C. He might also have said that flies hastened the signing of the Declaration of Independence; for legend has it that the patriots were gathered in a room over a livery stable in the Quaker City. The flies functioned even better than the British, for they stimulated several recalcitrants to seize the pen and sign quickly so as to escape. The flies on top of the bald heads appear to have succeeded where arguments had failed inside.

Some State capitals look as if they had been located by insects. And bugs seem to have built others. But while the mosquito is generally regarded as innocent of a large supply of brains, he certainly used his meager allotment that time in Philadelphia.

The new capital city was laid out in proportions fitting a nation's headquarters. The streets were widened and radiated from the center. It is sometimes an advantage for a city to be created instead of grown. It is too bad that some other cities did not have mosquitoes.

Our chief trouble now is to keep the insects from going to Washington to make our laws. We accord them hearty appreciation for founding the capital. Yet we want our laws made by men. We want men who are big enough to serve the whole country. We want men with world vision. Insects whose outlook is bounded by a morass are not in demand in the home. After having done a good turn, if the insects will now retire and let the people look after the country from this on, the palladium of liberty will not have to be kept under lock and key.

The country is more in danger from insects that bore into the Constitution, than from boll-weevil in the cotton fields of the South, or corn-borers in the Middle West. The Constitution is worth more than any crop. When entomologists threaten the human race with extinction by insects, they appear to have some grounds for their fear.

At all events we now know why mosquitoes were invented.

A TINSEL CROWN

Monarchists in Poland have offered a crown to Marshal Pilsudski, but if the marshal wanted the blooming thing he could take it under his own power easier than at the hands of a group of courtiers. The monarchists have nothing to give but their assent. So far their utterances are only able to make an impression in the joke column.

OVERLOOKED

Isn't it wonderful how smart the things are that a man forgets to say when the time is ripe.

SMITH ECONOMIES

Among the sins laid to the door of the Republican administration by Gov. Smith in his acceptance speech, was that of extravagance.

When it comes to government expenditures, it may be assumed that Gov. Smith knows whereof he speaks, because the administration at Albany throughout the Smith regime has been notorious for its extravagance and consequent burden upon the taxpayers of this State. But he must have been aware that his charges were nothing more than claptrap, because they are not borne out by the record. What has been accomplished by the Harding-Coolidge administrations in the way of reducing the public debt and otherwise lightening the costs of Federal government may still fall short of Gov. Smith's ideals, but at all events, there has been some improvement shown there. That is more than can be said of the Albany record for most of the past eight years.

Let the figures speak for themselves. Gov. Smith held office the first time during 1919-1920. He was succeeded for the following two years by Gov. Miller, whose apparent economies did not suit the Tammany crowd. When Smith was returned in 1923, the State's expenditures again increased by leaps and bounds. Here are the taxes collected and total expenditures of the Federal government and New York State since 1920, with the percentages of decrease in the former and of increases in the latter (last three figures in dollars omitted):

Fiscal year ended June 30	—United States— Taxes	Total expenditures	—New York— Special taxes	Total expenditures
1928	$2,173,952	$3,643,519	$181,223	$217,772
1927	2,224,992	3,493,584	161,244	186,183
1926	1,982,040	3,584,987	135,240	173,192
1925	1,760,537	3,529,643	123,243	161,586
1924	1,842,144	3,506,677	104,109	146,456
1923	1,678,607	3,697,478	99,984	131,868
1922	2,068,128	3,795,302	92,874	126,669
1921	3,206,046	5,538,209	102,928	135,608
1920	3,944,949	6,482,090	94,865	93,924
8-yr. change	—44.8%	—43.8%	+91.0%	+131.8%

The following table shows what both governments have accomplished in the matter of the outstanding debt and interest thereon (last three figures in dollars omitted):

Fiscal year ended June 30	—United States— Debt	Interest	—New York— Debt	Interest
1928	$17,604,293	$731,764	$359,817	$14,094
1927	18,510,174	787,019	341,069	13,687
1926	19,643,183	831,469	315,528	13,228
1925	20,516,272	882,014	318,456	13,100
1924	21,251,120	938,740	308,491	10,973
1923	22,349,687	1,055,088	264,244	11,042
1922	22,964,079	898,485	286,998	11,106
1921	23,976,250	996,676	257,729	9,695
1920	24,297,918	1,024,024	236,024	9,527
8-yr. change	—27.5%	—28.5%	+52.4%	+60.8%

There is no need to elaborate on these figures. But, in the light of Smith's acceptance remarks, it might be interesting to recall what he said on June 8, last, in a special report defending the State financial program:

"We constantly hear of the increased cost of the government, always coupled with the suggestion that there is something of political advantage in driving up the appropriations. Nothing could be further from the truth. A large part of the cost of government is fixed and definite; a comparatively small part of it is liquid and subject to change."—[The Wall Street Journal.

THE WEEK IN POLITICS

BY KYLE D. PALMER

Coming so prominently to the fore as to overshadow some of the genuine issues in the Presidential contest, the so-called "whispering campaign" against Hoover and Smith has not only drawn rebukes from the nominees themselves and from their respective party representatives, but has attracted the scornful denunciation of editors and other public leaders without regard to party throughout the country.

Perhaps it is more a reflection of the innate decency and good sportsmanship of the American people than of popular ignorance that the term, "whispering campaign," carries very little enlightenment to the average citizen. He does not know what the whisperers whisper, nor is he disposed to inform himself on the subject.

When, however, the circulation of scurrilous and fabricated reports, either by word of mouth or through venal publications, reaches nation-wide proportions, the situation takes on a serious and formidable aspect. As far as the record shows, there is not a single instance of any Presidential candidate being defeated by the back-fence gossip and slanderous imaginings of his unscrupulous political foes, but many of the country's most respected leaders have been targets for the tongues and pens of those whom today we catalog as "character assassins."

George Washington did not escape; Andrew Jackson's life was embittered; Abraham Lincoln was viciously assailed; Garfield, Cleveland, Roosevelt, Wilson—all experienced the assaults to which cowardly tongues and irresponsibly prejudiced minds give utterance. And now—Hoover and Smith.

In a country which permits not only freedom of speech but considerable license as well, the tactics of those using anonymity as a shield can have no claim upon public attention or confidence. A slanderous whisper is as a shot in the dark. Sometimes these so-called "whispers" are taken up by well-meaning but fanatical persons and given a semblance of respectability. Then, of course, they become doubly dangerous and vicious.

Neither Hoover nor Smith has been spared in this campaign. Yet it seems to this writer that the sole result of uttered and printed slanders and slurs has been to arouse bitterness and resentment against their authors.

It is entirely in keeping with our national sense of fair play that the vicious and idle gossip about Smith and Hoover has won friends for each among those from whom an opposite reaction was sought.

In any event, the press, the pulpit and individual conversations are filled at this time with discussion and, for the most part, reprehension of the type of campaign activity which finds expression in attempts to besmirch the reputations of the two leading candidates for the country's most important elective office.

And if Smith, the Democratic nominee, has shown himself more restive under the unfair attacks, it must be admitted that his provocation, on the whole, has been greater. He has been pictured as illiterate, personally dishonest, drunken and dominated by foreign religious influences.

Hoover, whose entire life affords an outstanding example of personal integrity, upright living and unselfish service to mankind, has been viciously accused of fraud in private business transactions, of diverting public funds, of seeking to transfer his allegiance from his own government to that of Great Britain.

Each lie in its turn has been exposed both as it related to the Governor of New York and to Hoover. The facts have been made available to any person desiring to obtain them. No excuse for circulating or believing untruths about either party nominee remains. But the attacks of this nature seem to be increasing rather than diminishing.

It is, of course, logical that some of the issues in the Presidential campaign this year will arouse sharp disagreements and that many persons of extreme views will develop exaggerated opinions — and express them with vehemence. In fact there are issues of conviction and conscience upon which men and women of the highest ideals and purposes will vigorously differ, but they will fight their battle in the open, courageously, cleanly and fairly. Many an eye has been blackened in a righteous cause and a tooth loosened or a nose bloodied without sacrifice of right principles.

The respective political and economic purposes of Hoover and Smith and the abilities each has demonstrated will hold the attention of the major portion of the electorate and, when the ballots have been counted, will be the determining factors in the Presidential election.

However it would seem to be a part of good citizenship to take an active hand in the work of exposing and punishing the gossipers and others resorting to ignoble methods in the national campaign. Considerable latitude under the law is allowed those who wish to discuss and criticise aspirants for public office. When this limit is exceeded, the public welfare is as seriously jeopardized as is the peace of mind of him who is traduced.

In this regard something in the form of a gentle admonition might be voiced to those in charge of the Democratic headquarters on Hill street in Los Angeles. On the plate-glass windows of this establishment are pasted many campaign documents and pamphlets, some of them containing slighting and untruthful references to Hoover, allegations exploded long ago.

The energy with which friends of Gov. Smith have been defending him from attack may have caused an impression that the Governor's opponents have shared sole responsibility for this type of activity. On the contrary some of the ugliest and most reprehensible rumors set in motion have emanated from sources unfriendly to Hoover.

The fundamental campaign issues have been met by Hoover and by Smith according to their respective training, temperament and conviction. These issues are bigger than person and extend beyond the confines of party. They relate to the economic and civic foundation of the government of the United States. Any citizen taking time sufficient for intelligent analysis of these issues will have no occasion or opportunity for consideration of reports, rumors and gossip which, if true and important, would be presented by those assuming responsibility for their circulation.

In the Presidential campaign of 1844 an attack was made on James K. Polk by an individual using the pseudonym of "Baron Roorbach." The consequences of this particular bit of scurrility proved so favorable to Polk and so disastrous to its author that a new word was written into our language—"roorback."

And the same spirit that caused this repudiation of a "whispering campaign" eighty-four years ago still exists. Roorbacks are no respecters of persons or parties.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Our Washington Bureau of Information is prepared to give you accurate information on any question of fact you may ask. Send in your inquiries together with 2 cents in stamps to cover postage to the Los Angeles Times Information Bureau, Frederic J. Haskin, director, Washington, D. C.

Q.: How many Secretaries of the Treasury did Andrew Jackson have? S. R.

A.: President Jackson changed Secretaries four times. The original Secretary was Samuel D. Ingham. He was followed by Louis McLane, then W. J. Duane, Roger D. Taney and Levi Woodbury. In turn Roger Taney was appointed and, at Jackson's request, stopped making deposits of money in the United States Bank and its branches. The Cabinet was against this policy and the former Secretary of the Treasury had refused to carry it out. After Taney's action, the Senate refused to confirm his nomination as Secretary. He was afterward appointed to the bench of the United States Supreme Court.

Q.: Do the various keys in music express different feelings or emotions? G. W.

A.: There is a general belief that certain keys do express particular emotions best, and many composers consciously or unconsciously employ them. The minor keys as a class are sad, somber and melancholy, each having particular attributes. In the major keys, C is simple, naive and commonplace; G is rural, merry; B flat, noble, elegant, graceful; E flat, sonorous, vigorous, chivalrous; and so on.

Q.: Are foreign Ambassadors allowed to bring intoxicating beverages into the country? S. T.

A.: Diplomatic representatives are allowed to bring wines and liquors into the United States as an act of international courtesy.

Q.: What county is St. Louis, Mo., in? B. G.

A.: The Postoffice Department says that St. Louis, Mo., is not in any county. The city government executes both municipal and county functions for the territory it occupies, and it always has done so.

Q.: What is Blackwell's Island? A. P.

A.: This is a narrow, rocky island in the East River, between Manhattan Island and Long Island, and forms part of New York City. It is about a mile and a half long by one-eighth mile wide, and is used exclusively for the penal institutions and hospitals under charge of the City of New York.

Q.: When a tiger and a lion fight each other, which wins? J. McC.

A.: Authorities differ as to the fighting qualities of a tiger and a lion. However, records show that in more instances, when the two animals fight, the tiger is the victor.

Q.: Who created Turandot when the opera was first produced in Germany? A. L. T.

A.: Anne Roselle sang the title role when Puccini's opera was first produced outside of Italy. This was in July, 1926, at the Dresden Opera.

Q.: Which furs are for dress wear and which for sports wear? L. D.

A.: The style of the garment determines this to some extent. Generally speaking, furs for dress wear are: American broadtail (processed lamb,) broadtail, caracul, astrakhan, weasel, ermine, squirrel, chinchilla and mole. Furs for sports wear: muskrat, raccoon, civet cat, skunk, opossum, the leopard and his kindred, Russian pony and korova suslik, antelope and gazelle, goat and kid, chipmunk and burunduk. Dependable coat furs for most occasions are: Alaska seal, Hudson seal (dyed muskrat,) sealine and near-seal (dyed coney,) mink, kolinsky, beaver, nutria, krimmer, and Persian lamb.

NONAGENARIAN DEFIES AGE

Sets Example for Flappers by Painting Landscapes and Retaining Youth by Mental Exercise

Flappers of Los Angeles (if any,) painting and powdering away for dear life and dreading the specter of old age at 40, meet Mrs. Mary Sprague Lamoreaux, 95 years of age, who announces that she has "just begun to live."

"Yes, I am more than 95, but a young woman should not be asked to state her exact age," said Mrs. Lamoreaux. "Besides, years have little to do with the spirit of youth for, as some one has said, 'age is not in the province of the body, but is vassal to the court of mind.'"

MRS. MARY SPRAGUE LAMOREAUX.

Mrs. Lamoreaux, who lives at 2035 West Twenty-eighth street, was born in Arcadia, N. Y., and spent her girlhood in that city. In 1854 she was married to the late Peter G. Lamoreaux, a noted gold seeker in California in the days of '49. She is the mother of eight children and came to Los Angeles with her family in 1907 from Minneapolis, Minn.

On the walls of Mrs. Lamoreaux's beautiful home hang many pictures, mostly landscapes, many of which she painted years ago, although some of the best ones are Southern California scenes, recently produced. One of her most remarkable creations came flaming from her brush only a few weeks ago. It is a small landscape, depicting trees, rocks and a winding road which fades away into depths of rural beauty.

"Where do you get your marvelous colors?" Mrs. Lamoreaux was asked.

"It is hard to tell," she answered. "I cannot be quite sure. They seem to come from some other dimension of space, or from a well of inspiration deep within the enternally creative soul."

Like California's beloved poet Sterling, who "mourned because he could not rightly utter in the day what God taught in the night," Mrs. Lamoreaux sometimes pauses in her philosophizing, as if stricken dumb at the vain attempt to define thoughts and feelings concerning those mystic experiences which make her life perpetually radiant.

"Since early youth I have been intensely interested in philosophy and poetry," said Mrs. Lamoreaux. "I cannot remember the time when I was not thrilled by the manifestation of the soul of beauty, there is an indefinable beauty, that exists beyond the reach of art, and perhaps beyond the region of the mind, which only the soul may know in its fullness."

"You do not believe, then, that the mind is the greatest part of man?"

"The mind is the instrument of the soul and the soul alone is eternal and substantial," Mrs. Lamoreaux answered. "It has been said that 'the dreamer lives forever while the thinker dies with the day.' These recent dreams of mine may fade, as do the dreams of night, but the dreamer will live on. Thoughts are born, grow, change, mature and die, but that which gives birth to thought is everlasting."

Girl Dies From Poison Potion

When the parents of Elda Robella, 15-year-old Italian girl, returned to their home yesterday afternoon from a shopping trip, they found their daughter lying on her bed in agony. She admitted to them that she had swallowed a poisonous potion, which she found in the home. Shortly after being taken to the Georgia-street hospital she died, without giving any clew as to her motive for suicide.

According to the girl's parents, she had no love affair or troubles of any nature, although she was of a peculiarly reticent and retiring nature. She came here from Italy eight years ago and was attending school here.

The parents are Mr. and Mrs. Louis Robella and their home is at 3036 Moss street.

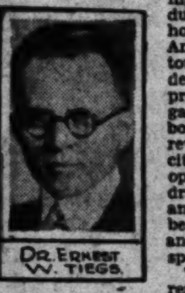
NIGHT LIFE HAS ITS PROFIT, TOO

Evening College Lets Many Gain Knowledge

Class Schedules Fixed for Student's Advantage

Many Graduates of U.S.C. Started Elsewhere

There is little difference between the words "recreation" and "education," and there is no slighting of either during evening hours in Los Angeles. Both tourist and resident are impressed by the gayety of the boulevards, the revues of the city's stages, the opera and drama, ballets and orchestras, beach pageants and Coliseum spectacles.



DR. ERNEST W. TIEGS.

Tourist and resident alike are equally impressed by the eager and energetic thousands of men and women who throng our evening high schools and colleges for higher education.

Dr. Ernest W. Tiegs, dean of university college, the downtown evening division of the University of Southern California, and Mrs. M. O. Joy, his assistant, state that all indications points to an increased enrollment this year over last year when nearly 6000 adult students attended the classes at Seventh and Los Angeles streets.

NO INTERFERENCE

"Social calendars are not interfered with," states Dr. Tiegs, "for each class meets but once a week for a double period of about two hours and a half, instead of breaking into several evenings a week.

MRS. MATTIE O. JOY.

"Cultural calendars are aided, for lecture courses in appreciation of music, art appreciation, modern drama, literary masterpieces, and French and Spanish cannot to contribute to capacity for enjoyment of the finer things of life.

"Adequate rest and recreation is not interfered with, for no student is permitted to attend more than three classes a week.

"Differences between men are not great, but such differences are vital. One hour each evening means 1825 hours in five years. In 1825 hours great possibilities may be accomplished.

EDUCATION COMPLETED

"Last June, 113 of the graduates who received their diplomas at the commencement exercises of the University of Southern California had completed their scholastic requirements at university college. Many had discontinued their college careers previously due to financial necessity, and later found an opportunity at this evening college to complete their university education. We have students registered representing more than 150 schools, colleges and universities from almost every section of this country and several foreign institutions."

More than 175 courses are given, including such subjects as aviation, hotel management, architectural design, retailing, nautical astronomy, advertising, cost estimating, petroleum geology, commercial Spanish, stagecraft, public speaking, and parliamentary procedure.

Organized on the quarter basis, so that classes meet four quarters a year, it is possible for employed persons to obtain a university education in a period of six or more academic years at university college.

As university college is an organic part of the University of Southern California students are entitled to all of the privileges of the Trojan student body.

SANITY TEST FOR WOMAN IN SHOOTING

Mrs. Ruth Sword Will be Examined October 1 Due to Incident in Stage

Mrs. Ruth Sword, who shot Wilbur Ervin in a Pickwick stage en route to Los Angeles shortly after it left Pomona on the 13th inst., will be examined by the Insanity Commission October 1, next, to ascertain whether she is criminally insane, Capt. Bright, chief of the Sheriff's homicide detail announced yesterday.

The complaint was issued to Deputy Sheriff Croushorn by Sherman Smith of the Insanity Commission.

Unless Mrs. Sword is pronounced criminally insane, she will be prosecuted for murder, Capt. Bright stated.

"She is a narcotic addict," the officer asserted, "and if she is placed in an institution merely as an insane narcotic addict she probably would be cured and released within a year. We believe that she is dangerously insane and will seek to have her confined permanently."

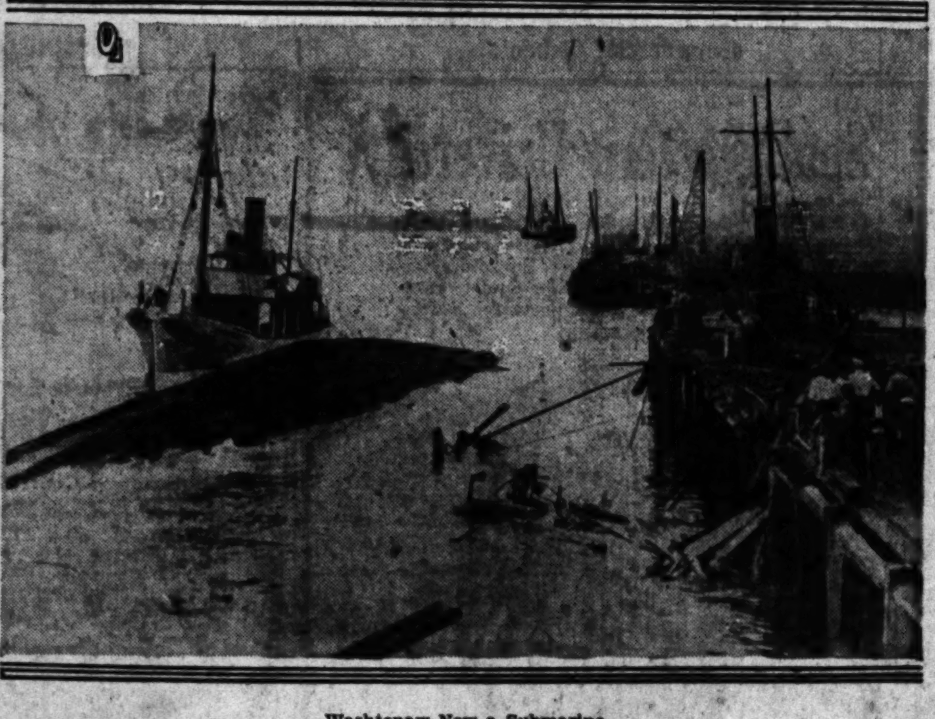
At the time of the shooting Mrs. Sword said that she had shot Ervin, whom she had never seen before, because she thought that he was following her. Later she admitted that she had made a mistake and shot the wrong man, the officers assert.

RICHARD ARLEN COLLAPSES

Richard Arlen, screen actor, collapsed on a set yesterday at the Paramount studio. He was quickly revived, however, and soon was able to continue with his work in a jungle picture in which he is being featured. The day before Arlen broke a small bone in his foot when he stumbled over a camera tripod. He insisted on continuing with his work in the picture in spite of the pain and this brought about his collapse. He is expected to be fully recovered by his rest over the week-end.

TANKER TAKES DIVE AND STAYS DOWN

Salvagers Predict That She Will Sail Seas Again



Washtenaw Now a Submarine

"You can't keep a good ship down," declare salvagers who declare that the old tanker Washtenaw, which turned over and sank at San Pedro night before last from an undetermined cause, will sail the seas again.

That is, after she is refloated, and it is regarded as a real job and a costly once. Cursory examination failed to reveal her badly wrenched by the careening, and the only material damage is believed to be to her generators and wiring.

A. J. Herkey, a pipe fitter, is being advanced as the hero of the incident. When he saw the ship listing, he hurried aboard, warning men in the engine and boiler rooms, and awakened a seaman asleep in a bunk. He had to heave away a huge chest, which had fallen and blocked the seaman's door, to rescue him.

The little tug Husky, recently bought by Parke & Kibele, sank during the night, her side crushed in by a falling mast from the tanker.

W.C.T.U. WHETS AX FOR AL

Temperance Leaders Prepare for County and State Sessions in War on Smith

"We are so busy preparing for our coupnty convention at Burbank next week and our State convention at Redlands two weeks later, at both of which we shall lay plans for the defeat of Al Smith, that we haven't time to eat," said Mrs. Hattie C. Young, recording secretary of the State W.C.T.U., as she sat in her office at Temperance Temple yesterday, writing programs and answering questions and refusing to touch a tempting dish of food which an assistant had placed before her.

"Al Smith a 'great legislator'? Who said so?" continued Mrs. Young, turning like a lioness on an apologist for the Tammany Tiger. "Yes, he obtained an eight-hour law for women and obtained some milk for a few starving babies—and on that record he seeks the votes of American women! And if he succeeds, and turns the country over to the liquor interests—as he would—more children will suffer for his success than ever were fed by his vote-bargaining legislation."

MANY TO ATTEND

More than 300 official delegates, representing 6000 members, are expected to attend the forty-fourth annual convention of the Los Angeles County W.C.T.U. to be conducted at the Methodist Church of Burbank from the 25th to the 28th insts., inclusive. The public is invited to all the sessions which will include musical programs and addresses by prominent speakers from various parts of the State.

The convention will begin with a banquet next Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. at the Burbank Christian Church, all other meetings to be conducted at the Methodist Church. Mrs. Hattie Doughty will preside at the banquet and speakers will include Mayor Lapsley of Burbank, Homer Reed, president of the Burbank Chamber of Commerce, Mrs. William Marks, president of the Woman's Club, Dr. A. Austin, president of the Ministerial Association, Prof. S. A. Henderson, superintendent of public schools; Mrs. Herbert Jones, head of the Parent Teacher Association, and Mrs. Eva C. Wheeler, State W.C.T.U. president.

REPORTS WILL BE MADE

Next Wednesday's sessions will start at 8:30 a.m., under chairmanship of Mrs. Doughty, president of the county W.C.T.U. Reports of the last year's work will be made by heads of the various departments, followed by an annual address of Mrs. Doughty. The young people's branch session will be under the direction of Miss Alma Squires. A memorial service at noon will be conducted by Mrs. Lura H. Boleyn. Wednesday afternoon addresses on "Narcotics," "The Bible in Schools" and other popular topics will be made by W.C.T.U. leaders. The chief address Wednesday evening will be by Lieut.-Gov. Fitts.

Department leaders will be heard in addr[illegible] Thursday morning. On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Lydia Michener will speak in "The Kellogg Peace Plan," Mrs. Bernice Johnson will discuss "Citizenship and Legislation," Mrs. Emma Budileer will give an address on "Social Morality and Law Enforcement" and Dr. Len Hutchins will tell of temperance work in various parts of the world. Thursday evening's session will be featured by a musical program and a pageant entitled "The Spirit of W.C.T.U."

The sessions Friday will include election of officers in the morning and addresses in the afternoon by Charles Randall, Supervisors Bean and McClellan and Mrs. Belle Kearney, formerly State Senator of Mississippi. The convention will close in the evening with a musical program and the annual gold medal contest.

MME. JUSTH CHOSEN JOURNALISTS' HEAD

Mme. Katinka de Justh, Hungarian woman newspaper correspondent, has been elected secretary of the Hollywood Association of Foreign Correspondents, it has been announced. Mme. De Justh succeeds Aleco Lilius, who is ill. Her headquarters will be in Room 320 of the Roosevelt.

BUSINESS LAW TAUGHT

The Roosevelt Evening High School at 450 South Fickett street offers a course in business law upon Monday and Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9 o'clock. The instructor is Charles F. Adams, graduate of the University of California, law department, and a practicing attorney.

CLUB TO EXTEND WORK

Plans to further the work of the California Badger Club along philanthropic and social lines were discussed at the first meeting of its board of directors. The club is comprised of women who formerly lived in the State of Wisconsin. A luncheon has been scheduled for October 17, next, at the clubhouse, 1419 South Wilton street.

BIG SISTERS GIVE LUNCH THURSDAY

Plan for Monthly Meeting and Program Announced by Superintendent Barton

The Big Sister League, which was organized in 1917 and established the Minnie Barton Training Home as a refuge for the city's unfortunate girls, will hold its regular monthly birthday luncheon and program next Thursday at 12:30 p.m. at 2118 Trinity street, Supt. Barton announced yesterday.

During the eleven years of its existence the training home and the Big Sister League have assisted hundreds of girls who were in difficulty in the courts or on probation. Through the league, composed of prominent society and clubwomen, many of the girls have obtained well-paying positions.

In addition to the Minnie Barton Home, the Big Sisters' League has established the Bide-A-Wee Home for expectant mothers who have been deserted by their husbands. Children of the mothers also have been cared for in this home until the mother has obtained a position.

Officers of the league are: Mrs. Louise Mittendorf, president; Mrs. Robert Ladd Gifford, first vice-president; Mrs. Arthur H. Conger, second vice-president; Mrs. Minnie Barton, General superintendent; Mrs. John L. Butler, inspector; Mrs. Mary Brill, recording secretary; Mrs. Harry Ransom, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Earl Metcalf, and Mrs. John L. Butler, directors, and Mrs. Estelle Ryan Snyder, chairman of publicity.

WESTGATE CONTRACT ANNOUNCED

George Oswald's Bid for Street Work Accepted by City Officials

The Board of Public Works has awarded to George H. Oswald, the low bidder, the contract for improving streets in the Barry-avenue and La Grange-avenue improvement district, in the Westgate section, his contract price being $192,946. The work includes 780,000 square feet of six-inch concrete paving, 88,000 square feet of oiled roadway, sidewalks, curbs, sewers, storm drain and ornamental lighting.

City Engineer Shaw presented to the City Council last week four ordinances of intention for other important improvements including the paving of Eighth avenue from Slauson avenue to Sixtieth street, paving of Winnetka avenue from Roscoe street to Van Owen street, and of Seventeenth Place from Orchard avenue to Vermont avenue.

QUARTET WILL SING AT INSTITUTE MEETING

Members of the Los Angeles councils of the Knights of Columbus and their friends will be the guests at an open meeting in K. of C. Hall Wednesday evening of the Los Angeles Institute, No. 73, Young Ladies' Institute, to which the members of all the southern institutes have been invited. The principal entertainment of the evening will be provided by the Apollo Quartet, who are members of Los Angeles Elks, No. 99, glee club. The occasion is one of the year's outstanding events of the Young Ladies' Institute.

ALUMNI HOST TO COURT

The Southwestern University Alumni Association will tender an informal dinner in honor of the members of the Supreme Court of California at the University Club Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. Judge B. Rey Schauer will act as the toastmaster.

DYER RIVAL URGED NOT TO PREACH

Harper Faction Refuses to Say if Request Will be Given Attention

A written message to Dr. Thomas Harper, requesting him to conduct services today elsewhere than in Gunsaulus Hall, was received by Dr. Harper yesterday. He said the letter was from the "board of directors" unrecognized by the Harper faction, and signed by Dr. Frank Dyer, pastor, as chairman for that board.

Whether Dr. Harper and his followers will give heed to the message, Dr. Harper refused to say. The Times of yesterday carried an advertisement of the Wilshire Boulevard Congregational Church in which Dr. Thomas H. Harper is named as pastor and which announces Sunday-school at 10 a.m. and preaching at 11 a.m. in Gunsaulus Hall. Another advertisement in yesterday's Times announces Dr Dyer will preach at the Wilshire church at 11 a.m. today, although Dr. Dyer is not named as pastor.

"We have conducted services at Gunsaulus Hall for the last two Sundays and there is no reason why we should discontinue to do so," said Dr. Harper. "When the court gave Dr. Dyer permission to preach at the church it was specified he should have the pulpit, the study and the parsonage, but nothing was mentioned about Gunsaulus Hall."

Motorists Held on Rum Charge

Porter Hoggatt, 31 years of age, who gave his address as the Mt. Wilson toll house, and Mitchell Newman, 22, of 314 Avenue 43, were arrested at Figueroa and Pico streets yesterday morning by Sergt. Church, who had chased them north on Figueroa street from Santa Barbara avenue.

The officer said their car was going more than fifty miles an hour when he first sighted it. The police also say two bottles of liquor were found in the car.

Both men were held on the possession-of-liquor charge, while a charge of reckless driving was also placed against Hoggatt.

ARROWHEAD HOTEL'S MANAGER SELECTED

R. W. Larritt has been appointed managing director of Arrowhead Springs Hotel, effective October 1, next, according to a statement yesterday by Arrowhead Springs Corporation. Mr. Larritt was a former manager of the resort. Recently he has been manager of several hotels in Yellowstone National Park. Larritt succeeds H. M. Nickerson, who has been manager for the past two years and who recently resigned this position to manage the new Lake Norconian Club near Riverside.

REALTY MAN NOT LITIGANT

Ben White, real estate man of 304 Bryson Block, has been caused some embarrassment by the story printed in The Times to the effect that another Ben White is suing a brother named Tom for $30,000 damages because Tom is said to have called Ben a thief. Ben White, the realty man, wishes it known that he has no brother named Tom and that he is on excellent terms with his brothers.

TREND OF BROADCASTING TO "STICKS" DELAYED

Use of High Power Stations Out of City, and Away From Studio, Gains in Favor, However

BY DR. RALPH L. POWERS

The trek of broadcasters to the region commonly designated as "the sticks" with their transmitters, while still maintaining studios in the metropolitan area, has not been as spontaneous as was thought a year ago.

Yet several of the stations are getting in line, and within the next year the movement probably will be more general in Southern California. It already is an accepted fact in Chicago and New York regions.

The arrangement means the accessibility of a city studio, with the easy transit of talent, while the transmitter equipment, located miles away from the city, enables the use of high power without blanketing reception in congested areas. In this way it feeds a somewhat higher signal volume to receiving set owners.

KFI for more than a year has been testing various locations with a view to placing its 5000-watt outfit outside the city limits. Many sites have been considered and El Monte now is the focal point for activity.

KFI CONDUCTS TESTS

If the station finds conditions satisfactory, it is said that it will make the transfer, leaving the studios in the city. According to dispatches from Washington, KFI has let its application for a 50,000-watt transmitter lapse.

KNX's new technical equipment will be located in the San Fernando Valley, with its old studio in Hollywood and the new one on a film lot. It is probable that the new KNX will have a greater number of remote-control networks than any other local broadcaster.

Improved reception at long distance, however, is not the important result of high power because the doubling of an extremely weak signal is far from sufficient to bring it to a level of enjoyable volume.

The significant effect of high power is in the quality of reception obtained within the station's service area.

HIGH POWER HELPS

With the single exception of summer periods, reception always can be improved by high power to the point that extraneous noises heard in reception are considerably weaker than the record scratch heard on the highest-grade phonograph.

KNRC, with its transmitter at the ocean front of Ocean Park-Santa Monica, is another example of separate technical and studio forces. The main studio is situated in Los Angeles.

KFQZ is in a similar way with the studio downtown and the transmitter perched atop the Hollywood Hills and a fifteen-mile remote line to the studio.

A program that can be enjoyed with the receiver adjusted to minimum sensitiveness gives the clearest possible reception.

SELECTIVITY HELPED

The louder the signal input, the less proportionately is the strength of atmospheric and electric noises, thus making for considerably better reception.

The sensitiveness of most radios is adjustable by manipulation of filiment rheostats or some other sensitivity control.

If maximum sensitiveness is required to pick up a station, the influence of extraneous noises, such as static and radiation from trolley and power lines, is enhanced proportionately.

Technical staffs are giving serious attention to better reception for the various members of the radio audience. The removal of high-powered transmitters out of congested districts is one of the methods advocated by radio engineers.

Radio Official Flies Here on Business Trip

Lou Willis of Philadelphia, Atwater Kent factory manager for the Pacific Coast, returned to the East last week after literally completing a flying trip to principal Southern California cities. While here he was a guest of Ray Thomas, Southern California distributor for Atwater Kent.

In his tour Willis employed an army two-seater. He expressed approval of this mode of travel, adding that the saving in time would popularize "flying business trips" in the future.

That speacular sales records are being established by the Atwater Kent organization, was stated by Willis just before his departure. "Greater sales have been stimulated during the past few months, then ever before in the history of radio manufacture," he declared.

RECORDS' GAMUT BROADCAST

A recital of phonograph records from the end of the nineteenth century down to the present time was broadcast from a London station recently. It included the old-fashioned phonograph records, which were in cylindrical form, and passed through the years until it reached the present-day electrically recorded discs, showing how the phonograph has evolved from a jumble of noise to an artistic instrument.

TELEVISION SETS CONSIDERED

Installation of experimental broadcast vision apparatus in South Africa is reported under consideration, E. B. Lawson, United States trade commissioner at Johannesburg, advises the Department of Commerce. The local press, he says, relates that a British television company is offering broadcasting television apparatus to radio stations in South Africa at a price between $2500 and $3000.

AMPLIFIER ANNOUNCED

One of the first commercial broadcast receivers containing a shield grid tube as a radio frequency amplifier has been announced by the Charles Freshman Company. It has four tubes besides the rectifier and is operated by alternating current. The Q circuit, developed by George Eltz, is used.

Radio Trade Record Cited by Distributor

"Two hundred and forty-three Southern California radio dealers have established a record for the sale of one make of radio equipment that stands unparalleled in the history of the radio industry." This statement made by Harry A. Ungar, president of Ungar & Watson, Inc., Los Angeles distributing concern, yesterday, tells of the sensational progress made in selling Majestic all-electric radios in Southern California during the past three months.

"Majestic radio came on the market in Southern California on June 6, last," said Ungar, "and since then our dealer organization in the ten southern counties of California has purchased and in turn sold to the radio buyers the record-breaking number of seventy-five carloads of Majestic receiving sets.

"The public approval accorded the Majestic radio has been one of the most surprising developments I ever have witnessed. Majestic, although made by one of the best-known manufacturers in the radio industry, was an unknown quantity in the field of radio reception apparatus prior to last May. The manufacturers, Griggsby-Grunow Company of Chicago, favorably known for their Majestic A and B power units that preceded Majestic all-electric radio apparatus, have employed the same manufacturing methods in the building of Majestic radio that they used in building power units and have put the building of high-grade radio equipment, for the first time, on a large production basis."

Features of New Neutrodyne-Plus Radio Explained

Many Advantages New to Radio

"Neutrodyne-Plus" is a new term in radio. It is used to describe the discovery of Philco engineers embodied in the new Philco Electric Radio.

Neutrodyne is known in radio science to quality. It is free from oscillation. It purity and clearness of tone.

To this quality, after three years of research, Philco engineers have added a PLUS. For the first time in the history of radio they have found the way to utilize the Neutrodyne principle and at the same time combine with it maximum power. Super-power without sacrificing one iota of the distinctive Neutrodyne purity of tone.

The result is perfect tone quality plus vast distance range and extraordinary selectivity—a combination new to radio—"Neutrodyne-Plus."

No Aerial Needed

Due to its plus power, the Philco will give perfect reception of local stations and distant stations without an aerial! It is equipped with a special, portable ground. The Philco is therefore movable. With regular aerial, indoor or outdoor, it will bring in stations covering a wide distance range.

Daytime Reception

Real daytime reception at last! Philco's power makes possible the reception of distant stations during the day. The Philco is a daylight set. Not only for the man of the house at night but for the women at home during the day. You will be amazed to find how many delightful radio programs are on the air during the daytime. Philco's operation is so simple and positive—stations come in sharply, clearly and without "groping." All with one dial.

Distance and Volume

With the Philco, distance records are more than a mere catching of call letters. It has power for clear, undistorted reception of distant stations. It not only searches out distant programs but brings them in with sufficient volume to enjoy. And you will hear stations you never knew existed—low-powered stations which the average set is not sensitive enough or powerful enough to reach.

Amazing Selectivity

Marvelously sharp tuning. Only a hair's-breadth turn many times tunes out one station completely and brings another booming in. Single control; no blind "groping" for stations. So simple to tune, a child can do it! It will give you a new experience in selectivity and distance.

Flawless Tone

Flawless RE-production. In orchestra music you hear the complete ensemble, the contributions of leading instruments, the violin and other accompaniments—nothing is lost. In song or speech, all the shadings and inflections, high notes or low, come to you with life-like fidelity. Close your eyes as you listen and you will realize that you are hearing not a radio performance but actual RE-production.

Electric—Entirely Dry

The Philco is all-electric. No batteries, no acids or liquids. Entirely dry. Just plug into the light socket. Needs no attention whatever.

Range Control

An exclusive Philco feature which separates overlapping stations and confines each to its right tuning point. Cuts out interference, particularly important in large cities having many broadcasting stations. Smooth, uniform control of volume—without that "detuning" which spoils quality. Also, with Philco's marvelous range, distant stations are often brought in by means of this range control, separated on the same point of the dial.

Phonograph Connection

A socket is provided on the Philco dial panel into which an electric pick-up may be plugged, thus making the amplifying power of set and speaker available for reproducing phonograph records electrically. Through this, the Philco will endow your old records with that new depth and fullness of tone, that new volume and life-like quality, a renewed interest in phonograph music.

AND—At a Price

This super-quality Philco Electric Radio is housed in exquisite console cabinets at surprisingly moderate prices. And, in addition, the same instrument has been installed in table cabinets to sell at popular prices. Thus, no matter what model you buy, you may be sure of the utmost in "Neutrodyne-Plus" performance.

The Philco Speaker

No matter how much a radio set is capable of receiving from the air, it is limited in results by what its speaker can deliver to the ear. If the set transmits to the speaker the whole musical range from high to low notes, it is highly important that the speaker also have a reproduction range equal to that of the set. Otherwise tones which may be faithfully coming from the set are choked off in the speaker.

The Philco Speaker reproduces in full, natural tone everything that the set transmits to it. It captures the very high and deeply low vibrations with fidelity; perfect reproduction over the musical scale. There is no false emphasis on any group of tones; everything comes with proper balance and proportion. The combination of Philco Set and Speaker gives a tonal depth, a uniform reproduction, a true articulation which is new to radio.

Everything that has been developed in the industry to give complete radio enjoyment is included in the Philco. And in addition, features found in no other set. The above describes but a few of these features. Visit your Philco dealer and let him demonstrate the Philco Electric Radio to you in full.

New Radio Discovery "Neutrodyne-Plus"

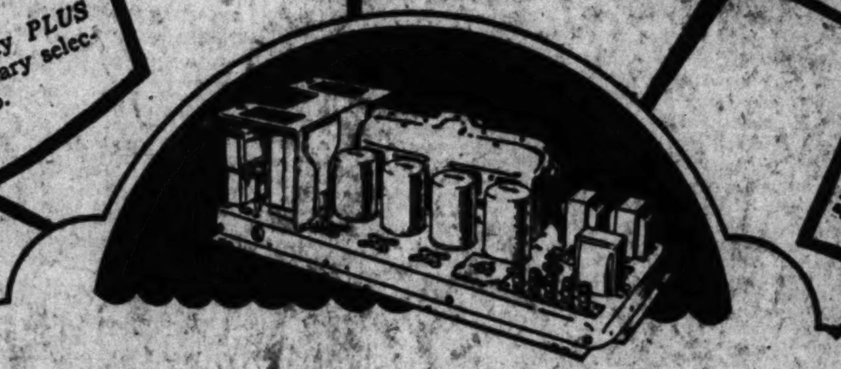
"Neutrodyne-Plus"

A new term in radio to describe a remarkable enlargement of the Neutrodyne principle—a discovery by Philco radio engineers.

Scientists agree that Neutrodyne produces the purest and clearest tone quality known to radio. To Neutrodyne, Philco engineers have now added a PLUS!

For the first time in the history of radio they have found the way to use Neutrodyne and, at the same time, combine with it maximum power. And this without sacrificing one iota of the distinctive Neutrodyne purity of tone. Yes, super-power—which gives performance never before known.

The result: perfect tone quality PLUS vast distance range and extraordinary selectivity—a combination new to radio.



Super-Power
—now added to Neutrodyne. Without sacrificing one iota of its distinctive purity of tone.

Tone
Close your eyes as you listen: you hear more than a radio performance—an actual RE-production just as rendered before the microphone.

Distance
Vast distance range, even in the daytime. You hear many low-power stations you never knew existed—thanks to super-power.

Selectivity
Sharp, clear, split-hair tuning—without interference. No "groping" for stations. All with one dial.

Volume
Now, you can not only get but fully enjoy out-of-town programs! Super-power, again, is the secret.

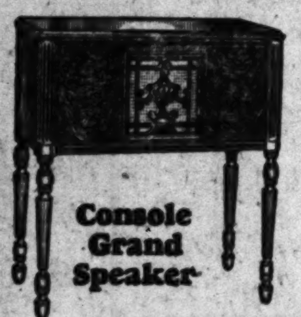
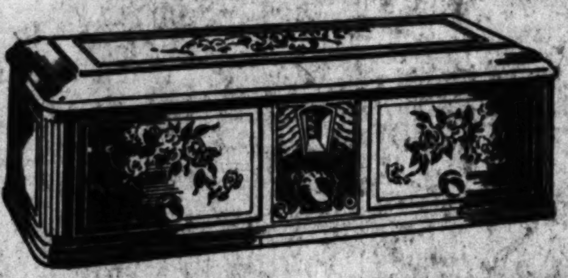
New Type Speaker

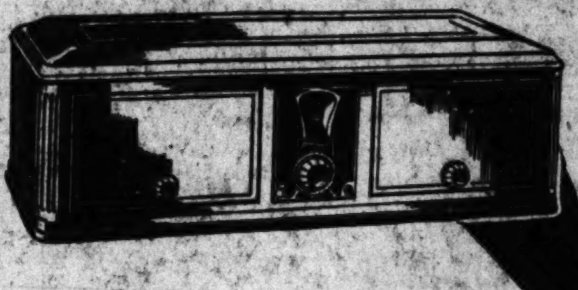
The Philco Speaker reproduces the entire musical range, high notes as well as low notes, in perfect balance and proportion. A full, broad, life-like tone. The combination of Philco Speaker and Philco Radio produces a range, depth and naturalness of tone which is new to radio. In five colors to match the Philco colored table cabinets.



Console Grand Speaker

Has specially designed tone chamber which gives amazing emphasis to its life-like quality of tone. In combination with the Philco table model radio, it offers the utmost in "Neutrodyne-Plus" performance.





COLOR

In response to the modern trend, the Philco Electric Radio has been placed in table cabinets of exquisite color. Softly modulated two-tone effects, plain and hand-decorated, to suit the conservative as well as the colorful room. A choice of five colors.

The classic design of these table cabinets was created by Hollingsworth Pearce. The hand-decorated models are produced under the personal direction of Mlle. Messaros, one of the foremost colorists in the decorative arts.

Forecasts Record Year for General Motors

Says Earnings Total of 1927 Already Passed

Capital Readjustment Plans Not Yet Decided

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Declaring that earnings of General Motors Corporation for the first nine months of this year will exceed those of the entire year of 1927, when they were $239,264,725, or $13.18 a share on the common stock, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president, predicted for the company the best year in its history, on his departure for Europe aboard the steamship Olympic.

"Conditions in general, with General Motors at this time are satisfactory," said Mr. Sloan. "At no time have I felt more confident in the future security of the corporation's position on every standpoint. Earnings are proceeding at an excellent rate. For the first nine months this year they will exceed those of the entire year 1927, therefore, it appears reasonable to suppose that we should report this year the largest earnings in our history.

"I appreciate that stockholders have in mind the possibility of some readjustment in the corporation's capital structure and perhaps in the regular dividend rate at the forthcoming meeting in November.

"Nothing has been determined or seriously discussed as yet and it is unlikely that the matter will be given attention for still another month. However, it is reasonable to suppose that directors will follow the precedent already established in rearranging the corporation's capitalization that the shares may be popularized to a reasonable extent in order that the stockholders' list may be expanded. It is to the interest of any corporation to enjoy broad distribution of its securities. It is also not inconsistent with this thought that such a readjustment might carry with it an increased regular dividend payment.

"The trend may be judged by the fact that retail sales of General Motors cars for the first eight months are 26 per cent ahead of the corresponding period last year. As a matter of fact, retail sales of all important manufacturers in the automotive industry have continued through the summer at exceptionally good rate. In view of the above, it is very evident that there is reflected a state of prosperity for industry in general, especially in view of the fact that practically all sections of the country are contributing to the result."

Production of Natural Gas Up Sharply in Year

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Production of natural gas in the United States in 1927 reached the record total of 1,445,428,000,000 cubic feet, an increase of 132,400,000,000 cubic feet, or 10 per cent over 1926, the Bureau of Mines reported today. Of this total, industries in the United States consumed 1,149,296,000,000 cubic feet, or 12 per cent more than the previous year.

Consumption was about equally divided between field use, for drilling, pumping, etc., and manufacturing use in plants. There were 3,984,000 domestic consumers in the United States in 1927, who used 296,036,000,000 cubic feet. This is an increase of 7 per cent in the number of consumers, but only an increase of 2 per cent in consumption, probably reflecting more efficient use of the gas. The remaining 184,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas produced in 1927 was piped to Canada and Mexico.

The value of gas at the wells decreased from 9.5 cents per 1000 cubic feet to 8.8 cents in 1927 and at points of consumption it decreased from 22.9 cents to 22 cents. For the fifth consecutive year, the average consumption per domestic user was lower, amounting to 74,300 cubic feet, as compared with 77,500 cubic feet in 1926.

CRANBERRY CROP ESTIMATE DROPS

BOSTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—The total crop of cranberries in the United States this year was estimated today by the New England Crop Reporting Service as 525,000 barrels. With the exception of last year's short crop this would be the lightest since 1921. Recent reports indicate that the Massachusetts crop will total 325,000 barrels, as compared with 370,000 barrels harvested last year. The berries are expected to be of medium size in most places. Quality and keeping prospects are very good.

Pan American Names Hall as Bank Officer

D. W. Hall, former secretary of the Iowa Bankers' Association and for the past eleven years an official of the Mechanics and Metals National Bank and the First National Bank of New York City, has been elected vice-president of the Pan American Bank of Los Angeles.

This was the announcement made yesterday by Leo M. Meeker, president of the Pan American Bank, who stated that Mr. Hall has already assumed his new position with this institution. Besides his regular duties as vice-president, Mr. Hall will give special attention to the development of new business for the Pan American Bank. The roster of officers of the Pan American Bank now includes Mr. Meeker, president; C. L. Hill, vice-president; D. W. Hall, vice-president; S. A. Lansing, cashier; J. M. McEvers, assistant cashier; H. F. Pierce, assistant cashier.

Net Profits of Crystalite Up

August net profit of the Crystalite Products Corporation amounted to approximately $300, as against $136 reported for July, officials of the company announced yesterday. Officers announced that the net loss of $6030 reported for the first nine months of the fiscal year would probably be erased by the end of the twelve months.

Common stock of the company will be called for trading on the Los Angeles Curb Exchange on Tuesday. A new street lighting unit which will enhance sales materially has been perfected, company officials announced.

Texas Cotton Estimate Out

AUSTIN (Tex.) Sept. 22. (AP)—In his crop report issued today on conditions as of the 15th inst., George B. Terrell, Commissioner of Agriculture, estimated the Texas cotton crop at 4,775,000 bales and the total for the United States at 14,000,000 bales.

The commissioner said there had been considerable deterioration since his August 15 estimate, when he placed the Texas crop at 5,025,000 bales.

A careful tabulation of reports from all sections of Texas revealed the crop as very spotted and irregular, the report said.

NEW YORK CLEARING HOUSE REPORT OUT

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—The weekly statement of the New York Clearinghouse Association shows: Total surplus and undivided profits unchanged. Net demand deposits (average) $41,280,000, decrease. Time deposits (average) $3,794,000, increase. Clearings week ended the 22nd inst., $7,402,133,625; clearings week ended the 15th inst., $7,221,830,761. Clearings today, $1,230,711,174.

SCHULTE EARNINGS FOR HALF-YEAR OFF

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. GOLD FLOW CHIEF TOPIC

London Keenly Interested in Wall Street Situation; Permanency of Trend Studied

BY EARLE E. CROWE

Reversal of the international gold movement in August, resulting in a small importation of gold by the United States for the first time in eight months, is still the chief topic of discussion in the domestic and foreign money markets. Whether the trend is temporary or relatively permanent, and what the influence on the New York stock market is, are questions on which there is considerable conjecture.

London dispatches indicate the suspicion that the August engagement of gold, which resulted in a net gain of $747,000 for the United States, was arranged specifically to stimulate the Wall-street market. Moreover, it is apparently the opinion abroad that political pressure has been placed on the Federal Reserve authorities to ease up on credit restrictions. Both the gold imports and the reputed change in banking policy are believed by foreign observers to be the reasons for the renewed outburst of speculation in New York.

One London writer remarks:

ENGLISH SKEPTICAL

"There is, however, a general impression in the London money market that credit conditions in the United States will be kept free from any real pressure until the autumn crop and trade requirements have been satisfied, and, in any case, until after the Presidential election. When the election is over, however, it is believed by many London bankers that a merciless twist to the monetary screw will be given, unless there is radical scaling down in the stock market before then."

On this side the conditions bringing about the August inflow of gold are receiving careful analysis to determine the possibility of continuance. If the United States is to regain the $700,000,000 of gold lost in the twelve months starting with September, 1927, there is little doubt but that it will be difficult to restrain speculative activity in the stock market. But there is no assurance that all or any great amount of the gold exported will be returned.

PURCHASES TRACED

It is pointed out that a consolidated portion of the exports were for the account of foreign governments seeking to stabilize exchanges or to establish a reserve for the resumption of gold payments. More than $200,000,000, it is estimated, went to South America for this purpose, and $300,000,000 to the Bank of France alone. This gold is not likely to return.

Temporarily, it is likely that the disparity between New York and continental money rates will attract foreign capital. Call money in New York ranging between 7 and 9 per cent is sufficiently attractive, against a level around 4 per cent in London and Paris as the price of capital, to induce transfers to this country. Ordinarily the diversion of capital from one market to another in wholesale quantities is followed by a movement of gold, but whether the volume will be large enough to appreciably lower American interest rates is a debatable point.

Many observers lean to the opinion that only a curtailment in the use of credit will lower the level of interest rates, which, of course, means a drastic correction in stock market prices. Others take the position that bank reserves are adequate without considering the lost gold, and there is no valid excuse for the current stiffness of money.

NEW HIGHS SCORED ON BIG BOARD

Week's Trading Activity Sets Rapid Pace in New York Market

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—High call money rates provided stiff opposition to speculative operations for the advance in this week's stock market, but special issues continued to push forward into new high ground under the stimulus of pool operations and heavy public participation. Weak spots cropped out here and there and some of the recent favorites, particularly in the amusement and airplane groups, fell under weight of profit taking.

Motors regained their place as market leaders in the closing days of the week. The rapid rise in General Motors was based on President Sloan's expectation of record-breaking earnings this year and the hope held out for a stock dividend at the November meeting of directors. Chrysler, Packard, Hupp, Graham-Paige, Briggs, Murray, Electric Auto Lite and Kelsey-Hayes Wheel were among the other automotive issues to reach new 1928 highs.

Prices in the general list showed surprising steadiness in the face of the unfavorable credit situation. Call money mounted as high as 9 per cent on Thursday, and short-term time loans were quoted at 7 1-4. Meanwhile, hope of further gold imports from Great Britain failed to materialize, although sterling exchange dropped to new low levels for the year.

Commodity markets also gathered strength after an early period of irregularity. Wheat closed several cents a bushel higher on less favorable South American crop reports. The rise in cotton was based on reports of storm damage and fears of frost before the crop is harvested.

LONDON, Sept. 22. (By wireless) Even if the markets had been open after noon today, the disclosure of the French naval correspondence would have had comparatively little effect, although demonstrating that the unwise and silly secrecy of the Foreign Office is detrimental to the government. In this connection it must be remembered that we, too, have elections.

The controversy over the monetary policy received fresh impetus from the recent discussion by a stockholder at the Bank Court last week. At the close rubber was easier and sterling was weak. Today's gold withdrawal was confined to Germany and Switzerland, but a further fall in American exchange threatens the sending of gold to the United States next week.

EMBEZZLEMENT REVEALED

WOONSOCKET (R. I.) Sept. 22. (AP)—Embezzlement of sums believed to be close to $185,000 from the Woonsocket Building and Loan Association was revealed today when a warrant was issued for the arrest of Hormisdas J. Myette, treasurer.

All deposit certificate holders of the Sutter Basin Company will receive a letter from the bond-holders' protective committee stating that the committee is ready to make distribution of money, stocks and bonds acquired in behalf of such holders, it was announced yesterday. This money and securities are now being held at the Bank of California N. A., and may be obtained by filling the indorsed certificate deposit with that bank.

CHANDLER SHOWS GAIN

CLEVELAND, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—September sales of Chandler-Cleveland Motors Corporation will show a gain of 128 per cent over the similar period of last year, according to Sidney Black, vice-president.

STOCKS OF GASOLINE IN SHARP DROP

Midcontinent Refiners Report Smallest Total in Years

TULSA, Sept. 21. (Exclusive) Gasoline stocks held by Midcontinent refiners on the 1st inst., were the smallest in years, being estimated at 1,950,000 barrels, as compared with 2,075,000 barrels on August 1, a decline of 125,000 barrels. Refiners' stocks in Oklahoma were off 125,000 barrels, and 50,000 barrels in Kansas, while North and West Texas gained 30,000 barrels, and Louisiana and Arkansas, 20,000 barrels during the month.

While this decrease was being developed in gasoline stocks, Midcontinent Refiners were increasing their operations to some extent. Runs of crude oil to the plants in the Midcontinent on the 1st inst. totaled 535,000 barrels a day as compared with 521,000 barrels on August 1.

ATLANTIC REFINERIES INCREASE PRODUCTION

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Last year marked an increase in the amount of crude petroleum refined at plants on the Atlantic Seaboard of 20,000,000 barrels or 15 per cent, compared with 1926, according to a report of the Bureau of Mines today. Of the increase 7,000,000 barrels consisted of domestic crude and 13,000,000 barrels foreign. Runs of foreign crude comprised 28 per cent of the total output, as compared with 22 per cent in 1926.

The effect of increased runs of foreign crude during the latter part of 1927 was evident in the decreased relative output of gasoline and the increased production of gas and fuel oil, it was reported.

"That this decrease in relative gasoline production was due to the lower gasoline content of the foreign crude as compared with the domestic crude available and was not occasioned by the curtailment of cracking operations, is shown by the fact that the gasoline produced by cracking comprised 35.11 per cent of the gasoline production during the first half of 1927, and 30.47 per cent during the second half," the report stated.

Demand for gasoline in the Atlantic Coast area increased by 10,152,000 barrels, or 11.5 per cent over 1926. The rated daily capacity of refineries along the Atlantic Seaboard has increased during the last two years by nearly 100,000 barrels.

Three Furniture Concerns Merge

Representing a consolidation of three companies engaged in the manufacture of house furnishings, Fine Arts Furniture Manufacturing Company has been organized and has received a permit from Corporation Commissioner Friedlander to dispose of a portion of its stock in exchange for the assets of the merged concerns. The companies to be consolidated are the L. W. Stockwell Company, Kling Manufacturing Company and Kwality Feather Company.

The new company has an authorized capital of $1,000,000 divided into 20,000 Class A and 20,000 Class B preferred shares, each with a par value of $25 and in addition has 40,000 Class C common shares of no par value stock. The permit authorizes the issuance of 6313 shares of Class A, 12,626 Class B and 12,626 shares of common shares.

GERMAN BALANCE OF TRADE STRENGTHENS

BERLIN, Sept. 22. (AP)—Germany's trade balance for August shows considerable improvement over July. Excluding gold and silver, imports amounted to 1,063,419,000 marks, or a decrease of roughly 100,000,000 marks, while exports totaled 1,025,793,000, or an increase of 111,000,000 marks.

Including gold and silver, the total imports were valued at 1,145,304,000 marks, while exports were 1,028,611,000 marks.

TWO-YEAR FORECAST TITLE OF BOOKLET

"What for the next two years?" is the subject of an attractive sixteen-page booklet which has just been printed by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, and which is now being distributed to realty brokers, banks, mortgage companies and other institutions throughout Central and Southern California, as well as to individuals interested in the realty outlook. The booklet was written by James W. Elliott, real estate editor of The Times. Portions of it have already appeared exclusively in The Times.

WEEKLY CITRUS REVIEW

California Valencia oranges dropped 45 cents on the average for the week below last week's average in eastern fruit auctions. This chiefly was due to the quality and condition of the offerings. The analysis of the week revealed a steady decline each day, with each day's average also being lower than the corresponding day of the previous week.

The week average of $7.53 per box was only 18 cents over the 1927 price for the corresponding period and $1.37 over the 1926 relative price. The close of the auctions revealed some signs of strengthening.

Lemons dropped heavily in the week, each day's average being below last week's daily low, and the week average of $4.68 per box being $1.17 lower than last week.

The following table shows the day by day general average of Valencia oranges and lemons per box this week compared with last for all auctions:

	Oranges This Week	Oranges Last Week	Lemons This Week	Lemons Last Week
Monday	$7.58	$8.33	$4.95	$5.75
Tuesday	7.62	8.27	4.68	5.58

MAJOR OILS LEAD ACTIVITY

Price Gains Nominal on Buying in Large Volume; General List Shows Little Change

BY FRANK L. GARDNER
BANKS, HUNTLEY & CO.

Further broadening activity among the major oils marked the trading during the past week on the Los Angeles exchanges. An increased volume, resulting in small gains, suggested a considerable amount of accumulation in anticipation of improved conditions in the industry at the turn of the year. A few specialties among the industrials were conspicuously active at advancing prices, but the main body failed to register changes worthy of note from previously prevailing levels.

Standard of California closing at 60½, Union of California at 51, Shell Union at 28 5-8 and Richfield Oil with final sales at 49½, were from a fraction to a point or so above the week's low. While no new highs, even for the past few months were recorded, an improved tone to the buying was apparent. Wasirty Oil, influenced by new developments in the Midway Sunset field, spurted from $2.15 to a new peak at $3.25 and closed at $3. Rio Grande Oil which has held the center of speculative interest for some time past, held its place as the leader in volume. In response to a statement of unusually favorable earnings and forecast of an early dividend declaration the stock jumped several points to peak sales at 94 3-4, only fractionally below the high for all time, and more than 11 points above the low of the week. Selling of a profit taking nature, accounted for a price of 90 finally. Bolsa Chica "A" recorded a 6-cent advance to close at 79.

The banking issues were again marked by small turnover and a restricted range. Bancitaly Corporation changed hands within a 4-point range from 126 to 130. Bank of Italy from 203 to 200, California Bank from 125 to 127 and Los Angeles-First National from 116 to 118. Merchants National furnished the exception with a range from 203½ to top sales at 211, but left off at 205½.

Pacific National Company advanced rapidly under the stimulus of an exceptional volume of buying orders to a high for the year at 42. Closing transactions were at 40. Piggly Wiggly Western while lower by several points than the high of the previous week moved in good volume between 29 and 32 7-8, selling at 32 finally. Globe Grain common at 32 lost half a point, and Los Angeles Investment ranged lower with low sales at 2.25.

Barnsdall "A" on the Curb, though ranging lower than its high of 36 recorded early in the week, was in popular favor and changed hands in large volume between the high and a low at 33, closing at 34½. Golden State Milk moved to top sales at 62 from 58 low, leaving off at 61 1-4. Lockheed Aircraft influenced by a satisfactory August earnings report recovered a large portion of its recent slump to improve over fifteen points to top sales at 66 3-4. Last sales yesterday were at 62. Byron Jackson Pump, after a reaction to 96 advanced sharply to top sales for the year Saturday at 106½. Claude Neon Electric had a five-point range from 42 to 48 and Bolsa Chica "B" recorded a new all time high at 40.

ESTIMATES ON COTTON CROP DROP

Further Deterioration in Condition Reported by Memphis Bureau

MEMPHIS (Tenn.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Further sharp deterioration through most of the entire cotton belt the past week has caused rather drastic downward revision of earlier crop estimates. With smaller crop figures further induced by relatively small ginnings, due to the lateness and the weather that is retarding maturity to a marked degree, many shippers and traders here who foresaw 14,500,000 bales have this week revised their opinions and are trading on a basis of not more than 14,200,000 bales on down to 13,750,000. They expect the government's ginning figures on the 24th inst. to show fully 1,000,000 bales less than the 3,504,000 ginned to the 16th last year.

In no part of the belt is the crop appreciating. Even in Texas, particularly the northwest, the crop estimates continue to be restricted and now the trade is talking 4,600,000 bales there as a maximum. The oft stricken Atlantic States have lost 125,000 bales during the past ten days from heavy rains, high winds and subsequent floods and with more rain believed headed there over the week-end, the loss will grow. Only in northern Alabama has the crop anything like held its own.

A top crop this year is a thing of the past over half the belt, at least. The plague, consisting of the combined ravages of heavy weevil infestation, pink boll rot, sappy plants, shedding and extremes of weather, has completely eliminated the top bolls and eaten seriously into the crop in the middle sections of the plants.

Three New Lien Offerings Due on Local Mart

New financing scheduled for Pacific Coast distribution tomorrow includes first mortgage bonds of the Graybar Building, first mortgage bonds of the Ohio Cities Water Corporation and refunding gold bonds of the City of Ogden.

Halsey, Stuart & Co., Harris Trust and Savings Bank and Graham Parsons & Co. are offering $10,500,000 first mortgage leasehold sinking fund 5 per cent gold bonds of the Graybar Building, due 1946. Proceeds from the sale of these bonds, together with other funds, will be applied to the refunding $10,000,000 principal amount of bonds and to retire other corporate indebtedness bearing higher interest rates, and for other corporate purposes.

P. W. Chapman & Co., Inc., are offering at 97 1-2 and accrued interest, to yield over 5.68 per cent, a new issue of $1,425,000 Ohio Cities Water Corporation first mortgage collateral trust 5 1-2 per cent gold bonds, Series A, due 1953.

The National City Company of California is offering $450,000 City of Ogden 4 1-2 per cent waterworks refunding gold bonds. These bonds yield according to maturity about 4.40 per cent. The purpose of the issue is to retire a like amount of bonds which matures next year.

Fiscal Advisers Combine Forces

Announcement was made yesterday of the formation of a partnership by John H. Ramboz and C. J. Shepherd under the company name of Ramboz & Shepherd. The company proposes to organize financial structures and supervise financial programs for business concerns.

Mr. Shepherd has until recently, been president of the People's National Bank, prior to which he was manager of the Federal Reserve branch of Los Angeles. Mr. Ramboz, formerly vice-president of the Merchant National Trust and Savings Bank, was with that institution for more than twenty years.

Airport Group Incorporated

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Articles of incorporation of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Airport, a $1,000,000 corporation which proposes to engage in all phases of the airplane business, including establishment of fields and air lines, today were filed with Secretary of State Jordan.

The directors of the company are H. J. Heffron, Lloyd L. St. John, George R. Bury, G. G. Greenwood, Ivor McCray, J. B. Irsfeld and Douglas Fawcett.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The cotton market was strong and active today, thereby again surprising most of the local trade. The big buying that caused the unexpected bulge of 50 to 60 points yesterday was charged to large outside operators in the commodity markets that had not shown any interest in cotton for some time past.

They bought so heavily that most local traders were caught napping, either being in a well liquidated or in a short position owing to the lack of incentives for any bullish operations.

There was forced covering of shorts on this rise which carried the general contract list up to near the 18¾c basis from about 17½c, the low levels of early in the week. The Liverpool market made a full response to this rise today by closing a net advance of about 24 English points.

Higher prices at Liverpool and new local and outside buying here again today turned the whole list up for a further rise of about 35 points on the average from yesterday's final prices. This brought October and December up to 18.60c, here with January to May selling around 18.50c on the average. Later the big interests who were heavy buyers in turning the market up from early yesterday sold a good deal in realizing some profits. This gave the market a setback of 18 points from the top but the undertone was still good.

In the cotton trade here the market's sharp upturn of the last two days is regarded principally as a technical rally from a well-liquidated and oversold position.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Directors of the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank today announced no change in the rediscount rate, which now stands at 4½ per cent.

NEW YORK BOND PRICES

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—The bond market reflected the firmness of the early stock market, but on a much smaller scale today. Trading centered on a comparatively few issues and price movements were narrow. Andes Copper 7s were a feature as regards volume of trading but showed only a fractional gain. Anaconda Copper 7s advanced 2 points to a new year's high and other coppers showed smaller gains on buying inspired by advance of prices to the highest levels since 1923.

Oils were strong in sympathy with stocks, Barnsdall 6s with warrants, General Asphalt 6s, Shell Pipe Line 5s and Simms Petroleum 6s recording substantial gains. American Telephone & Telegraph 5s, Consolidated Gas of New York 5½s and International Telephone & Telegraph 4½s were outstanding among the utilities to make small advances. Bethlehem Steel 6s, Cespedes Sugar 7½s, Lorillard 5½s and Dery Drygoods 7s were among the industrials prominent in the upward movement.

Rails, except for New York tractions, which generally were strong, displayed little activity.

The foreign list was irregular. Trading in government obligations was light and price movements mixed.

The quotations represent sales of bonds (in thousands of dollars) and the high, low and closing prices in the order given. To expedite transmission, the close is omitted when the same as the low, and both low and close when same as high.

SAN FRANCISCO

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Irregularities prevailed throughout today's session on the San Francisco Stock Exchange. Trading was moderate.

The industrial list was featured by the performance of Magnavox, which enjoyed a considerable amount of trading. Opening the session at 3.95, it eased to 3.90, and then soared under heavy buying to a new all-time high at 4.35, closing at that figure for a net advance of 45 cents. Byron Jackson Pump was active and sold from a start at 107⅝, down to 104½, then rose to 106 and ended at 105½, off 2. Beginning at 71½, Kolster Radio reached 72, reacted to 71¼ and climbed to 72½ at the close, gaining 1 point. Caterpillar Tractor sold from 82¼ down to 81⅝, losing ⅝. Crown Zellerbach vtc. was even at 26. Trading was moderately active in Golden States Milk Products and that issue sold at 61, down by ½. The rights were off ⅛ at 6. Opening at 41⅝, Clorox Chemical sold to 42 and then dipped to a close at 41½, but gained ⅛. The Langendorf issues were irregular. The "A" lost 1 point at 35½ and the "B" selling up from 28 to 28½, gained ½. Oliver Filters "A" was lower by ½ at 83½ and the "B" gained ½ at 84.

In the banking section, Bancitaly Corporation after opening at 128¾, closed at 128 for no gain, and Bank of Italy lost ½ at 201½. American Company closed at 150½, up ½ for the session.

The oils were unsettled. Richfield starting at 49¾, rose to 50 and finished at 49½, off ½. Standard of California sold from 60 to 60½, increasing ¼. Union Associates held even at 51⅛ and Union of California sagged from a start at 51⅜ to close at 51, losing ⅛. North American was up ⅛, ending at 44⅛. Tidewater Associated sold at 23¼, for no gain.

Total sales: Bonds, $3000; stocks, 82,-100 shares of $3,126,250 market value.

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

Oil Shares Hold Trading Interest to Close Irregular on Local Mart

Standard of California was the strong spot of an active session for oil shares in the trading yesterday on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange. Demand for the stock held steady from the opening which was up ¼ to 60¼ from the previous day's close. On a transfer of 2300 shares the stock finished the session at 60½ up ⅛ net. Prices for the balance of the list were somewhat mixed and showed no particular trend. Other divisions of the market held generally firm.

Rio Grande Oil continued the center of speculative interest and led the trading activity of the market. Opening at 89 the stock fell off to a low for the day at 87½, rallied to a high of 90½ and finished at 90, off 1 3-8 net. Richfield, after touching 50, closed at 49½, off 3-8. Union of California continued its recent display of strength and added 1-4 to finish at 51½. Union Associates held firm to 51. Signal Oil A sold briskly between 44½ and 45 1-4, closing at the latter price, unchanged. Mascot Oil reacted 5 cents to 2.95, while Holly Development advanced 5 cents to 1.25. Bolsa Chica A moved up 4 cents to 79.

Bank of Italy at 201 was up ⅛, while Bancitaly sold at 128, unchanged. Trading in both issues was light. Merchants' National reacted 6 points to finish at 205. Los Angeles-First National was maintained at 116 3-4.

Home Service, in the industrial list, marked its second successive new top price on an advance of 2 3-4 to 30. The stock closed at 29 3-4. Pacific National Company and Piggly Wiggly Western continued active in the miscellaneous section. The former dropped 1 3-8 to 40 and the latter, ½ to 32. Los Angeles Investment closed off 5 cents to 2.25.

Stock transfers totaled 56,743 shares valued at $1,573,734. There were no bond transactions.

AVOID LOSSES

Every careful, thoughtful investor will safeguard his investments by promptly determining the following vital factors:

(a) Which stocks may be safely purchased at present prices, and which stocks should be sold?
(b) Are bonds a purchase now?
(c) Are long-time, or short-time issues best?
(d) Should strictly investment funds be temporarily placed in a readily liquidable security, combining safety, and a yield of between 6% and 7%?
(e) What about Bank stocks, at present prices?

REMEMBER—This Bureau is absolutely impartial and is interested only in safeguarding the funds of its clients. We do not deal in any securities, stocks or bonds; therefore, we have no "axe to grind." If you want authoritative facts and conditions relating to investments, we invite your inquiry.

THE above California cities . . . seventy-five of them . . . covering the entire state, have already installed MARBELITE Street Lighting Standards. Many municipalities of other states . . . as well as the United States government . . . also have chosen MARBELITE Standards because of their beauty of design, durability and low maintenance cost. MARBELITE'S first subsidiary, near Chicago, is now in operation, developing Eastern markets. Other subsidiaries should naturally follow . . . all under direct control of the parent company, the MARBELITE CORPORATION OF AMERICA.

MARBELITE parent company's annual statement of December 31, 1927, shows ratio of current assets to liabilities of 17 to 1. All expansion has been provided for out of earnings. No Treasury stock has been issued since May, 1924.

With the next quarterly dividend on both Preferred and Common shares, payable October 1st to stock of record September 20th . . . the company will have paid regular dividends without interruption on its 8% Cumulative Preferred shares for nearly five years and on the fully participating Common stock for four years . . . with an extra dividend on the latter in 1927.

Subject to prior sale, we offer a limited number of MARBELITE CORPORATION OF AMERICA (parent company) 8% Cumulative Preferred Stock at $26.50 net per share, to yield 7.55% . . . for investment funds.

Grain Futures Close Down on Erratic Mart

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Grain markets fluctuated with extreme rapidity today, with December wheat advancing early to 1.21⅛, or 6⅝c over the low on Monday, and to the best figure since July 31. Liquidation by scattered longs in September corn carried prices off 7⅝c from the finish of the previous day. There was nothing in the general run of news to account for the erratic action of the markets. Shorts and northwestern mills were good buyers of wheat early, but the bulge weakened the technical position, and a reaction of over 2½c from the top followed. The close was at net losses of ⅛@⅛c. Corn was off 1⅝@7½c at the last, with September leading, while oats were ⅛c higher to ⅝c lower, while rye was ¼c higher to ⅝c lower.

A heavily oversold condition was disclosed in the grain markets during the week and general short covering induced by the failure of prices to decline was largely responsible for bulge of around 6c from the inside figure on wheat. While part of the upturn was lost later on profit-taking, the finish was at net gains of 4⅛@5c. September corn had a range of about 10c for the day and closed 8¼c lower, while the deferred deliveries were off ½@⅝c. Oats gained ½@1⅛c for the week and rye was up 5@10⅝c. Scattered liquidation developed in provisions, with lard closing at net losses of 37½@52½c, with ribs 25@45c lower and bellies 77½@82½c lower for the week.

Unresponsive Liverpool cables led to scattered local and commission-house selling of wheat at the start, but the decline was short-lived, as houses with northwestern and eastern connections bought freely and caused a bulge to a new high on the present upturn. The market regained more in the past two weeks than it has lost in nearly two months. Shorts covered on the way up, the big advance in the last two days brought in profit-taking by operators, who bought recently, and there was also selling against offers.

Foreigners refused to follow the upturn in American markets, and sales at the Atlantic seaboard were small, although it was reported that 1,500,000 bushels Manitobas had been sold from the Pacific Coast to the Orient. Liverpool closed 2⅝@3⅛d higher. Winnipeg was unsettled and closed ⅛@1⅛c lower.

Selling of September corn in small lots by commission houses, which was regarded as scattered liquidation, found the market poorly supported, and while there was buying against bids, prices declined steadily, with stop-loss orders caught on the way down. At the inside, the price was off 10c from the high on Monday, and was the lowest since the 10th inst. Deferred deliveries were influenced to a large extent by the action of the September. Light frost over part of the belt had no effect. The country sold 100,000 bushels new grain to arrive.

September oats went to a premium of ⅛c over the December, due to buying by shorts and the Northwest. Cash interests and commission houses sold the December. March and May sold at a new high on the crop early, but eased with other grains. Commission houses and locals were liberal buyers of rye, and while there was free profit-taking, the September acted very tight throughout the day. Export demand was slow.

Liquidation by October longs, selling of December lard by local speculators, combined with the break in hogs and grains, had a depressing influence on lard prices toward the last, and the close was at the inside, with losses of 17½c from the near futures, 15c on December and 10c lower on January.

Short ribs were unchanged and bellies 5c lower to unchanged, with light trading.

WOOL MARKET

BOSTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—Business in wool is of good volume and further slight gains in price have been realized on worsted wools. Fifty-eight and 60s are strong and occasional lots are moved at higher figures than the previous week. Strictly combing 56s and 48-50s grades of fleece and territory wools are firm and moderately active. A fair volume of business is being transacted in domestic clothing 64s, but with prices slightly easier.

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

The St. Helens Petroleum Company made a production test the other day in its Kernco No. 2 well on Sec. 13, 28-28, in the Round Mountain field and during an eighteen-hour flow the hole made 800 barrels. On account of lack of storage or pipeline facilities, the well was shut in. It was completed at 2045 feet and pipe was set at 1813 feet. The oil tested 14.4 deg. gravity. It is believed that when the well is put on the pump the production will clear up.

In the same field Shell is building two rigs, one for the Jewett No. 4 and the other No. 7, on Sec. 29, 28-29. The No. 3 well on the same section has been shut down at a depth of 2678 feet. Shell's Freeman No. 1 on Sec. 20, 29-28, is pumping into the sump from a depth of 1927 feet.

Finds the Oil

After the Republic Petroleum Corporation drilled a well to 4000 feet in the north end of the Midway field and got no results, the Chanslor-Canfield Midway Oil Company drilled its No. 4 well in the same area on Sec. No. 7 and yesterday it came in from a depth of 3003 feet producing 1750 barrels a day.

Starts Contract Hole

Drilling under contract for the Southern Pacific Company, the Associated Oil Company has just spudded in the M. K. T. Foster No. 3 well on the Foster lease away down on the south flank of the Ventura-avenue field. Associated will spud in, within three or four days, a contract well on the Percy lease, which lies just south of the Foster property.

These two leases, held by the M. K. T. Oil Company, are being jointly developed by that company and the Southern Pacific, with Associated doing the work and taking the oil. The M. K. T. outfit will finish its Foster No. 2, which is now down 3780 feet, and will eventually drill the Foster No. 4 on its own account.

New Field Test

Early this week R. S. Lytle, local geologist, is expected to make a test in his Lytle No. 1' well in the new field which he discovered a few days ago between Poso Creek and Round Mountain, by completion of his Lytle No. 2.

The Lytle No. 1 proved to be wet and had to be recemented. It went to 1615 feet to find oil sand, while the Lytle No. 2 only went to 1419 feet and was completed without difficulty.

Penetrates Oil Sand

The Union Oil Company is preparing for a water shut-off test in its Western Pacific No. 1 well drilling near Fellows and about four and one-half miles from the Midway field.

It has been drilled to 2165 feet after coring good oil sand from a depth of 1975 feet. It is now setting casing for what may prove to be a combination. It offsets a Mascot Oil Company well.

Swabbing Stern Well

At Fullerton the Shell Company is swabbing its Stern No. 1-1 well. After having drilled to 5977 feet it set pipe and now is swabbing for a combination water shut-off and production test at 5854 feet. Good oil sand was caked the last fifty feet.

BOLSA CHICA OIL CORPORATION

The Class "A" stock of this Corporation, listed on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, is now selling at a price which shows a dividend yield of over 10%.

Present production and conservative development program virtually assures continuance of present rate of 2% cash quarterly.

We have recently prepared a report on this issue and will mail copy on request.

CATTLE—Supplies for the week were light; however, demand was narrow, due somewhat to Jewish holidays and to a slow dressed beef trade. California supplied the majority of the run; however, offerings from the intermountain section and Arizona were fairly liberal. Steer prices declined around 25c, while she stock lost 25@50c; in-between grades of cows in some instances showing more loss. A stronger undertone existed in the general market at the close, due to lighter receipts. Bulls held about steady.

A load of good 915-pound California steers topped Monday at 12.75, with odd head higher. The big majority of steers, medium Californias, Utahs and Idahos, cashed from 11.50@12.35, mostly under 1100-pound stuff. Several lots of common and low medium steers sold from 10.50@11.25, with very common kinds down to 9.00. Two loads of 522 and 548-pound Arizonas went out for feeding purposes at 11.00, with a car of 496-pound Arizona heifers as feeders at 10.50.

Part loads of heifers sold from 10.75@11.00, with odd head higher, while two cars of good 825-pound Idahos scored 10.50. Other heifers, including Utahs, Arizonas and Californias sold down to 9.00. Odd head of cows sold around 10.00, while the top was 9.75 for 1009-pound Idahos. The bulk of medium and good cows went over from 8.60@9.60, the latter price taking a six-car string of 942-pound Nevadas. Common cows, including a liberal supply of dairy types, cleared from 7.25@8.25. Cutters and low cutters went over from 3.25@6.75. A few good bulls sold from 8.60@9.00, with medium kinds from 7.75@8.50 and common bulls down to 7.00.

CALVES—About half of last week's fairly liberal supply were Arizonas. Quality of the general run was poor and with only fair demand, trading was slow, with closing prices unevenly 50@1.00 lower, the plainer kinds showing the most loss. Odd lots of good and choice vealers sold up to 15.00 and better, while the bulk of offerings weighing from 150 to 600 pounds, including Arizonas, New Mexicos, Idahos, Utahs and Californias, sold from 12.00@14.25. Cull and common calves and vealers, according to weight and finish, cashed from 8.50@11.50.

HOGS—Demand narrowed considerably and trading throughout last week was slow and draggy, with closing prices around 25 cents lower than a week ago. Several loads of butchers were still unsold. Last week's top was 13.90 to an outsider, while the quotable top for good and choice butchers at the close was 13.50, with the majority from 13.25@13.40. Mixed offerings and Californias turned from 12.60@13.00, with pigs and mixed light lights down to 11.75. A few smooth light packing sows sold from 10.00@10.50, with the general run of packing sows from 9.00@9.85.

SHEEP—Demand was narrow and the lamb market was quoted 25@50c lower, with other classes about steady. Four decks of medium and good 78-pound California lambs cashed for 13.00, with a 10 per cent sort at 11.00. A short deck of medium 72-pound lambs made 12.75, with a truckload of 89-pound averages at 12.00. Choice lambs were quoted up to 13.50. A small lot of young 95-pound ewes made 8.00, while the general run of medium to choice ewes were quoted from 5.00@7.00.

NEW YORK CURB STOCKS

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (AP)—The curb market turned irregular in today's short session as week-end profit-taking carried some issues lower. Oils displayed group strength in sympathy with the upturn in that group on the "big board" and a few industrials and specialties were pushed into new high territory.

Safeway Stores sold up 20 points to a new peak at 730 and Sanitary Grocery mounted 7½ points to a new top at 42½. Oakes Products A and B shares mounted 5 and 6 points to new highs, and Checker Cab touched a new top at 57½, up 2½ points. Deere increased by 8 points, while Campbell-Wyant, Doehler Die Casting, Hall Lamp, A. C. Horn and Marconi B reached new highs. Industrial Rayon went to a new high at 143, but later sagged to 137 on realizing.

Crocker-Wheeler dropped 4 and Swedish-American Investment 5 points on profit-taking and Atlas Portland Cement, Bliss & Co., Lakey Foundry, Newton Steel and Bancitaly were in supply.

In the oils, Imperial of Canada went to a new high at 80½ in buying inspired by rumors of a stock split-up, then sagged on realizing. Gulf, Creole, Prairie and Standard of Indiana were strong, while Humble fell more than a point. In the mines, Noranda rallied fractionally and New Cornelia was firm.

Utilities were irregular, Electric Bond & Share, Electric Investors and United Light & Power issues easing, while Empire jumped more than 3 points and Penn-Ohio Edison issues were strong.

The closing price is omitted when same as the low, and both low and close when same as the high.

Seldom Enough Indeed

Through this old battle of life do worthwhile money making opportunities rap at a fellow's door, and when a real opportunity does appear he is such a stranger to us, that oft-times we fail to recognize him, and for this reason turn a deaf ear to his pleading to take advantage.

Santa Fe Springs today has every earmark of developing, within the next ninety days, into the greatest high gravity producing oil field of our nation, and it is only twelve miles from your own back door.

Every large oil company in California is taking advantage of this situation, and to the tune of millions of dollars each, in immediate development work.

You and I, Mr. Reader, should at least participate to some extent in the vast wealth that this oil field should produce, and which nature has placed at our very feet. If we fail to do so, surely we have failed to recognize that much sought stranger at our door.

When the first whispering of a deep oil sand at Santa Fe Springs was circulated I had my ear to the ground, and long before the big gusher of the Wilshire Oil Company, which is the discovery well of the field, came in, I was scouting the proven district in hopes of procuring a likely piece of ground, and after weeks of attempts I laid down $25,000.00 in cash on a one-sixth royalty basis for a piece of acreage that is now generally conceded to be sure shot territory for this big deep pay.

I don't pretend to be the smartest oil man in California, nor anywhere near that pinnacle, but I have had a good ten years' training in punching down deep holes, and that training under a man who is conceded to be as good an oil operator as they come.

At all events, I feel qualified to successfully complete any drilling operation I undertake, and were it not for the fact that I cannot carry the whole burden alone I would not be inviting the public to join me in what I consider a pretty sure five to ten for one on each dollar invested with me now.

I am going to drill two wells to the deep sand on five acres. Each well is capitalized for 1850 units and offered at $100 each. 50% of my oil production of each well will be divided between the holders of the 1850 units.

I want you to clearly understand that these two wells are each capitalized for 1850 units, and in each case 50% of my oil production from whichever well you buy into will be distributed pro rata.

For instance, say you buy a $100 unit in my number one well. You would own a 1-1850 part of 50% of all my oil from this well, and assuming this well only does 5000 barrels a day, at the present price of oil, which is $1.50 a barrel, would your income not be worth-while? But also keep in mind that the wisest operators in the field are predicting many a twenty-thousand-barrel well at Santa Fe Springs.

Another attractive feature of my offer is that the 50% of my oil production that goes to my unit-holders will be paid each month by the pipe line company direct into one of our California Trust Companies, who will distribute the proceeds to each unit-holder.

The rig is about completed for my Number 1 well. The equipment will be moving on tomorrow, and needless to say everything from cellar to crownblock is brand new and the most improved type that money can buy.

My drilling crews have been very carefully selected, and I have every reason to believe that I will give you about as fast action on your money as you have ever received on any investment.

Let me say to you, ladies and gentlemen, who are willing to lay a bet on the line with me at Santa Fe Springs, that I need your help to complete my drilling program and that in return for what confidence and support you may show me I will extend myself to the utmost in my endeavor to show you a couple of real winners in the oil game.

Don't forget that I am offering these oil units at $100 each, and that they could very easily be worth ten times that amount in ninety days from now, at which time I expect to have the first of my two wells flowing into the tanks.

Mail your check to me for the amount you wish to invest, call into my office and make your investment here, or if you would like to run out to the field I will be tickled to death to take you out and show you around, but if you are going to play with me, let's play today.

LIBRARY SERVES UNIVERSAL NEED

Educational Activities Cover Wide Scope

Reference Books Supplied on All Topics

Free Lectures and Art Exhibits Included

The Los Angeles Public Library is looking forward to a crowded year of activity with its resources taxed to the utmost in providing assistance to students, teachers, writers, club women business men and school children in their various fields of interest. With each season the branches and departments reach out for new contacts with the public, discovering the special interest of the clientele, keeping many individuals informed of books received in certain lines, compiling helpful lists of reading for clubs and groups and featuring timely information in every possible way.

Schools, colleges and universities keep the library informed of courses, of books needed for collateral reading, and in many instances extra copies of books in demand will be purchased and a reference set kept at the library for consultation. Aeronautical societies, advertising associations, cinematographers and other groups have applied to the library to purchase collections for their use and to keep reference copies, if possible, on file at the Central Library.

ALL ARE WELCOME

The Library Commissioners welcome such requests and make every endeavor to supply any legitimate demand, and to buy books which will contribute to the welfare of city activities. Individual readers and students are equally welcome to ask assistance or to recommend books for purchase at their library.

Attention is called to the aid given at the readers' adviser's desk to those considering entering fall classes. A complete file of classes of all sorts is kept at the adviser's desk and may be consulted by the inquirer. Evening high schools, business colleges and university extension courses send data to this desk so that information is kept up-to-date.

Individuals wishing to carry on an informal course of home reading are provided, on request, with a list of suggested reading, or are shown the prepared reading courses on thirty subjects and are invited to borrow the books from the readers' adviser.

LECTURE PROGRAM

The Board of Library Commissioners has planned a year's program of free lectures and exhibits to be held in the lecture room. These are free to the public and are made possible by the generous co-operation of professors of the several universities, and prominent lecturers. Exhibits of the best work of local artists and photographers and etchers will be held and it is planned to have Wednesday evening open for the public to meet the artists and to visit the exhibits.

The lectures as now planned include a series on "Current and Contemporary Books," by Helen E. Haines on the second and fourth Tuesday evenings of the month, beginning October 9; a series on symphony programs by Sarah Ellen Barnes on the mornings of the Thursday concerts of the Philharmonic programs; a series in German, French and Spanish on the modern literature of these countries; a series on philosophy and psychology, and lectures in history, literature and geology. Books which aid in the enjoyment of the lectures are listed and featured by the various departments.

Citizens who are not aware of these opportunities of profitable entertainment are invited to visit the library and become acquainted with its resources.

ONE LOCAL BOY KILLED IN WRECK

Three Others Escape as Accident Occurs in Idaho on Way to College

That Joe Thomas, 840 East Seventy-third street, was killed in an automobile accident, but that Junior Hanford, William Shoemaker of Glendale and one other boy text of a message received by M. T. Hanford, father of Junior, from Caldwell, Idaho, yesterday morning.

Young Hanford, captain of the football and track teams at Manual Arts High School in 1926, left Los Angeles Wednesday in company with three other companions, all of whom were to enter the University of Idaho as freshmen. He was accompanied by Thomas and Shoemaker. The fourth member of the party was from Alhambra and the trip was being made in his car.

No details of the accident had been received by Mr. Hanford at a late hour last night.

Make-up Artists Will Establish Teaching Bureau

The Motion-Picture Make-up Artists' Association will establish a free bureau for schools, colleges and other recognized institutions of learning, on the art of make-up, according to Percy Westmore, president.

With all the leading schools and colleges adding dramatics to the regular curriculum, the association, during the past year has received such a volume of requests for assistance that a bureau with an artist in constant attendance has become necessary.

Instead of seeking donations to carry on the work, it was voted to hold a mardi gras and costume ball at the Ambassador Auditorium on Halloween night, and use the receipts for this purpose.

Many houses set on fire by the sun's rays were destroyed in Spain during the recent hot spell.

Grapes Honored in San Gabriel

Festival Celebrants

"VENDIMIA" OPENS TODAY

Early California Custom as Tribute to Fruit of Vine Develops Picturesque Grape Festival

The tribute to the "fruit of the vine," presented in the form of a "Vendimia" or grape festival, which was celebrated by the Spaniards of early California in accordance with an Old World custom, will be revived in the historic little city of San Gabriel in one of the most colorful fiestas in its history, this afternoon. Thousands of pounds of grapes, arranged in large heaps, will greet the visitors and there will be many attractive displays of fruits and their biproducts, the fresh fruit to be distributed later to those attending the festival.

RAQUEL TORRES.

One of the most important features of the afternoon's program, which will commence at 2 o'clock, will be a parade of more than thirty of the fairest Spanish and Mexican senoritas in Southern California, who will vie for honors as reigning queen of the festival. Raquel Torres, Mexican film star, will head the judges who will select the queen. The lucky senorita will receive a screen test, a silver cup, a week's contract for personal appearance at the Pom Pom Night Club, and yesterday the California Vineyardists' Association added a $75 merchandise order on the May Company to the list of prizes. A merchandise order also will be awarded to the girl rated as the judges' second choice.

John Steven McGroarty, author of the Mission Play, will officiate this afternoon as master of ceremonies. A number of players in the Mission Play cast will take part in this program, a portion of which will be held within the theater itself, although no admission will be charged.

Historic San Gabriel Mission, the adjoining Romona cottage and the patio containing the "parent grape vine," more than 100 years old, will be open to visitors during the afternoon.

The festival at San Gabriel today will usher in "National Grape Week," an event to aid in exploiting the grape industry. A national campaign is being conducted at the present time in an intensive effort to increase the consumption of this fruit to a point where the marketing problem now confronting the growers will be either completely or partially eliminated. The campaign is largely an educational measure intended to urge the wider use of grapes and their by-products as well as to demonstrate the food value of the fruit.

SOUTHERN GROWERS WANT TO SHIP IN LAY-OFF

ONTARIO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Grape growers in this district have named a committee of three to discuss with Donald Conn, manager of the California Vineyardists' Association, the advisability of disregarding the association's request that all California grape shippers withhold all shipments for three days in an effort to improve eastern marketing conditions generally for the industry in California.

Local growers complain that high temperatures in this area make it imperative to get their ripe grapes off the vines or lose them entirely. They are proposing to ship only the very highest quality.

Last week the district held down its shipments to 261 cars, notwithstanding orders for 615 cars.

Single Stroke of Pen Brings About Arrest

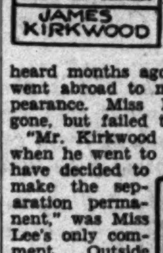
A single stroke of the pen, a resemblance between the curves used in writing the capital letters E and C, proved the Nemesis of E. T. Humphries, who was arrested last week in El Paso, Tex., and returned here yesterday on a forgery charge, according to Detective Lieutenants Posner and Crowley of the police forgery detail.

A check for $1145.15 payable to J. R. Cox and signed by the Elliott Horne Company was drawn on a local bank on August 18, last. A week later when the company's officials declared the check a forgery in a report to police, Detectives Posner and Crowley asked to examine the indorsements on the concern's pay roll checks. The signature of E. T. Humphries came under suspicion due to the marked resemblance of the capital E to the capital C in Cox. Inquiry about Humphries revealed that he had left the company's employ.

At Humphries's home detectives learned that he had left the city. His photograph was identified by the manager of the bank where the asserted forged check had been presented. A warrant was issued and Humphries's picture was published in the police bulletin. Several days later he was arrested in El Paso, where he confessed to the forgery, according to Detective Lieutenants Posner and Crowley.

FILM PAIR'S SEPARATION ADMITTED

Lila Lee Announces That She and James Kirkwood Have Parted Company



JAMES KIRKWOOD

Lila Lee, film actress, and her husband, James Kirkwood, stage and screen star, yesterday admitted that they have come to the parting of the ways. Regarded as one of Hollywood's ideal couples, the admission came as a distinct surprise to the film colony.

The admission culminated weeks of denial on the part of both Kirkwood and Miss Lee. Rumors of a separation were heard months ago when Kirkwood went abroad to make a stage appearance. Miss Lee was to have gone, but failed to make the trip.

LILA LEE

"Mr. Kirkwood and I separated when he went to Europe. We now have decided to make the separation permanent," was Miss Lee's only comment. Outside of admitting that he and his wife had parted, Kirkwood would only say that any statement regarding their domestic situation "would sound much better in the language of Mrs. Kirkwood."

The couple at present are living four doors apart on Laurel avenue, Kirkwood at 952 and Miss Lee at the home of Mary Nolan, an old friend of both.

The custody of a 4-year-old son is involved and it was said the boy has been placed in an exclusive school although he is in the technical custody of his father. Miss Lee visits her son at the Kirkwood residence.

When she was 18 years of age, Miss Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Appel of Chicago, married Kirkwood in Los Angeles, July 26, 1923. He was then 40. She got her stage start at the age of 9 under Gus Edwards, musical show impresario.

Kirkwood is a pioneer of the screen, beginning his public career as a stage leading man in 1900. He started his picture career with the old New York Vitagraph company in J. Stuart Blackton's "The Great Automobile Robbery."

Miss Lee is working in a picture at Warner Brothers. Kirkwood is playing at the Paramount Studio.

DUTCH LINE MAY AUGMENT FLEET

Holland America Reported Considering Move

Company Official Here from New York Office

Plans Said to Call for Two New Motorships

Holland America Line not only operates the biggest foreign fleet between Northern Europe and the Pacific Coast, but stands to put on additional vessels in the not far distant future, according to W. Van Doorn, American general manager at New York of the foreign line. He arrived from the East yesterday morning, and proceeded to Catalina Island with his wife and daughter, Miss Helen, on vacation.

While Mr. Van Doorn would not discuss future augmentations, it is known that two or more big motorships are in contemplation, each with pretentious refrigeration space to handle California perishables; limited accommodations for passengers, as well as space for general cargo. The speed of the ships is expected to approach fourteen knots.

The line maintains nine carriers regularly on this run, and adds five more during heavy seasonal movements.

Mr. Van Doorn was shown the port yesterday morning by O. R. Morrison, dock superintendent for C. J. Lehman, agent for the line. He expressed himself as highly pleased with the line's modern terminals and the prodigal amount of new shipping facilities which Los Angeles City has built since the war.

The visitor is expected to be here Wednesday, when the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, which operates a joint service with his line to this coast, celebrates its ninetieth anniversary. From its founding in 1838 under a grant from Queen Victoria, the line has grown to a point where today, with a capital of $45,000,000, it maintains a fleet of more than 500 vessels aggregating 2,700,000 gross tons in services to all part of the world.

LASSCO LINER TAKES OUT HAWAII TOUR PARTY

First of the fall tours to Hawaii, comprising a party of forty-three travelers under charge of John Berschens of Chicago, went out to Hawaii yesterday noon on the Lassco liner City of Honolulu, which carried 152 passengers and full cargo of freight. The tour party represents a 25 per cent increase over the first seasonal tour last year. John Scott, head of the great Chicago stores of Carson, Pierre & Scott, also took passage on vacation. Charles Gerlach, third officer, remained ashore due to illness, and his post was taken by Waldron Johnson of the liner Yale.

Shortage of oil-well pipe, occasioned by the recent rush of drilling at Santa Fe Springs and other fields, is believed to augur a change of policy on the part of pipe shippers, with a view to storing big supplies here in the future for similar emergencies. Shipments from Europe as well as intercoastal continue to increase, but are taken from the port almost as rapidly as they are received. Outer Harbor Dock and Wharf Company, biggest receiver for storage in bond of foreign pipe, has only seven acres covered with the pipe, and still has available at once fifty or more acres sufficient to store 100,000 additional tons. The yards can be further expanded on short notice.

The little Van Camp fishing boat Sebastapol is reported to have gone aground near Balboa, Cal., during the fog early yesterday morning. Engineers from Merritt, Chapman & Scott left yesterday to study the possibility of salvaging her.

Shipping here was upset a bit Friday, due to delays at San Diego, where practically all longshoremen were commandeered to fight forest fires in the back country. Cargo movements at the southern port were paralyzed, till officials were apprised of the situation and the longshoremen were released.

Crash of the American Hawaiian steamer Kentuckian and General Petroleum tanker Los Alamos off Point Sur early yesterday, was not serious, but the freighter turned back to San Francisco with her forward bilge leaking. The tanker, en route from Los Angeles, continued for her destination, Oakland. She escaped almost without injury.

The Admiral Line flagship H. F. Alexander, which canceled her Friday trip to this port, due to engine trouble in San Francisco, also will cancel another week's trip here, due to repairs which will hold her in the Bay City until the 29th inst. Turbine blades jammed.

The Dollar trans-Pacific liner President Jackson is due tomorrow noon with forty passengers and 2000 tons of freight for Los Angeles discharge. Outbound Monday the liner will take 1800 tons, including a Ryan airplane from the B. F. Mahoney Aircraft Corporation, for the Chinese Nationalist government at Canton.

Affairs of the Week

By Juana Neal Levy

[illegible] social activities are occupying the attention of society [illegible] this fall, there are numerous philanthropic hobbies to [illegible] during the fall and winter, taking tangible form at [illegible] for which a portion of each day is set aside on her [illegible]

[illegible] fraternity affairs oc- [illegible] campus students [illegible] season is as always [illegible] other students as well as the new freshman, who many times is at a loss to decide where she shall put her membership.

Many affairs are being given for brides, among the recent hostesses being Miss Ruth King, a member of Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority at University of Southern California, who entertained yesterday afternoon at the home of her mother, Mrs. A. L. King of Palms, in honor of Mrs. Edward M. Lesperance (Elva Robinson,) the guests including members of the sorority, Mrs. Clyde S. Keir, Mrs. Wallace H. Cordes, Mrs. Thomas A. Young, Mrs. Lester A. McMillan, Mrs. James Barton, Mrs. H. H. Hutchins, Miss Olivera Lesperance, Miss Ruth Carr, Miss Kathleen Nolan, Miss Kay Wessling, Miss Alice Flowers, Miss Vernetta Sweet, Miss Cecile Vigne, Miss Erie Shepard, Miss Virginia Young, Miss Doris Corum, Miss Helen Campbell, Miss Catherine Colwell, Miss Isobel Turtin, Miss Marie Smith, Miss Betty Bruce, Miss Helen Morlan, Miss Virginia Pape, Miss Marjorie Snow, Miss Marion Segall, Miss Jane Word, Miss Margaret Schiller, Miss Woodie Lou Hunsaker, Miss Kathryn Murphy, Miss Malvina Ponzo, Miss Dorothy Deneetmaker, Miss Ruth Secrest, Miss Jane Howells, Miss Constance Vachon, Miss Florence Young, Miss Mildred Philpot, Miss Zora Simmons, Miss Betty Dee, Miss Ruth Wenel, Miss Monica Phores, Miss Lucile Lyons and Miss Dorothy King.

Miss Betty Farmer was the chairman for Alpha Chi Omega Sorority at the University of Southern California when it entertained with a formal tea last Sunday afternoon at the sorority house, 666 West Twenty-eighth street. Hostesses included Miss Betty Budd, Miss Jane Thompson and Miss Kathryn Joplin, while Miss Mary Bowen Huff and Miss Clara Stevenson presided at the tea urns.

Autumn decorations were used throughout the rooms and the music was furnished by the College of Music trio.

One of the most attractive members of the subdeb set who is active in philanthropic as well as social affairs, is Miss Jane Woodin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy C. Woodin, who with her sister, Miss Martha Woodin, owns the Martha and Jane Woodin stables of thoroughbred horses and are among the most enthusiastic equestriennes of the Southland.

Miss Woodin entertained with a charmingly appointed supper-dance at the Biltmore recently honoring Miss Ruth Pearsall and Douglas Williams several days before their wedding. The guests included members of the bridal party, Miss Lily Williams, maid of honor; Miss Betty Richardson, Miss Evelyn Farnsworth, Miss Virginia Callender and Miss Woodin, bridesmaids; Nelson Carter, best man, and Tom Griffin, William Robinson and Tom Hughes, ushers. Other guests were Miss Martha Woodin and Theodore Bunch, while Mr. and Mrs. Woodin and Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Pearsall chaperoned the party.

Masses of autumn flowers and foliage were used in the decorations of the table.

Another affair given by Miss Woodin for Miss Pearsall and Mr. Williams was a fascinating barbeque supper at the Jane and Martha Woodin stables, Ventura Boulevard at Sherman Oaks Monday evening, the 10th inst.

A beautifully appointed luncheon given by Miss Clara Shugers to greet her friends following her return from a summer passed in Honolulu proved to be an announcement party. Guests learned of the betrothal of Miss Shugers to Dr. John Roulette of Inglewood. The party was given at the Beverly-Wilshire Hotel and all appointments carried out an orchid and pink color scheme. At the conclusion of the card games guests were presented with dainty corsage bouquets of roses, to which were attached cards bearing the names of the betrothed. Little Peggy Shugers of San Diego, a cousin of the bride-to-be, distributed the favors, having come up from San Diego for the occasion with her mother, Mrs. Walter Shugers. The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Shugers of South St. Andrews Place, and was graduated this summer from Miss Fulmer's School. Dr. Roulette was graduated from University of Southern California. No date has been set for the wedding. Fifty guests were bidden.

An interesting visitor to Los Angeles this summer is Miss Virginia Feree Cunningham, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cunningham of Phoenix, Ariz., who has been the house guest of her grandmother, Mrs. Mary Cunningham, at her home, 942 North Kingsley Drive, where she has been much entertained.

One of the lovely affairs in honor of the attractive visitor was the luncheon which her cousin, Miss Lois Tevis, gave, taking her guests afterward to the theater.

Miss Eleanor Black also honored her with an evening of bridge. Miss Cunningham is leaving shortly to enter the Junior College at Phoenix.

"DEDICATED TO BETTER HOMES"

Are You Satisfied With The Beauty Of Your Home?

BEFORE us now are months of home enjoyment, of home entertaining, of home interest. The cycle of time has again brought us to "home time".

Visions of the friendly fireside play upon our fancy. It is time to set the house in order, to beautify it, to give it that atmosphere which will kindle our pride—to provide for our comfort and enjoyment through the glorious home months that are to follow.

What a happy thrill and fascination there is in planning the home and in beautifying it.

Many interesting new suggestions have been gathered for your inspiration at the "California"; and qualified men are here to co-operate with you so that you may accomplish most effective results at lowest possible cost.

While the "California" is widely known as one of the foremost home furnishing stores of the better class in America, yet prices here are very moderate. You will find it very interesting to visit the "California" for suggestions that will help you to make your home more attractive, whether your requirements be an individual piece of furniture to grace some particular place in the home, or the complete furnishing of a room, or of the entire home.

Visitors are always made to feel that they are welcome regardless of whether they buy, or not.

YOUNG COUPLE ON HONEYMOON

Northern Trip Being Made by Auto

[Maryland Studios, Pasadena.]

Mrs. Dwight Archibald Moore

ONE of the loveliest of the fall weddings was that of the 15th inst. when Miss Marie Carolyn Barnett, daughter of Charles T. Barnett of Glen Albyn Drive, became the bride of Dwight Archibald Moore, son of Dr. and Mrs. Dwight Shumway Moore of South Pasadena, the ceremony taking place in the evening at St. Vincent's Church with Rev. Father E. M. McDonald officiating. A reception at the home followed. Mr. Barnett gave his daughter in marriage. Miss Maxine Talbot was maid of honor while Miss Kathleen Bohn and Miss Dorothy Barnett were bridesmaids. Edward A. Paris of San Francisco served Mr. Moore as best man and William E. Wood and Charles B. White were ushers. After a motor trip through the north Mr. and Mrs. Moore will return to make their home here.

Affairs of the Week

early autumn was the beautifully appointed party given by Miss Vera La Verne Conklin at her lovely new Spanish home in Beverly Hills, Wednesday evening. The large patio gardens were hung with gay Japanese lanterns and the Hawaiian Sunny Trio played for the dancing from the balcony. Dancing and bridge were diversions of the evening, and the guests included Mr. and Mrs. Loren Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. John Melville Hull, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Neff, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Tremaine, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Frank, Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Gamble, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Hilliard, Mr. and Mrs. Roland Siegel, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Bruck, Mr. and Mrs. Lombard Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Glendon Tremaine, Miss Frances Jamison, Miss Margaret Ross, Miss Elizabeth Ward, Miss Margaret Anderson, Miss Amy Phillips, Miss Edna Louise Ruwe, Miss Lois McQuistion, J. Matthews, Everett Mansur, A. Andrus, A. R. Totholz, B. B. Murdock and Dr. Wallace Frame.

Miss Conklin was assisted by Miss Elizabeth Ward and her mother, Mrs. L. D. Conklin.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Moyer-Jordan, whose wedding was an event of the 12th inst. are honeymooning in the north, their itinerary including Santa Barbara, Carmel, Del Monte and Monterey and after October 1 they will return to make their home at 2512 South Harvard Boulevard.

Mrs. Moyer-Jordan was formerly Miss Beth Shuler, daughter of Mrs. Martha Shuler of West Washington Boulevard, while Mr. Moyer-Jordan is the son of Mrs. Calvin Groves of this city.

The wedding took place in St. James's Church with Rev. Ray O. Miller officiating, while a reception and wedding supper followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's mother for relatives and the bridal party.

Mrs. Joseph Kurtz Horton (Adele Ward) assisted her cousin as matron of honor, while Miss Miriam Brickwedel was maid of honor and the Misses Katherine Kedzie, Evelyn Hauerwaas, Laila Moir and Anne Fontron were bridesmaids, the color motif being exquisitely carried out in the sunburst and gold tones even to the gown of the bride which was of gold satin, with the veil of gold net and gold wreath in her hair, and she carried golden Ophelia roses and lilies of the valley, with touches of blue daisies.

MacGregor Graham was best man and Leigh Crosby, Robert Robinson, Ben Parson, Joseph Kurtz Horton and Lee Cummins were ushers.

Mrs. Moyer Jordan is an alumna of University of California at Los Angeles and is affiliated with Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority, while Mr. Moyer Jordan claims the same university as his alma mater and is a member of Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity.

Another prettily appointed wedding of recent date was that of Miss Elizabeth Huyett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy L. Huyett, and Daniel Gaines Hon, son of Judge and Mrs. Daniel Hon of Fort Smith, Ark., the ceremony taking place in St. James's Church the 11th inst, 500 invitations having been issued. A reception for relatives and a few close friends followed at the Huyett home, in Norton avenue.

Mrs. John De Mott Toland assisted as matron of honor, Miss Ruth Richardson was maid of honor and the other attendants included Mrs. George Kemper Smith and Mrs. Philip Schumaker, while two small cousins of the bride, Julia and Billy Bonnett of Riverside, were flower girl and ring bearer.

George Kemper Smith served Mr. Hon as best man and Lyman Robertson, John Cooley, John De Mott Toland and Philip Schumaker ushered. After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Hon left for a northern wedding trip, and after October 1 will be at home to their many friends here at 1129 Harcourt avenue.

Welcome Home

One of the lovely affairs of yesterday afternoon was the tea with which Miss Dorothy Llewellyn and Miss Virginia Llewellyn entertained at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Edgar Llewellyn, in Muirfield Road, honoring Miss Suzanne Stephens who returned recently from an extended tour around the world accompanying her grandmother, Mrs. J. W. Hendrick, and visiting many of the interesting out of the way places not usually traversed by the tourist.

The tea table was lovely with fragrant autumn flowers in the pastel shades and the young hostesses were assisted by Miss Marjorie Lounsberry, Miss Estelle Del Valle, Miss Flobelle Fairbanks, Miss Gwendolyn Milner, Miss Maud Ryan, Miss Margaret Eichelberger, Miss Virginia Dabney, Miss Emelie Childs and Mrs. Charles Madary (Betty Lacy.)

One hundred and eighty invitations were issued.

Entertaining Visitors

Among the charming visitors to our Southland this fall are Mr. and Mrs. William Rohlff of Long Island who are guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Blyth in Hobart Boulevard.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Blyth entertained with a dinner party at their home honoring their visitors, taking their guests to the Biltmore afterward for dancing.

Their son, Clark Blyth and William Rohlff, Jr., were classmates at Dartmouth College, thus further cementing the friendship of the two families.

Seeley-Harrison

Miss Virginia Seeley, the lovely daughter of Roy Clinton Seeley of 2026 LaSalle avenue, became the bride last evening at 8:30 o'clock in St. John's Episcopal Church of Nicholas McCarty Harrison, Jr., son of Mrs. Nicholas McCarty Harrison of Pasadena, with Rev. C. H. Parlour, curate of St. John's, officiating in the presence of 800 guests.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was beautifully gowned in white silk net, made full and long with the popular close-fitting bodice, many gardenias being caught on the skirt under the net, while her veil, edged with rose point lace, was gathered into a crown of that lace. She carried an enormous bouquet of white orchids, gardenias and lilies of the valley. The matron of honor, Mrs. William Howard Thomas, as well as the maid of honor, Miss Sarene Otis of Chicago, were in tulle gowns of burnt orange, with which they wore tulle Madonna caps and carried dahlias, while the gowns of the attendants, Mrs. Virginia Bishop McGarry, Mrs. Richard Stanley McClune, Miss Alice McReynolds, Miss Elizabeth Herron, Miss Geraldine Herron and Miss Eleanor Donau, were in tulle frocks and Madonna caps shading from yellow to the burnt orange, and carried dahlias in similar tones.

Mr. Harrison chose for his best man his brother, Elston M. Harrison, and for ushers Ralph Chester Otis, Jr., John Earle Jardine, Jr., Stewart McKee, Shannon Crandall, Jr., and John B. Callery. The church was decorated in autumn-shaded dahlias, with a hundred candles on the altar, and preceding the wedding march the St. John choir came singing down the candle-lit aisles.

Three hundred guests were bidden to the reception which followed at the home of the bride's aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. J. Kingsley Macomber, in St. James Park, where the rooms were also decorated with a profusion of dahlias.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison will go to San Francisco, whence they sail the 28th inst. for three months in China and Japan. They will be in Kyoto at the time of the Coronation Festivities for the Japanese Emperor, returning shortly afterward to establish their home in Los Angeles.

Among the many prenuptial affairs given for the bride-elect and Mr. Harrison was an elaborate dinner with which Mr. and Mrs. John B. Callery of Pasadena entertained thirty guests at the Biltmore Wednesday evening. Thursday evening Mr. Harrison entertained his ushers and a few intimate friends at the California Club, and Friday evening, following the rehearsal, Elston M. Harrison was host at dinner at the Victor Hugo, the entire bridal party being bidden.

The bride, who attended Miss Ransom's School in Piedmont and the Bennet School in New York, is a granddaughter of Mrs. Charles Rivers Drake of Long Beach, while Mr. Harrison, who with his mother and brother formerly lived in Indianapolis, is a great-grandson of President William Henry Harrison, and a great-great-grandson of Benjamin Harrison, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independ-

Philharmonic Activities

Philharmonic Orchestra activities will start with the meeting of the executive board of the women's committee of the orchestra, called by the general chairman, Mrs. Cecil Frankel, for Monday, October 8, at 10 a.m. Mrs. J. J. A. Van Kaathoven will serve as vice-general chairman of this committee for the coming season, a place which has been held for several seasons by Mrs. Force Parker. Mrs. Hansen Moore will remain secretary and treasurer of the committee.

Unexpected Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Curtis Torrance, Jr., of 401 South Las Palmas avenue, sailed Friday aboard the Olympic for Europe.

Their departure was the result of a most delightfully hasty decision, since the Torrances talked about the trip Thursday evening, the 13th inst., in their home, made up their minds to go. Dr. and Mrs. Jack Keith, Mrs. Torrance's parents, entertained with a farewell dinner for them Friday evening, and they left for the East Saturday morning. The bon voyage affair, given in the Wilshire Boulevard home of Dr. and Mrs. Keith, was attended by twelve guests.

Mrs. Louis Curtis Torrance came from Pasadena to remain at her son's home with baby Sheila Elizabeth, during their absence, and the travelers will return in time for Christmas. Mrs. Torrance, Jr., was formerly Miss Katherine Keith.

Drummond-Jennison

One of the most important of early autumn weddings was that of Miss Lillian Drummond, daughter of Mrs. Charles Ringen Drummond of 201 Beacon street, South Pasadena, and Charles Dudley Jennison of New York, the ceremony taking place at 5 p.m. Wednesday in All Saints' Episcopal Church, Pasadena, with Rev. Richard Lief officiating.

The bride, who was one of the most popular members of the Spinsters' Club, was gowned in duchess satin made with a court train, and wore a veil and coronet of old duchess lace. She carried an armful of Ascension lilies. Her matron of honor was her sister, Mrs. A. W. Stearns (Louise Drummond,) who wore peach chiffon and carried dahlias, while the attendants, Mrs. James Burnes, Mrs. Morris Barnes Miller, Mrs. Elizabeth McAlpin and Miss Beatrice Peeples, were in yellow chiffon and carried baby dahlias.

Morris Barnes Miller served Mr. Jennison as best man, the ushers being William Joyce, Jack Drummond, James Burnes and Richard Dakin.

A scheme of green and white, carried out in tall candles, magnolia blossoms and greens, decorated the church, while at the home roses of all shades were combined with the vivid blue of delphinium and asters. Huge baskets of yellow chrysanthemums and gladioli with ferns graced the drawing-room. Here a reception at 5:30 p.m. was followed by dinner in the gardens of the beautiful estate, the Biltmore Trio and Earl Burnett's orchestra providing the music. Mrs. Drummond received her guests in apricot chiffon, with a corsage of orchids, and Mrs. Dudley Jennison, mother of the bridegroom, also wore orchids with a gown of lavender chiffon.

Mr. and Mrs. Jennison are now enjoying a honeymoon in the north, and after two weeks will return to their new English home at 3263 Lucile street, Chapman Woods. Mrs. Jennison was graduated from the Westridge School in Pasadena and Miss Ganong's School for Girls at Rothesay, New Brunswick, while Mr. Jennison is a Yale man.

Morning Musicales

The morning musical series, sponsored by Mrs. Genevieve Gray, to which many socially prominent people of Southern California are subscribing, will be given in the new ballroom of the Biltmore and not at the Beverly-Wilshire as formerly planned.

Only the best artists of the country have been obtained by Mrs. Gray for the series of seven morning concerts to be given once a month followed by an intimate artist luncheon. The first concert Monday, October 29, at 11 a.m. will introduce the Russian symphonic choir.

Patronesses include Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. Clarence Burlingame, Mrs. James R. Brehm, Mrs. Fred H. Bixby, Mrs. Walter Jarvis Barlow, Mrs. Albert C. Billicke, Mrs. Edward A. Dickson, Mrs. Eugene O. McLaughlin, Mrs. Daniel Murphy, Miss Jean Hill, Mrs. Lee Allen Philips, Mrs. Samuel Storrow, Mrs. Joseph Satori, Mrs. Gurdon Wallace Wattels, Mrs. Ella Brooks Salazo, Mrs. Harold Brent Wrenn, Mrs. Carrie Jacobs Bond, Mrs. Charles Frelinghueysen Smith, Mrs. Jay B. Millard, Mrs. J. Manchester Cook, Mrs. George Benjamon Hull, Mrs. Clarence English, Mrs. Walter G. McCarty, Mrs. Frederick Stearns, Mrs. Willis D. Longyear, Mrs. Richard Tracy St. John, Mrs. J. Jerome Canavan and Mrs. Edmund Locke.

Tennis Tournament

The playing of the Pacific Southwest championships, sponsored by the Tennis Patrons' Association of Southern California, at the Los Angeles Tennis Club, the 28th inst., to October 7, will be the occasion of much entertaining, dinner-dances, garden parties, etc. During the course of the tournament Mrs. Edwin N. Janss will have as her two house guests the two United States Davis Cup players, John Van Ryn of Princeton, and Wilmer Allison of the University of Texas.

The British Davis Cup team, Edward Higgs, H. W. Austin, J. C. Gregory and I. G. Collins, will arrive in Los Angeles Tuesday and expects to play a team match with

Miss Mary Maclay Richard

FORMALLY announcing her betrothal to Ardin Dale Hotchkiss, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Hotchkiss, a beautifully appointed bridge-tea was given the 8th inst. by Miss Mary Maclay Richard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Richard, at their home in Covina. A number of friends dropped in later in the afternoon for tea.

The news was told by an engagement ring concealed in a corsage of rosebuds and maidenhair ferns.

What Hostesses Have Been About Lately

leading United States players at the Tennis Club next Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Wednesday morning the British team will be guests of Col. William Eric Fowler at the Breakfast Club. Included in their entertainment will be a dinner-dance in their honor at the Los Angeles Tennis Club Thursday evening. Col. Fowler will have as his house guests, during the entire tournament, the visiting French players including M. and Mme. Henri Cochet, M. Pierre Landry and M. Christian Boussus. During the visit elaborate plans are being made for the entertainment of the French and other visiting tennis stars. These plans include trips through the motion-picture studios, yachting parties, etc.

Miss Helen Wills of Berkeley, her mother, Miss Penelope Anderson of Richmond, Va., and Mrs. Charlotte Hosmer Chapin of Springfield, Mass., will be the honored guests at luncheons, dinner parties, etc., during the course of the tournament season.

Mr. and Mrs. Hal Braly will open their Muirfield Road home to the ever-popular Mr. and Mrs. William Johnston of San Francisco during the playing of this great tournament.

Garden Wedding

One of the loveliest of the season's weddings was that of Miss Marie Carolyn Barnett, daughter of Charles T. Barnett of Glen Albyn Drive, and Dwight Archibald Moore, son of Dr. and Mrs. Dwight Shumway Moore of South Pasadena, which took place the 15th inst. in the gardens of St. Vincent's Church, West Adams street at Figueroa, with Father E. M. McDonald officiating, and Mr. Barnett gave his daughter in marriage.

Pink and orchid dahlias and chrysanthemums were massed with ferns and foliage in the garden decorations, while the same blossoms were used in the home, where a reception and wedding supper followed the ceremony. The bride was charming in a gown of ivory satin, period style, with needle pointe lace insets in cuffs and bodice, the tulle veil held in place by a cap of seed pearls, and she carried brides roses, gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Miss Maxine Talbot, maid of honor, wore shell pink taffeta bouffant style and the bridesmaids were Miss Katherine Bohn in orchid taffeta and Miss Dorothy Barnett in Nile green taffeta, while Edward A. Paris of San Francisco served Mr. Moore as best man, and the ushers included William E. Wood and Charles B. White.

The bride was a student at Providence Academy, Chicago, while Mr. Moore claims University of Southern California as his alma mater and Harvard graduate school of business administration, and is affiliated with Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity.

Many lovely prenuptial affairs were given in honor of this attractive bride, among the hostesses being Miss Dorothy Pickett, who gave a miscellaneous shower the 12th inst., her decorations carrying out a green and pink motif, while Miss Helene Hollicker gave a smart bridge party the following day, Mr. Moore sharing the honors of the evening, and Miss Kathleen Bohn gave a lunch shower and bridge at her home in North Harvard Boulevard.

Home From Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Paul William Laurence returned recently from a motor trip through the East and Middle West, during which they passed some time at the Grand Canyon, Oklahoma City, Lincoln, Neb., and were guests at the Chicago Country Club during the recent national golf tournament on their return trip from New York.

Wedding Anniversary

A golden wedding anniversary of interest to many Angelenos is that of Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Schoenfeld of Red Bluff, who have many relatives and friends in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Schoenfeld were married September 22, 1878, in San Francisco, Mr. Schoenfeld having arrived there in 1856. Mrs. Schoenfeld was Miss Helena Myer, a native of San Francisco and a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Myer of that city.

Miss Golda Schoenfeld and A. S. D. Schoenfeld are the surviving children of the union.

In New Home

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley L. Frank, who formerly were domiciled at 139½ North New Hampshire avenue, have recently moved into a new home at 6500 West Sixth street in Carthay Center.

Dismukes-Over

The marriage of Miss Sarah Mary Dismukes, daughter of Mrs. Helen Tuckey, to Franklin Over, took place at 10 a.m. the 14th inst. at St. Raphael's Church, and was followed by a wedding breakfast at the Mary Louise.

White chiffon over blue silk was worn by the bride, who carried an arm shower of gardenias and lilies of the valley. She was given in marriage by her uncle, John Smith, of Beverly Hills, Miss Cela Wilmot being bridesmaid and Charles Rayer of San Diego the best man.

Annual Dinner

Gamma Beta chapter of the Gamma Eta Kappa Fraternity conducted its annual anniversary dinner the 15th inst. at the Chevy Chase Golf Club, with Harold L. Orr presiding. Members in attendance were P. H. Mitchem, A. M. Mitchem, Harold W. Cooks, Herbert Bolton, Fred Jahnke, Herson B. Clampitt, Donald E. Shaw, Lawrence Bernard, R. C. Cunningham and Kenneth Pierce.

Make Home Here

Honoring Mr. and Mrs. Jack Cole of El Paso and Mr. and Mrs. Leland Henderson of Tonopah, Nev., Mrs. Laurence Lacy Brown (Florence Frederick) entertained the 18th inst. with a dinner and bridge party. Mr. and Mrs. Cole plan to make Los Angeles their home and are being welcomed by their many friends who attended the University of California with them. Mrs. Cole was Miss Lois Leidig before her marriage a year ago, and is a sister of Mrs. Leland Henderson (Phyllis Leidig.)

Robinson-Kritzer

Among the interesting weddings of the month was that of Miss Idabelle Robinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Robinson of South Second avenue, and Yeret Kritzer of Los Angeles, the ceremony taking place in the Church of the Angels.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, made a charming picture in her imported gown of orchid georgette and old lace, with which she wore a matching hat, and carried camellias, roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Irene Robinson, her sister, was maid of honor, wearing green tulle in the bouffant mode and carrying sweetheart roses and sweet peas. Miss Helen Perry as bridesmaid was gowned in blue tulle and carried a similar bouquet.

Mr. Kritzer chose for his best man Walter De Vaney, Edward Ruick and William Jacobson assisting as ushers. Following an informal reception for the bridal party at the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. Kritzer left for Catalina Island. They will make their home in Hollywood.

In Europe

La Casa Felice, the Hollywood Hills villa of the Frederic Riders, will in all probability not be occupied this year. Closing it October 1, of last year, Mr. and Mrs. Rider started on a trip around the world and arrived in the British Isles the middle of August. Many of their American and English friends were entertained at their hunting box in Scotland during the grouse hunting.

They are now at Harrogate, taking the cure preparatory to returning to Paris in October, and later passing the winter months in Rome. They plan to return to California about May 1, 1929.

Bridge-Tea

Honoring Mrs. Harold Draper (Helen Simons,) a delightfully planned bridge-tea was given yesterday afternoon at the Pacific Coast Club, Long Beach, by Mrs. Robert Clive Hudson.

The hostess was assisted by her mother, Mrs. R. G. Simons, Mrs. Leon Hopkins, Mrs. Edward Cox and Miss Margaret Anderson, while at the tea tables, decorated with gay-colored daisies and place cards in basket design, covers were marked for Mmes. H. D. Hudson, George Ridenbaugh, Sam Smith, A. Anderson, William Savage, V. A. Humphrey, John C. Calhoun, John Fabian, W. T. Moran, John Simons, Laura Simons, Robert Hornby, Harold Davidson, F. U. Luncheon Party

A charming hostess of last week at the Victor Hugo was Mrs. H. B. Kempster of Boston, who entertained Mrs. C. F. Sanders of Boston, Miss Alberty E. Nye, Miss Mabel M. Finch and Ralph L. Nye of Los Angeles.

Church Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Mabel Aver of 1644 West Twenty-fourth street, daughter of John H. Aver of Murphysboro, Ill., to Marion Paddock, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Paddock of 2616 Kenwood avenue, was solemnized at 8:15 a.m. the 16th inst. in the Little Church of the Flowers at Glendale, by Rev. William Everett Roberts of the West Adams Presbyterian Church.

The bride, gowned in white moire and taffeta, made with tight bodice and full skirt, and carrying butterfly roses and lilies of the valley, had as her maid of honor Miss Catherine Ann Aver. Val Hollingsworth served Mr. Paddock as best man, and during the ceremony Miss Doris Carver sang two solos, accompanied by Neale Hollingsworth.

After a honeymoon at Lake Arrowhead, Mr. and Mrs. Paddock will establish a home in Los Angeles.

In Beverly Hills

Recent registrants of interest at the Beverly Hills Hotel include Mrs. Paul S. Winslow and her mother, Mrs. R. W. Anderson, from Honolulu; Mrs. E. C. Harwood of Pasadena, Mrs. Howard Kelly and Mrs. Edward Lingo of San Diego, who are guests of Mrs. G. W. Dulany, the last having recently returned from four months in Honolulu, and Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Campbell of Pasadena.

Rush Series

Gamma Phi Beta sorority of the University of California at Los Angeles will honor its rushees during the coming week with a series of parties under the direction of Miss Aileen Taylor, chairman of rushing. Mrs. Beecher Dickson, 925 Schumacher Drive, is the new president of Gamma Phi Beta Alumnae in Los Angeles.

Tuesday afternoon a tea will be given at the home of Mrs. Bartley Cannell, 100 South Windsor Boulevard, while Wednesday at the Beverly Hills home of Mrs. Paul Jeffers, 712 North Bedford Drive, a dinner will take place. A bridge dinner Friday evening at the home of Mrs. Paul William Laurence in the Cheviot Hills will conclude the affairs of the week.

Quiet Wedding

At a quiet wedding in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard F. Block, San Gabriel Boulevard, Miss Esther Steinhoff of Bakersfield became the bride of Robert Block. Mr. Block will leave October 1 for Colombia, South America, and Mrs. Block, who was graduated from Mercy Hospital, Bakersfield, will join him later.

Home From Europe

Mrs. Walter M. Catlin and her daughter, Miss Dorothy Catlin, have returned from a delightful summer abroad, after having visited many of the principal cities in various parts of Europe.

Pomona Registrant

Miss Jean Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Stewart, left the first of the week to enroll in Pomona College. She is a Marlborough graduate, having been president of the senior class in 1927.

Honored at Tea

Miss Ruth Nelson, former librarian at the college of music, University of Southern California, was the honoree at a tea given Sunday afternoon by Miss Pearl A. Macloskey of the Trojan music college at her home, 4308 Victoria Park Drive. She was assisted by Mrs. Alice Macloskey and Miss Florence Macloskey.

Guests were faculty members and former associates of Miss Nelson at the college of music, and included Misses Dorothea Stuthman, Ivy Goade, Leila Ellis, Julia Howell, Dacotah Mizner, Buena Mizner,

[illegible] Affair

For Illinois Matron

Mrs. Charles Henry Little of West Thirty-eighth Place entertained Thursday with a luncheon for Mrs. D. J. Waters of Mt. Sterling, Ill., who is passing the winter season with her son, Dan Waters of Hollywood.

The table was decorated with pink and rose sweet peas, interwoven with smilax, and the afternoon was passed in the patio, where tea was later served. Mrs. Little presented each of her guests at the close of the afternoon with a large bouquet of choice dahlias from her own garden.

Jones-Lavender

The Little Church of the Flowers in Glendale was the setting at 8 p.m. Friday, the 14th inst., for the marriage of Miss Gwendolyn Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. Z. Jones of 915 East Ocean avenue, Long Beach, to Ernest A. Lavender, son of Mrs. Eunice Lavender of 443 West Fifty-sixth street, Los Angeles. Rev. Grover C. Emmons of Long Beach read the ceremony before 100 guests.

The bride, who is principal of the high-school section of Mrs. Porter's School for Girls at Long Beach, was gowned in white satin, pearl-beaded, and wore a long tulle veil with bandeau of orange blossoms. Her flowers were orchids, bride's roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Viola Foster, as maid of honor, was in Nile-green satin and carried Pernet roses, while Miss Pauline Murphy and Miss Barbara Barnes, in peach taffeta and tulle, carried pink and lavender sweet peas and pink roses.

Marston Jones served Mr. Lavender as best man, while Smith Cronch ushered. Music during the service was furnished by Miss Catherine Clarish, soloist; Miss Louise Church, organist, and Robert Kirkpatrick, violinist.

After a motor trip to the north, Mr. and Mrs. Lavender will live in Long Beach. Mrs. Lavender is a member of Pi Delta Phi and Theta Upsilon sororities at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Miscellaneous Shower

Miss Gladys Benson, who is soon to become the bride of Don Rohrdanz, was honored recently with a miscellaneous shower given by Miss Alys Hamel at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. Hamel of 3006 La Salle street. Twelve guests were bidden.

Musical Salon

Mrs. E. C. Ohlenacher, who has been active in Pro Musica and the Community Sing, as well as a founder member of the Hollywood Bowl Association, will be honor hostess at 9 p.m. Wednesday during the Hollywood Plaza Musical Salon. On the program for the evening will be Mrs. Florence Kaiser White, dramatic soprano, who will sing the "Song of Life," written and dedicated to her by Charles Wakefield Cadman, while Leslie Brigham, basso cantante, and Eunice Abernathy Downey, pianist, will each contribute a number of selections, and Marjorie O'Neill will give some of her characterizations.

A reception will be conducted in the Plaza salon immediately after the recital in honor of the artists taking part.

Chicagoans Here

Enjoying their first trip to California, Mr. and Mrs. D. Watkins of Chicago are touring the Southland with their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Abernathy, and making their headquarters meanwhile at the Hollywood Plaza. A trip to Catalina for this week-end was arranged by Mr. and Mrs. Abernathy.

Sixty-fourth Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Russell of Long Beach will celebrate their sixty-fourth wedding anniversary October 1, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. E. O. Woodruff, who will keep open house at 1545 Locust avenue, Long Beach. Mr. and Mrs. Russell were married October 1, 1863, in Grand Rapids, Mich., and have lived in California for twenty-six years.

Formal Tea

Miss Natalie Sterling had charge of the formal tea at the Alpha Gamma Delta House, last Sunday afternoon, which ushered in the formal rushing season at the University of Southern California. In the receiving line were Mrs. Ida Gertrude Pierce, Mrs. Louise Davis and Miss Idella Morehouse, president. Dean Mary Sinclair Crawford was the honored guest.

Decorations were of rose-colored asters and ferns, tea being served from a table whose centerpiece was rose, blue and cream water lilies between crystal candlesticks holding cream-colored candles. Miss Thora Krause and Miss Thelma Leknes poured, and corsages of gardenias and fern were given the guests.

Pasadena Wedding

The marriage of Miss Helen Josephine Heath of 1202 East Fifty-ninth street, to Roger William Rogers of 737 Leonard street, was solemnized Thursday morning at home of Rev. George R. Gradd, 246 Robinson Court, Pasadena, who officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers will live in Los Angeles after their honeymoon.

Engagement Told

Mr. and Mrs. William Carter Gaggs of 831 South Normandie avenue announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Alice Kathleen Gaggs, to Dr. Charles Adna Smith of Texarkana, Tex. Dr. Smith is the son of Mrs. Charles Adna Smith of Texarkana, and the late Dr. Smith. The marriage will take place in the holiday season.

Gone East

Miss Celia Eleanor Loyd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Loyd of 2426 South Figueroa street, left Thursday evening for a sojourn of two months in the East. She accompanied Miss Beryl Krictkoff and her mother, Mrs. M. J. Krictkoff. Miss Loyd attended Girls' Collegiate school and is an alumna of Orton school.

At the Sea Breeze

A most successful affair was the bridge luncheon given by Mrs. W. A. Koll in the Egyptian Room of the Sea Breeze Beach Club last Tuesday. The table was set for sixteen guests with a centerpiece of yellow roses and lavender sweet peas. Tall lavender tapers were placed at each corner of the table, and place cards also carried out the color motif of yellow and lavender. Among the guests were: Mmes. Ethel Gifford, W. E. Sheppard, H. H. Fogwell, Louise Miller, R. H. Sefton, Fred J. Reynolds, John G. Beaver, Ralph Joss, C. Tracy Hoag, Leland Reeves, Cyril Kupfer, Ray W. Dudley, George S. Cortelyou, H. W. Koll and Donald M. Baker.

Another interesting party on this day was that of Mrs. Rose Burnett. Her guests included Mmes. Jane Tyler, D. J. Taylor, Gus S. Williams, T. F. Fitzgerald, Misses Anna R. Tobin, Frances C. Weaver and Aldyth J. Irwin.

Other hostesses who entertained at bridge luncheons were Mrs. Kathleen Disney, whose guests were Mrs. H. C. Corse, Mrs. M. K. Allen and Mrs. L. Blake Baldwin; Mrs. Sarah Conoughby, noted bridge expert, whose guests included Mrs. A. L. Adamson, Mrs. Frank Staley, Mrs. Howard Mann and Mrs. Frank Crosby, and Mrs. Herald Hilts, Mrs. Zetta Butler, Miss Pearl Porter and Miss Mary Holmes, who also entertained. Miss Porter won the high score of the afternoon, with Mrs. Kathleen Disney second.

Evening Benefit

George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man" with Edward Everett Horton will be seen at the Vine-street Theater Monday evening, October 1, by the Hollywood auxiliary of the Children's Hospital, and its friends, when that organization entertains with a benefit party for the building fund.

A number of dinner and theater parties are planned for that evening, and the entire house has been taken over by the auxiliary. Tickets may be purchased with Mrs. Norris Mumper of 2021 North Serrano avenue, and Mrs. George Zaback of 6331 Fountain avenue.

Officers of the organization are Mrs. Linton H. Smith, president; Mrs. Zaback, vice-president; Mrs. William Eaves, secretary; Mrs. Reuben Larson, corresponding secretary, and Miss Olive Davies, treasurer.

Cooke-Anderson

Miss Charlotte Cooke, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Patrick Cooke of 612 West Forty-seventh street, became the bride at 8 p.m. the 12th inst. in the Little Church of the Flowers, of J. Carl Anderson, son of Mrs. Charles Anderson of 608 North Cherokee street. Rev. J. Scherbacher, an uncle of the bridegroom, officiated in the presence of 125 guests.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in ivory satin and veil of Chantilly lace, and carried a shower of butterfly roses and lilies of the valley. Her maid of honor, Miss Josephine Fosnight, was in pale blue taffeta and tulle, and carried Russell roses with pink sweet peas, while two bridesmaids, Miss Marguerite Blake and Miss Betty Miller, wore pale green and pink satin-backed crepe and tulle, respectively, and carried pink and orchid sweet peas. Little Marjorie Cryer, as flower girl, was dainty in yellow crepe de chine.

Mr. Anderson chose for his best man George C. Blake, the ushers being John Buckley Fosnight and John Petos. Miss Mary Pasnic was soloist.

After a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson left by motor for a honeymoon in San Francisco, Portland and Seattle. They will return to make their home here.

Announcement Party

One of the smart affairs of recent date was the bridge party with which Mr. and Mrs. E. I. Miller entertained at their home in Benton Way to announce the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Ruth Miller, to Milton Shapiro. Thirty guests were bidden.

The date for Miss Miller's marriage has not yet been announced.

Birthday Anniversary

Miss Mary Jane Halsey, the vice-president of the Junior Women's Club of Beverly Hills, was the inspiration for a birthday anniversary party recently, when Mrs. Thomas Ince of Beverly Hills entertained in her lovely gardens and home. The afternoon was passed with swimming, and in the evening a buffet dinner was served to thirty-eight guests.

The honoree, who is a student at Beverly Hills High School, lives at 416½ Maple Drive and is active in many club and school affairs.

LEADERS MEET AT GLENDALE

Six Hundred Presidents and Coworkers Gather

Good Humor Pervades Picture of Clubs' Session

Tickets Sold Out for Benefit Party at Theater

BY ROSALIND SHEPARD

Everybody knows that a meeting of club women is hardly the subject for a painting, nor yet a poem. Yet a group of radiant women, moving in rhythm and harmony upon a background of service is exactly that. And that is an unexaggerated, not really imaginative picture of the September Presidents' Council Tuesday afternoon at the clubhouse of the Tuesday Afternoon Club in Glendale.

The more than 600 club presidents, representatives and coworkers who gathered in the lovely auditorium cannot truly be called a representative cross-section of the Los Angeles Federation, for they represented but the highest type—the finest minds—the cream. Reflecting the moods of their leader, Mrs. William Waller Slayden, as she controlled perfectly the large gathering, they came from all parts of the county and conducted their business with precision.

The federation this year, as Mrs. Lucille Bender Weddendorf remarked, is working upon a plane of higher spirituality than ever before. It is the spirituality of the modern—not frail, romantic or easily wounded, but strong, unwavering, idealistic yet practical. Its spirit was well presented by Mrs. Weddendorf in a play, "The End of the Rainbow," wherein it is shown that the treasure one seeks is love.

Personalities, then, are the paint with which this picture must be done. Pervading all was humor—subtle, hearty, vailed, at times even naughty. Mrs. Charles McKelvey conducted her little lesson in parliamentary law so cleverly as to make her grown-up pupils answer in unison without losing dignity. "How do you promote sociability?" she asked, and when all plans seemed to include teas or luncheon parties, "That proves we can't do it without something to eat! Otherwise the guests just won't stay," she said with sly fun.

Mrs. Mab Copeland Lineman, stressing the importance of her beloved business and protective law sections, left with the Council the message, "Get away from personalities and think of 'things.' An idle mind is a diseased mind."

Even more imagination came from Mrs. John Stearns Thayer, who compared the club woman with Cleopatra—one feels bound to add "in a nice way." With Shakespeare she said "Age cannot wither . . . her infinite variety." In the federation this year, working with 2,000,000 women for child-labor laws and several other important legislative measures, one will, she says, be "rust proof."

TICKETS SOLD OUT

"Inspiration" is an overworked word with club women, but tears were close to laughter for some reason in the pitch of feeling to which Mrs. Daniel Campbell of Glendale and Mrs. Charles Van de Water of Long Beach worked the assemblage before the arrival of Mrs. Leiland Atherton Irish, who in her inimitable way was to put over a sale of tickets for an October 23 theater party at El Capitan. "I'm going to have a block of seats and take my good husband and sons and daughter and my son-in-law, and you'll be wonderin' where she got such good-lookin' people," said the very Scotch Mrs. Campbell, "because I never can bring 'em to presidents' council. And if you want to doll up in your evening dress that's short in front and long behind, and your little short wrap with the frilly ruffles that they're wearin' nowadays, and sit in a box and show off, it'll only cost you $2.50."

Mrs. Van de Water hoped she hadn't made a break when she said she'd follow suit—the term is not at all in either good Methodist or Presbyterian circles—but anyway more than 2000 tickets were contracted for when Mrs. Irish regretfully announced that the theater had only 1591 seats. "Like the couple who prayed for twins and got triplets," said Mrs. Van de Water, "we did too much." And the new federation headquarters will net $1000 from the evening.

Music by a delightful trio, an explanation of pending legislation by Senator Charles Lyons, luncheon and an afternoon address on "The Paris Peace Pact" by Bishop Charles B. Mitchell were the other high lights of the day.

Cheney Trophy to Remain Year in California

The Cheney trophy, one of the most prized of the national trophy cups of the American Legion auxiliary, will rest at headquarters of the California auxiliary department during the coming year. The winning of the cup by the department of California was announced at national headquarters of the auxiliary in Indianapolis, following the close of the national membership contests. The trophy will be presented to the California delegation at the national convention of the auxiliary in San Antonio, Tex., October 8 to 12, next.

To win the cup, which is awarded annually to the State department having 8000 or more members which shows the largest percentage of membership increase over the preceding year, the auxiliary women of California made a membership gain of 19.33 per cent. Wisconsin was second with a gain of 15.35 per cent, and Indiana, third, with 10.08 per cent. New York, which holds the cup this year, was seventh in the race.

CLUB NOTES

A Spanish luncheon, now an established custom of the Wednesday Morning Club, for the opening social affair of the year will be given by the drama department Wednesday of this week. Mrs. Harvey C. Reddick is in charge of the entertainment. Cabaret singers will appear during the luncheon hour. Assisting Mrs. Reddick will be Mrs. Harold W. Bailey, Mrs. C. F. Kemp and Mrs. Fred K. Heller, Luncheon will be followed by bridge and five hundred.

October 3 is the date for the official opening of the club when new members and their guests will be greeted by the president, Mrs. E. Q. Bowden and her board, official hostesses of this occasion. Mrs. Cora Holland, past president of the club, will make the welcoming address. Business meeting will be held at 1 p.m. and cards for the entertainment of guests at 2 p.m.

Motion-Picture Conference

The motion-picture conference of the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs, which was announced for last Friday has been postponed until Friday, October 19. Mrs. Edward H. Jacobs is chairman and the conferences are conducted by her at district headquarters, 2103 South Hobart Boulevard, at 10 a.m., the third Friday of each month.

Eleanor Joy Toll Association

A breakfast at 12 noon and card party in the afternoon at the home of Mrs. Margaret Frick, 575 Esplanade, Redondo Beach, will be given Friday for the benefit of district headquarters by the Eleanor Joy Toll Association. Reservations may be made with Mrs. Howard U. Sherwood, 614 North Wilson avenue, Monterey Park.

United Daughters of Confederacy

Honoring the division officers of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and chapter presidents at the residence of their former president, Mrs. Gilbert Lillian Dunn, 1333 South Alvarado Terrace, the John Reagan chapter entertained one day last week with a beautifully appointed luncheon. The decorations were attractively carried out in pink and lavender throughout the spacious rooms. Guests included Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Douglass, Mrs. S. R. Thorpe, past State presidents; the new division officers, Mrs. Milton Leroy Stannard, Mrs. Hughes Garr, Miss Gertrude Montgomery, Mrs. F. B. Harrington, Mrs. Ezra F. Scattergood, Mrs. Albert Sydney Johnson; chapter presidents, Mrs. Patrick J. Henry, Mrs. Clifford A. Wright, Mrs. Helena T. Riche, Mrs. Frank W. Galvin, and Mrs. J. William Barnes. Mrs. J. Burton Cook presided at the luncheon, and also in the afternoon at the business session.

Pen Women's Luncheon

In honor of new members, the League of American Pen Women will give a hospitality luncheon at 12:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Mona Lisa Cafe, 2534 West Seventh street. Mrs. Ralph Waldo Trine, president, will introduce several prominent speakers and Mrs. Caroline Eager, newly elected vice-president, is to be in charge. Reservations are being made with Mrs. J. X. MacDonald of 620 East Adams street.

Twenty-fifth Anniversary

Highland Park Ebell is planning a gala year, for this is the twenty-fifth birthday anniversary of the organization. Unusually clever plans are now being made for the opening breakfast, October 2, when Miss Martha Winans will be toastmistress and will conduct a program afterward. Mrs. Carl A. Plath, the president, will preside.

An interesting feature of the event will be the large birthday cake, and tables arranged for each month of the year, with guests seated according to the month of their birth.

FEDERATION MEETS SLATED

Departmental Chairmen Announce Programs to be Held During Week at Club Headquarters

Conferences of the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs, to be held at the district headquarters, 2103 South Hobart Boulevard, during the ensuing week are as follows:

Monday at 10 a.m. Miss Lucy Wolcott, chairman of music, will open the season's music conferences with a study of the opera "Montemezzi," to be presented by the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association in the Shrine Auditorium, October 5, next. Mrs. Allen Minot will give the story and analysis of this opera and will be assisted by Mrs. H. B. Nicholas, pianist; Miss Gwendolyn Anderson, soprano, and Mr. Jack Griffen, tenor. The music division anticipates entertaining Mrs. John Merrill of Alameda, State chairman, during the latter part of October.

Tuesday at 10 a.m., Mrs. Charles Richmond, chairman of international relations, will conduct her first conference of the year.

Wednesday at 10 a.m., Mrs. Harry L. Stroh, chairman of reciprocity and information, will conduct an open forum on the questions: Who should introduce the speaker, president or the program chairman? Who should provide the music for the club, the music chairman or the program chairman? How long should a speaker talk? How long should a program last? Should the president choose the committee members for a chairman or should the chairman choose her own committee, and many other questions on the conduct of a club.

The following artists will be heard: The Beaux Arts Trio, Inga Nelson Brown, pianist-lecturer; Marguerite Le Grand, pianist; El Trio Unique with Evelyn Snow, contralto; Elizabeth Eaton Burton, French art; Mary Ellen Marie Chambers, poet and radio lecturer; Stanley Horoshevsky, telebelphonist; Margaret Rose Sheet, pianist. Guests from all parts of the world visit these conferences.

Thursday at 10 a.m., California history and landmarks, chairman, Mrs. J. G. Maclay.

Friday at 10 a.m., home gardens, Mrs. Charles Gordon, chairman.

Rainbow Luncheon

At the first opening meeting of the season, the West Adams Woman's Club will entertain Thursday afternoon with a rainbow luncheon and card party under the supervision of Mrs. D. H. Hays. Her committee is comprised of Mrs. Andy Hamilton, Mrs. Lew Fields, Mrs. Harry Ludlum, Mrs. Oda Akin and Mrs. Anna Rosselle. Mrs. K. O. Weber, assisted by Mrs. John Bailey and Mrs. Carl Widner, will have charge of the cards.

Junior Club Women

California has attained second place in the United States and the General Federation of Women's Clubs as having the next to largest membership. One-half the juniors of California are in the Los Angeles district, where Mrs. William Herbert Riley is chairman. Assisting her in the work and serving on the committee are Mrs. R. Rose Ball, Mrs. Frank Evans, Mrs. Walter Hubner and Mrs. L. L. Lord.

EARLY DAYS TO FEATURE CLUB MEET

California's Birthday Will be Commemorated Next Month in Hollywood

Recognizing the seventy-eighth birthday anniversary of the State of California, the Woman's Club of Hollywood has planned to surround the first program, October 3, with an atmosphere of the early days of the dons in a colorful presentation of California music and dancing. The California Quartet will give numbers. The members are: Charles King, tenor; Irmalee Campbell, soprano; Elinor Bryan, contralto, and Bordan Gilowitz, baritone. They will be accompanied at the piano by Salvator Nuno, leader of the Mission Orchestra. Jose Montoya, violinist; Jesu, Montoya, cellist and Jolita Ruiz, dancer.

A tea in the lounge following the program will conclude the afternoon when members of the executive board will receive each one wearing a handsome Spanish shawl. Mrs. Alfred Bartlett, president, will be assisted by Mrs. Leiland Atherton Irish, Mrs. Wayne Webster, Mrs. Eugene A. Holmes, Mrs. E. B. Dixson, Mrs. Ollie A. Topham, Mrs. Henry F. Boesche and Mrs. Charles H. Barber, all of whom are officers; and the directors, Mrs. George Grant Hunt, Mrs. W. H. Barrows, Mrs. Charles H. Bradford, Mrs. Louis L. Burns and Miss Jessica Noble.

Mrs. Bartlett states that in obtaining Mrs. Irish as program chairman, Mrs. John Nelson Hurtt as leader of the chorus, and Mrs. E. T. Ferguson as chairman of the drama shop, many fine things are to be expected this year.

One of the delightful features, an innovation, will be the teas given by the art section in the lounge the second Sunday of each month under the direction of the chairman, Mrs. Francis Vreeland, where members and their friends may meet the exhibiting artists between the hours of 4 and 6 p.m.

The press luncheon of the year will be given December 12 under the direction of Mrs. E. E. Noon, chairman.

LEADERS OF MUSIC TAKE TOUR NORTH

New Units to be Formed by Federation Executives During Trip

Mrs. Abbie Norton Jamison, president of the California Federation of Music Clubs, and Miss Romona Little of the National Music League and extension chairman for the federation, are touring the north to establish new music clubs. Mrs. Jamison and Miss Little en route north were honored guests at the annual banquet of the Santa Maria Harmony Club, of which Miss Little was formerly president.

Before leaving the city Monday, Mrs. Jamison presided at the first board meeting of the season of the California Federation of Music Clubs, which was held at the home of Mrs. Charles Jaben Hubbard, the corresponding secretary. Interesting plans were discussed for an active season. There will be a president's council early in October to be followed by a series of round robin affairs under the direction of Mrs. Burdette Norton, the new ways and means chairman.

Verse Writers Meet

The regular meeting of the Verse Writers' Club of Southern California will be conducted at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow in the fiction seminar room of the Los Angeles Public Library.

SOROPTIMISTS OPEN SEASON

Charming Invitation Sent for Initial Program

Big Sister League Will Fete Eleventh Birthday

Autumn Brings Activities to All Women's Groups

BY MYRA NYE

Very formidable was the appe ance of the summons to the Sorop timist court, received by the pres members a week or so ago, and obeyed more or less unanimo last Tuesday at the Biltmore.

"In the Soroptimist court of the city of Los Angeles, State of California. In the matter of Miss New paper Woman et al, Press Members, Citation."

And when we broke the impos seal we read further the citatio as follows:

"Hark ye! Hark ye! Hark ye! Ta this summons now at hand. At yo peril, on this press day, may y disobey command. In the hig courts of our friendship is the pla where you appear. Time: The Bil more, beginning a new club yea Orders are that you accept a weal of joy and cheer, and a wish th luck will follow you each day th follows:

"Given under my hand and se this 18th day of September.

[Signed]

AMELIA F. JOHNSON,
"Presiding Judge."

When Estelle Lawton Lindsey a peared before the court she plead not guilty to learning to write.

"I never did learn," she said, "I just had to do something to earn a living. So I wrote and then I knew how by doing it, the same way we learn other things."

Jean Loughborough, Lovell Patterson, Ann Somers and myself all put up a convincing plea to defend ourselves against Mrs. Johnson's playful accusations. All were dismissed.

AMONG MY SOUVENIRS

My souvenirs have to go into the waste paper basket. There are so many of them at least so many of club souvenirs, notices that come too late or for some reason can not regularly appear. But they should be mentioned.

For instance that dear group of good women, The Big Sister League, are celebrating their eleventh birthday Thursday. So long ago as that, Mrs. Minnie Barton, a probation officer, interested a group of prominent society and club women in her work of rescuing the human flotsam that was constantly passing through her hands. She showed that the girls on probation could be taken and trained in whatever vocation they were best fitted—later to be placed in good environment and employment found for them. So she founded the Big Sister League in December, 1917. More than even Minnie Barton had hoped has been done and the salvage of girlhood and young motherhood in these eleven years has been an amazing and constructive work. Mrs. Louis Mittendorf and Mrs. Robert Lee Gifford are leading this year in the work at the Minnie Barton Training Home.

INDIAN WOMEN'S CLUB

And here is something new under the sun of women's clubs. The American Indian Women's Club will give a Dickens night and present many of the works of Charles Dickens, in review. Chief Standing Bear will give one of his interesting talks. The time is Thursday evening at the Westminster Hotel.

Mary Carr is to play the mother part in "Sensation," a comedy drama by Rita Kissen at the Theater Mart.

And the next notice I pick up among my piled-up souvenirs is about Sawtelle Juniors in clubwork. I'm as sorry as the rest of you out-of-Los Angeles clubwomen that I no more have the space to give to out-of-town clubs. I used to. But that is past press history. Besides, how could I, with one page to five hundred organizations, hope to compete with the columns and columns of newspaper stories you get in your own local papers. Please have mercy. But it should be said that these Sawtelle Juniors are a remarkably live and interesting bunch. If you want to know more about them, ask Adelaide Fi of Brentwood Heights.

SOUTH SIDE EBELL

South Side Ebell begins the new year with a reception to Mrs. L. B. Allenson, newly elected president, Thursday of this week.

Mrs. George Davidson Gilmore (Betty Gilmore) will open La Casa Pequena, the Gilmore playtime villa in Verdugo Hills, to her fellow members of the Scribblers League Saturday evening. It is to be an old-fashioned party with stunts by every member the of the evening.

L. E. Behymer and his have leased the Figueroa Playhouse from the Friday Morning Club and it is to be operated as a repertory theater on strictly professional Associated with Behymer are eon Gest and H. Ellis Reed.

Mrs. Caroline B. Eager had her girlhood friends among others, Louisa M. Alcott, Harriet Beecher Greeley. She is going to tell about them her usual charming and way at the first meeting of the Southern California Women's Club Tuesday, October 2.

And this is only the beginning of interesting items in club circles. it is the end of space. Nothing can be more tragic than the of space.

"Value of a Good Memory"

The Women Secretaries' Club of Los Angeles will hold its regular monthly membership meeting dinner at the Mary Louise, day evening. A talk by David Roth on "The Practical Value of Good Memory" will be the principal feature of the program. Miss Zyl Modie will entertain with lected whistling numbers and community singing will also form a part of the program.

Society

nounced, has been honored with many lovely prenuptial affairs by her many friends, has chosen October 20 as the date of her wedding.

Miss Grace Black will serve Miss Gronen as maid of honor and her sister, Mrs. S. H. Marshall will be matron of honor, while the Misses Marie Duffy, Peggy Black, Marjorie Williams will be the bridesmaids.

The wedding will be at the home at 8:30 p.m.

Miss Gronen was graduated from the Hollywood School for Girls, while Mr. Perkins, who came to Los Angeles from Cleveland, about a year ago, attended the University of Michigan.

Entertains Club

Mrs. David Kearns Johnston, who recently returned to her home at 980 Kensington Road after six weeks at various near-by springs, entertained recently a group of twelve guests who comprise a club, eligibility to which requires that its members be born in Alabama. After a beautifully appointed luncheon the afternoon was passed with cards, prizes being won by Mrs. Delaney Hazelhurst, Miss Elsie Nicholls and Miss Helene Cammerlin.

The membership in the club is limited to twelve, the members in turn entertaining once every month with a luncheon, the afternoon being devoted to some novel diversion chosen by the hostess.

October Wedding

Miss Maybelle Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Scott Williams, has set October 12 as the date of her wedding with Alick J. Weir, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alick Weir of Forrest Hills, N. Y., who are here as the guests of their son in North Hayward avenue.

Many affairs are being given for this popular bride-elect, Miss Mildred Woodruff of South Rossmore avenue entertaining recently with a dinner which honored also Mr. and Mrs. Weir, while Friday afternoon of last week Miss Louise Trekell was hostess at a shower and tea, as was Miss Gladys Jones Saturday afternoon. Miss Jones will be one of the bridesmaids.

Honolulu Wedding

From Honolulu comes news of the marriage in August of Miss Joyce Bernice Sheuk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Sheuk and a niece of Associate Justice Sheuk of the Supreme Court of California, to Burton Alexander Shutt, son of Dr. and Mrs. A. Schutt of Monterey Road, San Marino. They plan to live in the islands for two years.

Mrs. Sheuk, mother of the bride, and her daughter, Miss Janette Sheuk, with Miss Billie Youngworth, daughter of S. V. Youngworth, have just returned from three weeks in La Jolla, where they enjoyed the swimming and aquaplaning as well as trips to Coronado, San Diego and the Imperial Valley.

Miss Sheuk, will enter the Westlake School this year as a junior student, while Miss Youngworth, who was graduated in June from Marlborough, will enter the University of California at Los Angeles.

Club Luncheon

To honor Miss Ethel Stanford, a bride of the month, Miss Virginia McMullen and Miss Carol Bodger entertained with an attractively appointed luncheon at the Pacific Coast Club in Los Beach. Sweet peas in pastel shades centered the table, and corsages and dainty cards in the Sunset dining-room marked places for sixteen guests.

Auer-Annand

The marriage of Miss Wilma Auer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reno Auer of 1000 North Brand Boulevard, Glendale, to David Earle Annand of Los Angeles, was an event of Thursday evening at the Little Church of the Flowers, with Rev. Julius Soper officiating.

Miss Clarice Dickson, in peach tulle over satin, with which she carried sweet peas and fern, was the only attendant of the bride, who was beautiful in a period gown of jade green tulle over satin, and picture hat of pink with long pink and green streamers falling over her shoulder. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses and lilies of the valley.

Ronald Mullinger served Mr. Annand as best man, the ushers being Robert E. Lee and Fred Evans.

Mr. and Mrs. Annand will pass their honeymoon in Canada, and Northern California, and after November 1 will be at home at 111 East Dryden street, Glendale.

To Live Here

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Mann, Jr., who recently arrived from Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., have established themselves near the home of Mr. Mann's parents, in Glendale. Both were popular students at Knox, and Mrs. Mann is a member of Delta Delta Delta Fraternity and of the Theta Sigma Phi, winning her "B. A." a year ago. Mr. Mann is noted for athletic and scholarship records in his college and will continue his progress this year at University of Southern California. He is a member of the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity. Many delightful affairs are being given in their honor.

Enjoyable Outing

Mr. and Mrs. A. Hitchner, Miss Ellen Hitchner and Miss Susan Hitchner of Los Angeles spent a pleasant vacation at Hotel Del Mar, enjoying swimming, tennis and other sports, which this delightful resort offers.

The hunting season opened with a flourish at Del Mar on the 1st inst. Doves abound in large quantities in the hills behind Hotel Del Mar, according to reports from the fortunate ones. Phill Swaffield, Ronald G. Swaffield of Long Beach James C. Craig and James Blum of Los Angeles were down for the opening of the season, and bagged the limit. J. A. Nadeau and George Ross also reported good luck.

Mr. and Mrs. Victor Ford Collins, Mrs. Charles Richards, Mrs. Warren Horton of Los Angeles and A. G. C. Collins of South Pasadena passed the week-end at Hotel Del Mar.

Mrs. Max Asher, Leonard and Billy Asher of Chicago have just completed a delightful month's vacation at Hotel Del Mar. Mrs. Asher and Leonard return to Chicago, while Billy enters California Preparatory School at Covina. Mrs. Asher plans to return to California in a few months' time to visit at Hotel Del Mar and Beverly Hills.

Golf enthusiasts enjoying the new all-grass golf course at Del Mar, and registered at Hotel Del Mar, are Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Pursell of Los Angeles, Dr. E. Cook of New

Campus News

Starting out the new school year in full force, the co-ed shunning group of prominent University of Southern California students known as the Bachelors, held a luncheon reunion Thursday, in the student union.

The Bachelor Club, of which Ray Hatfield is president, is composed of selected Trojans who are heart-whole and fancy-free. In case there occurs a mix-up in dates and a Bachelor is seen twice with the same co-ed, the penalty imposed takes the form of a large dinner check for the benefit of all the other Bachelors.

There are now twenty-five active Bachelors on the Southern California campus including Mr. Hatfield, president; Bill Harvey, vice-president; Prexy Eckles, Jesse Hibbs, Guy Duckworth, Lowry McCaslin, Larry Weddle, John Bailey, Bill Seitz, Bob Behlow, Ralph Huston, Theron Wilson, Jesse Hill, Jack Stumph, Leslie Lavelle, Larry Dihel, Burke Heistand, Ted Halfhill, Bud Pentz, Marion Garrison, "Cozy" Dolan, David Bryant, Ray Broomfield, Virgil Pinkley and Jimmy Lane.

Engagement Announced

Miss Thelma French and her mother, Mrs. William Alver French of Los Angeles, are visiting San Francisco, their former home, and intend to remain in the North for a month. Saturday, the 15th inst., Miss French entertained forty friends at a beautifully appointed luncheon at the Fairmont Hotel and announced her engagement to Raymond James Roberts of San Francisco. Both the bride-elect and her fiance are well known in society of the northern city and Los Angeles. Miss French was formerly a student at the University of Southern California, and is a musician of note. The wedding will be an event of early winter.

At Del Mar

The annual banquet, golf tournament and tennis matches of the alumni chapter of Sigma Alpha Pi of Pasadena were held Saturday evening, the 15th inst., at Hotel Del Mar. This organization is the alumni chapter of the local fraternity of the California Institute of Technology. The affair was in the nature of a two-day party with a banquet table set for fifty guests, beautifully decorated, carrying out the purple and gold colors of the fraternity, and followed by dancing and cards.

Sunday morning the golf tournament took place on the Del Mar golf course where most of the matches were played off before breakfast. Some started as early as 6 a.m. and continued through until 9 a.m. After breakfast, tennis matches were played followed by swimming in the warm salt water plunge. The Sunday luncheon was a very beautiful affairs, the entire fraternity at this time arranged at tables of four, six and eight and decorated with the fraternity colors. . . .

Included were Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Glen E. Webster, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Taggart of Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Knight, Mr. and Mrs. Lester A. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Stromsoe, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Werner of South Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Woodbury, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley C. Carnahan, Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Racine, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Shoemaker, Jr., of Hollywood; Mr. Roy E. Elmore of Beverly Hills, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Havner of Anaheim, Mr. and Mrs. Harold R. Linhoff, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Brunner, Mr. and Mrs. J. Arthur MacDonald, Mr. and Mrs. W. Stuart Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Alderman, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Moldenbauer, Charles P. Walker, Miss Felicia Sillard, J. E. Mauer, Miss Hazel Garrison of Los Angeles, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Suman of Inglewood, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice R. Ross of San Diego and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene H. Imler of Glendale.

Woolson tells us that—"Women have in their natures something akin to fireflies. While men grow stupid and sleepy toward evening, women become brighter and more open-eyed, and show a propensity to flit and sparkle under the light of chandeliers."

Perhaps 'tis a consciousness of this trait that has so inspired the costumieres to present for the evening mode such glorious subtleties of naivete and scintillating beauty as now await you at Dyas—gowns to be seen, not described!

Society

the Little Church of the Flowers, Glendale, with Rev. E. Nelson Allen officiating.

The bride was charming in gown of white taffeta with ruffles of tulle edged with satin, the long tulle veil held in place by orange blossoms and carried lilies of the valley and white roses. Mrs. Bessie Tetley, matron of honor, wore pink taffeta and tulle and carried Mme. Pernet roses while Miss Mary Coles, gowned in orchid taffeta, Miss Hilder Pierson in green taffeta and tulle and Miss Roberta Bevis in blue taffeta and tulle were bridesmaids and all carried pink roses and sweet peas. Leola Collier in blue changeable taffeta and Venus Young in pink taffeta, and carrying ivory baskets of rose petals were dainty flower girls.

Bob Holwell served Mr. Williams as best man and David Coles and C. C. Collier served as ushers.

Preceding the ceremony Elizabeth Owens presided at the organ and also played the wedding marches.

After a motor honeymoon to San Diego, Mr. and Mrs. Williams will return to make their home at 1101 West Forty-fifth street.

In the Southland

After a tour of the continent Mrs. H. Orem and son Maxwell of Montreal, Can., and Miami, Fla., have arrived in Los Angeles. Mrs. Orem is prominent in the younger set in Canada and Florida and while in Los Angeles they are house guests of her sister, Mrs. A. Champagne at 2585 Beechwood Drive.

Home Again

Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Van Denling of 620 South St. Andrews Place and Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Updegraff of 622 South Serrano avenue, after passing a delightful vacation in the high Sierras for two weeks at Tahoe Tavern, Lake Tahoe, are again at home.

From Trip Abroad

Mrs. Frank Harbeson, Mrs. Lloyd Moultrie, Mrs. Ann Thurston and Mrs. William J. Doran, who have been touring Europe by motor for the past six months, are domiciled at the Hotel Crillon in Paris, before sailing for home October 1.

For Bride-Elect

Honoring Miss Elsie Hiliger a delightfully appointed luncheon was given the 11th inst., by her mother, Mrs. Ottilie Hiliger, at her home, 520 North Mansfield avenue, the decorations being effectively carried out in pink and orchid, even to the gown of the honor guest, who was charming in a frock of orchid georgette, and the "shower" was hidden through the house. Those included were Mrs. George Curtis, Mrs. Harry Curtis, Mrs. Ray Curtis, Mrs. Clifford Rainville, Mrs. Lee Railback, Mrs. Arthur Meidroth, Mrs. Joseph Joyce, Mrs. Thomas Moore, Mrs. Harold McGray, Mrs. McFarlane Johnson, Mrs. Charles Munson, Mrs. Fred Foster, Mrs. Herbert Legg, Mrs. Ottilie Hiliger and Miss Elsie Hiliger.

For Distinguished Visitors

Cards are being issued by Mrs. Frederick C. Valentine for a reception tea today from 4 to 6 p.m. honoring His Excellency the Egyptian Minister and Mme. Fannu Pasha.

At the Deauville

Miss Annabel Wagner was a charming hostess of the week at the Deauville Club when she entertained with a gay little dinner-dance.

Los Angeles roses in a graceful silver vase flanked by tall lighted tapers in silver candlesticks adorned the attractive dinner table where dainty place cards marked covers for Mrs. Richard F. Owen, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. William Bauermeister and Warren Crowell.

Miss Beatrice Brand of North Citrus avenue entertained a few of her friends in her sorority, Alpha Chi Omega, at the Deauville for a bridge-luncheon last week. Sorority members and their friends who were present were the Misses Helen Pease, Betsey Ashburn, Marjorie Martin, June Anderson, Blanche Weaver, Lucile Unbdenstock, Lavinia Lodge, and others.

A lovely corsage of sweet peas was given each guest and the bridge prize was a crystal bracelet and the consolation prize, a goat pincushion. Late summer flowers decorated the luncheon table.

Dinner Party

Mrs. Guy Huyett of 263 South Norton avenue entertained a group of fourteen friends with a dinner party recently in the main dining-room of the Chapman Park Hotel, the guests being seated around a large round table decorated with a large plaque of flowers.

Mrs. A. G. Biggerstaff of 523 South Virgil avenue also entertained recently at the Chapman Park, twenty-four guests being bidden to luncheon and bridge, and later, tea served at the small tables.

Church Ceremony.

Miss Lucille Cottrell, formerly of Birmingham, Ala., was married at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday, the 12th inst., in the Little Church of the Flowers, to Joseph Inslee of La Paz, Bolivia, South America. Rev. George Ellingwood Joy officiated, and after a honeymoon of several weeks in Southern California, with the Roosevelt in Hollywood as their headquarters, Mr. and Mrs. Inslee will motor to New York, going later to Bolivia, where they will make their home.

Via Panama Canal

Dr. and Mrs. Ralph L. Byrnes of 620 South Westmoreland avenue sailed Monday morning aboard the California for New York via the Panama Canal. While in the East Dr. Byrnes will visit several of the larger hospitals and Yale University, and they will return to Los Angeles about the middle of October.

Barrows-Hillyer

The marriage of Miss Jane Barrows, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Barrows of 1640 Wilshire Boulevard, to Roland Hillyer of Los Angeles, son of Jacob Hillyer of Newfoundland, was solemnized the 12th inst., in the Little Church of the Flowers at Glendale, with Rev. C. N. Haudenshield of the Methodist Episcopal Evangelist Church, officiating.

Old blue crepe-backed satin, with close-fitting hat, formed the costume of the bride, who carried an arm bouquet of old-fashioned flowers. Fifty relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony.

After their honeymoon at Lake Arrowhead, Mr. and Mrs. Hillyer will make Los Angeles their home.

The Lancer
IN HOLLYWOOD
Harry Carr

I have always contended that Jean Hersholt was incomparably the best actor in Hollywood.

The portrait of the vamped business man in Griffith's "The Battle of the Sexes" is an amazing piece of work. It has humor, subtlety, sympathy and stark reality.

Brilliant Satire

A new Griffith comes to light with this picture. Although a commonplace story, it is the product of a rich, finished art . . . A Griffith who is at his full stride.

There are touches—as when the shopworn Lothario takes his matinal and domestic pipe to the tryst with the vamp—that reach the heights of great satire. And, like other great satire, are stung and tinctured with pity.

Phyllis Haver

Phyllis Haver is as good in this as she was bad in her emotional scenes in "Chicago."

Griffith has always been at his best in his screen studies of fear. He helps Phyllis to put over a great scene of fear in this picture—where the daughter comes to kill the vamp who is leading her father astray. Just as the fear of Lillian Gish in "Broken Blossoms" was always the terror of a child, so Phyllis never steps out of the terror of a courageous, adventurous, bold woman in that scene.

Too Innocent

And yet I couldn't let this go by without flipping a fly into the ointment.

Griffith is never so unconvincing as when he puts on scenes of innocent joy. There must have been much bitterness and pain in his life; he strains so hard and becomes so sappy when he shows scenes like Sallie O'Neil opening the Christmas packages.

Thrill That Failed

To me the scene where the sorrowing mother came to the edge of the roof to throw herself off lost force—because she came twice to the edge. It robbed the scene of intention.

A Climax That Missed

The worst fault in this corking and brilliant picture was the climax—where the father found his innocent daughter in a bedroom with a rotter. And realized she was only following his own example.

Griffith made a hash of this by cutting away from it to Phyllis quarreling with the rotter—through jealousy. It left the scene without a clear motive. You went out of the theater in doubt—whether Hersholt reformed because he was thrown down by the other girl; or because he realized to what depths he was leading his daughter. Was it disillusion or remorse?

The scene between the father and daughter should have been played through from one end to the other without interruption.

Another Barrymore

Clarence Brown believes that into his hands has come one of the great geniuses of the screen—young Doug Fairbanks.

I put great store by Brown's judgment; because he has one of the sanest, clearest minds I have ever known—on the screen or off.

He says that, unless some unfortunate personal experience rises to block the boy's career, Douglas is due to be the next John Barrymore.

Brown directed him in the play they made out of Michael Arlen's "The Green Hat." That isn't the name by which it will be known on the screen. I suppose they will call it "The Fires of Remembrance" or something like that—after the astonishing movie fashion.

Why Doug Charms

Young Dounglas is an interesting contrast in artistic method to Douglas, Sr.

Mary's Doug is not an actor in the sense of making portraits of realities. His forte is to draw flaming posters of imaginary heroes. What has made him a great figure of the screen is the gusto with which he translates the spirit of adventure.

We know in our hearts that no such characters ever lived as D'Artagnan and Zorro. The real D'Artgagnan probably never fought as many fights in his whole life as Douglas shows him fighting in every reel.

We love Douglas on the screen because he makes us forget a life of typewriters, ledgers, income taxes, speed tags and tooth brushes.

He is more than a player of parts; he is the creator of a world.

I, for one, went to see the pictures with a half-formulated homily on the folly of young Americans going to Paris. But I soon was too interested for homilies and found much to admire in the direct presentation achieved by the artist in his later manner.

Music Given by Candlelight

Mena Queale, a singer with an eastern reputation, will bring to Los Angeles audiences a series a programs entitled "Recitals by Candlelight." Each recital will present a Los Angeles artist as assisting soloist.

Alexander Kosloff, one of the the younger musicians, will give the first program. Also, on each program, there will be compositions which will be given their initial performance in Los Angeles. Friday evening will mark the initial program of this series, to be given in the Beaux Arts Auditorium, Eighth at Beacon.

PRINCE GEORGE CORNERS LIMELIGHT

Handsome Adonises Out Hollywood Way Suffer Eclipse During Incognito Visit of English Royal Scion to Film Capital

BY ALMA WHITAKER

All the handsome Adonises in Hollywood still have their noses a bit out of joint. For His Royal Highness Prince George of England, masquerading very incognito, as Lieut. Windsor of H.M.S. Durban, 26 years of age, 6 feet 1 inch tall, and very youthful in manner, was the cynosure of all eyes fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of him during his brief stay in the film capital. And if "stolen fruits (and kisses) are the sweetest," he should have had a saccharine time of it, for his youthful highness is said to have snatched the holiday without leave and was to be duly "disciplined" by his ship's captain for his naughtiness.

This may explain his genuine alarm when snoopy reporters found him out and venturesome photographers craved his picture with unquenchable persistence.

Otherwise it is safe to say Prince George would have adored posing amiably for pictures with lovely picture queens and uttering ebullient remarks for publication about his impression of our unique Hollywood. But British princes must only utter words of wisdom designed to further the best interests of the British Empire, and as neither his royal parents nor the British Parliament regarded Prince George as Solomonically discreet enough to be thus entrusted, he had been sternly ordered to "hold his tongue."

CHEERFUL SINNER

If he could and would have spoken, what would he have said? He was a very cheerful young sinner and so obviously thrilled with the company he was keeping. The Hollywood he saw was nicely staged by Doug and Mary to meet the best traditions of us. The wild and woolly West was reincarnated for

MUSICALES AT BILTMORE IN MORNING

Notable Series of Recitals to be Presented on Monday in New Ballroom

An innovation in the current musical season are the morning musicales sponsored by Mrs. Genevieve Gray, which will be given in the beautiful new ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel instead of the Beverly Wilshire as formerly planned. The opening of the series will take place Monday morning, October 29, at 11 o'clock, when the Russian Symphonic Choir under Basile Kibalchich will introduce a new kind of choral music.

The Russian choir, termed as a human orchestra, is only one event of an interesting list of seven monthly concerts to be given by some of the best known artists in the country, including Mary McCormic; Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, Geraldine Farrar, Doris Niles and her ballet, Gil Valeriano and the Flonzaley Quartet.

Patronesses include Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. Clarence Burlingame, Mrs. James R. Brehm, Mrs. Fred H. Bixby, Mrs. Walter Jarvis Barlow, Mrs. Albert C. Bilicke, Mrs. Edward A. Dickson, Mrs. Eugene O. McLaughlin, Mrs. Daniel Murphy, Miss Jean Hill, Mrs. Lee Allen Phillips, Mrs. Samuel Storrow, Mrs. Joseph Sartori, Mrs. Gurdon Wattles, Mrs. Ella Brooks Solano, Mrs. Harold B. Wrenn, Mrs. Carrie Jacobs Bond, Mrs. Charles Frelinghueysen Smith, Mrs. Jay B. Millard, Mrs. J. Manchester Cook, Mrs. G. Benjamin Hull, Mrs. Clarence English, Mrs. Walter G. McCarty, Mrs. Frederick Stearns, Mrs. W. D. Longyear, Miss Gwendolyn C. Longyear, Mrs. Richard F. St. John, Mrs. J. Jerome Canavan and Mrs. Edmund Lorke.

BEN LYON FETED

Ben Lyon, who is playing the lead in "The Exodus to the New World," a Mormon epic, is enjoying the hospitality of Salt Lake City. When off the set, he is being entertained by civic and social circles of the Utah capital and writes that he is "leading the life of Reilly."

SOUTHWEST ART PRIZES ANNOUNCED

Crash of Tower Results in Belated Distribution of Exposition Awards

The tower on the Fine Arts Building of the late Pacific Southwest Exposition at Long Beach crashed about a jury in the act of awarding the cash prizes that Art Director Theodore B. Modra had so bravely extracted from Long Beach art patrons. What with overwork, answering foolish questions, entertaining visiting artists and preparing for the Los Angeles County Fair, the falling tower proved too much for Mr. Modra. It bruised him badly and he forgot to send out this news.

A jury consisting of James Savory, Perry G. M. Austin, Max Wieczorek, C. J. Curtis and J. E. Hyde, awarded $1050 in prizes as follows:

For sculpture: Merrell Gage, "Madonna of the Plains," $250; Edna Kelley, "Woman," $25; Ella Buchanan, "Magdalene," $25.

Oil paintings: "Paris," by Joseph Kleitsch; "Opalescense," by Frank Couprien; "Crashing Harmony," by Paul Lauritz; "Castle Rocks," by Henry L. Richter; "Pastor de Cabras," by W. Herbert Dunton, and "Pueblo Girl," by J. H. Sharp, each received $100. Other oils, "Heart of Sierras," by Marie B. Kendall, and "Zinnias and Fruit," by Mabel Alvarez, were given $25 each.

Water colors by Dan Sayre Grossbeck, "Grape Harvest;" Loren Barton, "Mexican Evening;" and Frank M. Moore, "Mid-day Haze," received $25, and the same amount fell to Josephine Hyde's "Still Life."

NOVARRO'S ODD PROGRAM

Ramon Novarro played in the oddest concert he ever appeared at while filming nautical scenes in "Gold Braid," his new naval aviation story aboard the airplane carrier Langley. Novarro played on the ship's piano, which was placed before a microphone connected with the vessel's loud-speaker system, so that his program could be heard by the entire crew at their posts. The microphone system is used on the vessel for bugle calls, time signals and communication.

Prize Given 'Times' Critic

Arthur Millier, art critic of The Times, has frequently indulged fine scorn over the idea of artists being awarded prizes just like school children or fancy live stock. Nevertheless, he was visibly excited when he learned that his etching, "Our Lady Queen of the Angels," which pictures the Plaza Church, had been awarded the California Society of Etchers prize of $100, in that organization's annual exhibit at San Francisco. Proofs of the winning plate will be given to every associate member of the society. The exhibition is held at the galleries of Vickerey Atkins and Torrey in the northern city. Millier won the same society's prize in 1922.

DRAMA SEASON OUTLOOK BRIGHT

Theatrical Menu Emphasizes Serious Offerings

Mystery Plays Conspicuous by Local Absence

Shakespeare Players' Coming One of Highlights

BY MURIEL BABCOCK

With perhaps not so many "scorchers" ahead as seem already to be shrieking forth from the New York stage this fall, the coming theatrical season in Los Angeles promises much in the way of good drama, much that should be bright, refreshing and new.

In the East, according to word that has drifted coastward, the new plays are of the red hot-from-the-gridiron type of which "The Front Page," Rabelaisian newspaper farce, and "Ringside," a spectacular expose of pugilism, are illuminating examples.

Los Angeles, however, will pursue a more sedate pathway, it would seem from information to be gained from local producers at this time.

Playgoers here are to be permitted to romp merrily in pastures dedicated to light comedy farce, occasionally to bite off a fresh, smart, wise-cracking line from a new drama of the sophisticate variety, and when their tastes so incline, to browse deep in "highbrowism."

For the serious drama is to be emphasized in the playgoer's fare this year. Not only is Los Angeles to have its own repertory theater, where drama of the highly intellectual type will be presented, but the decorous and scholarly Stratford Players from the Shakespeare Memorial Theater in London are coming to town.

MYSTERY PLAYS OUT

It would appear that the mystery play is to be conspicuous by its absence. There will probably be no more "Draculas." And perhaps this season too will be such that no more "White Cargo" or "Kongo"

RUSSIA PLANS FILM INVASION

Schenck Reveals Proposal to Exchange Pictures

Propaganda Angle Fails to Impress Producer

Moscow Experts Will Study American Markets

BY KYLE D. PALMER

Motion pictures made in Russia under supervision of the Russian government and produced by directors, actors and technicians occupying official government positions will be shown extensively in the United States through releasing agencies of this country if the Russians are able to meet the single demand of American exhibitors.

This is the information brought to the United States by Joseph M. Schenck, head of the United Artists organization, who spent several weeks in Russia as the official guest of the soviet government studying Russian film conditions and discussing the possibilities of an exchange of the motion-picture productions of the two countries.

It should be explained at the outset that there are no privately owned motion-picture studios in Russia; all (there are three principal ones) are owned and operated as a regular part of its establishment by the soviet government. The producers are government officials and all others connected with the industry are government employees.

Mr. Schenck is not impressed by the dangerous possibilities of propaganda in the Russian films and, which seems more important under the circumstances, as he sees it, neither are the Russians.

The Russian producers are making propaganda pictures for display in their own country; pictures relating to higher standards of living, to better sanitary conditions, and to the theories of government which the soviet entertains—but their primary object in making pictures to be shown in the United States will be the one purpose required of them by Mr. Schenck.

And this purpose is neither propaganda nor education, apology for themselves or criticism of our own system. It is the basic requirement of the American film industry itself—entertainment!

AIM AT PROFIT

This need, Mr. Schenck said, the Russians are not only willing, but exceedingly anxious to fill. And, again, in line with the eminently practical views which seem to be shared alike by the American picture producer and his Russian conferees, the Muscovite anxiety is not due to an overwhelming desire to please the American public, but to the far-more understandable motive of self-interest.

The Russians are ambitious, of course, to win the approval and admiration of American theater patrons for Russian art and artists, but they also are deeply interested in the subject of producing pictures for a profit. And in this connection, if so vile a pun may be permitted, it seems pertinent to suggest that, soviet contentions to the contrary notwithstanding, a profit is not without honor in that country.

Mr. Schenck made a dispassionate study of the film industry of Rus-

LINCOLN'S LIFE PORTRAYED

True and Revealing Picture Given in Beveridge's Biography of Great Emancipator

BY THOMAS F. FORD

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, 1809-185[illegible]. By Albert J. Beveridge. Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston.

"While the foundations of the Union trembled and the Old World throbbed with armed activity and pulsed with intrigue; while, in the United States, democracy and virile government were antagonistic instead of harmonious; and while war made brilliant with uniform and pomp every capital of Europe; far from the turmoil, across the mountains, in a log cabin in the heart of Kentucky, on February 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln was born."

Thus, in the stately, measured prose of which he was a past master, Beveridge begins his biography of Lincoln, whose career these two volumes follow from the day of his birth down to and including the debates with Douglas which lost him the Senatorship of Illinois but in the end exalted him to the Presidency.

This monumental piece of scholarly research and reasoned chronicle follows the same plan as that used by the author in his life of John Marshall, that of presenting the life of his subject against the background of the social and political history of the times.

STRUGGLES VISUALIZED

It follows, therefore, that in reading it we are enabled to visualize the hard conditions of life into which this wise and kindly soul was called, and to more fully realize the man's innate integrity of soul and solidity of character.

All the important and many of the minor, almost trivial, incidents that make up Lincoln's career are here detailed with a fidelity that leaves nothing to be desired. We see the child, gazing with wondering eyes upon the grim and grisly world of the wilderness. We see him slowly growing into boyhood, toughened and trained in the unceasing toil that was the lot of the lads of that backbreaking period, when the pioneers who laid the foundations for that vast empire that now stretches from Atlantic to Pacific, were engaged in a terrific struggle with nature in her fiercest and most unrelenting mood. Later we see the boy struggling to obtain the merest rudiments of an education and finally launching into the law, after hopeless efforts in other pursuits. Thence he plunges into politics, timidly at first, but later girding his loins for many a sanguine and historic struggle. We see the orator emerge, then the promise of the statesman, and finally as the work closes (having been stopped by the death of the author) we see Lincoln standing forth as one of the great pillars of strength around which all that was fine and high and hopeful in the nation, at death grips with a mighty issue, clustered.

SCHOLARSHIP EVIDENCED

While the last phase of Lincoln's life is not treated, these two volumes are complete in so far as they deal with the formative stages of Lincoln's career. That Beveridge was qualified in a peculiar way to deal with the life and achievements of Lincoln is not to be denied. He was no sheltered scholar, though true scholarship is evident on every page of this work, but a man of active life that was full of struggle. He was able to understand Lincoln, who was the product of toil and conflict and defeat—a true man of the people, whose every instinct and feeling was wedded to the experience of the common man. The author experienced many of the difficulties and trials that beset the path of his subject. He, too, was for years immersed in the rough-and-tumble struggle that is essential to popular government. In addition to this he was a man of ideals with a wide range of information and gifted with a facile pen as well as an eloquent tongue.

There have been innumerable volumes devoted to the life of Lincoln. Practically every important fact that has bearing on his career has been set down and elaborated have busied themselves with the task. It follows naturally that these volumes contain nothing of great import that is new, but the author has with infinite care and by great and diligent labor rescued from the mass of material touching on Lincoln's life a true and revealing picture of the man, one that will enable the present generation to get a more complete and rounded idea of just how human, how natural and how sublimely loveable was the Great Emancipator.

RECITAL PLANS OF INTEREST

Season of 1927-28 Promises an Unusual Array of Famous Artists Who Have Established Reputations; Joint Concerts Arranged

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

The present interim between musical seasons is a busy one of preparation. Reports from San Francisco presage an operatic opening in Los Angeles on October 3 that will start the music activities of 1927-28 off with a magnificent flourish. Shortly after the opera of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, Mr. L. E. Behymer will present the first of the long list of virtuosi which are to be heard in recital here this year, and the Philharmonic Orchestra will initiate the orchestral season under the conductorship of Georg Schneevoigt.

The individual recitals will be numerous, according to the announcements, but an interesting departure from the usual custom will be the number of joint recitals. Of course, Maier and Pattison rarely appear separated, but a joint recital by E. Robert Schmitz, pianist and president of the Pro-Musica Society, with Hans Kindler, the young 'cellist of Duth origin, whom Mrs. Elizabeth Shurtleff Coolidge has sponsored for several seasons, is out of the ordinary.

Zimbalist, the well-known violinist, will exhibit his superlative musicianship in a joint recital with Benno Moiseiwitsch, a pianist who electrified the staid Philharmonic audiences last season. It is to be hoped that Mr. Zimbalist will watch his precious violins more carefully on this visit to Los Angeles than he did on the last trip. A journey around the world was completed before a famous violin of his, stolen from backstage, was finally recovered.

OTHER JOINT RECITALS

Leo Ornstein, the extremely modern pianist who has not visited this city in some years, will collaborate with Harry Farbman, a new violinist, in another joint recital, and Cornelia and Doris Niles will give a dance recital together. Daisy Jean, the versatile musician who presents recitals of harp, 'cello and song numbers, will be heard on the same program with Gil Valeriano, a young Spanish tenor who sang in Los Angeles last season just enough to convince his hearers that his way an exceptional voice and training.

Tito Schipa is to give two concerts in this city this season, but one will be in October and the other in February.

Many other notable names are included in the list of artists to be presented this winter under the management of L. E. Behymer. Five violinists are scheduled, headed by Fritz Kreisler.

Since the age of 7, when Kreisler appeared at a concert for children given by Carlotta Patti, Kreisler has had a marvelous career. He made his first tour of Austria, his native country, as a child prodigy at the age of 14, with Moritz Rosenthal, pianist. He is hardly less accomplished himself as a pianist than as a violinist. He had a brilliant career as a youth as a student of medicine, and had he continued his work in that direction, would doubtless have become one of the great men of the world in that profession.

BOY VIOLINIST TO PLAY

In contrast to the mature years of Kreisler, Yehudi Menuhin, the 11-year-old San Francisco boy violinist, is to be heard at Shrine Auditorium the afternoon of December 16. He is a pupil of Louis Persinger. At the age of 7 the boy gave his first concert in San Francisco, a year later giving his first New York recital at the Manhattan Opera House. At the age of one year Yehudi heard his first symphony, and as soon as he could talk began to beg for a violin, the study of which he began at 4. In 1927 the boy appeared as soloist with the Lamoreaux Orchestra in Paris, and has appeared twice as soloist with the San Francisco Symphony. During the past few months urgent invitations from a number of leading symphonic organizations have been received by his parents, including the State orchestras of Berlin and Vienna, the London Symphony, and from Moscow and Leningrad, so a European tour has finally been decided upon for next season.

Hans Kindler, 'cellist, will appear on December 11. As a child he also began study of the piano and 'cello at the age of eight, winning first prize for both at the Rotterdam Conservatory at thirteen. When eighteen he was engaged as professor of the famous Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin. Coming to America in 1914 he became first 'cellist of the Philadelphia Symphony, and has made many concert appearances. He has played in Los Angeles with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

Geraldine Farrar, noted soprano, returns to Los Angeles for the first concert in some years. After her retirement from the operatic stage, she devoted herself to concert appearances, specializing in lieder. Her career has been a splendid illustration of what can be accomplished through extraordinary natural gifts, indomitable energy and quiet confidence in herself.

Benno Moiseiwitsch, one of the pianists to be presented this winter, was one of the first to use the international telephone between New York and London, the bill for which was nearly $500 to talk to his children. Moiseiwitsch's birthday falls on February 22, the anniversary of Chopin's, and he is considered a remarkable interpreter of the music of Chopin. Born in Odessa, Benno began study at the age of nine at the Imperial Music Academy, and at eighteen made his first English appearance. He has become the idol of audiences in Japan, China, India, Australia, New Zealand and other Far Eastern countries, being presented on his last tour of the Orient with a gold medal by the Japanese newspaper Jiji-Shimpo.

Rachmaninoff, second only to Paderewski in fame and popularity, comes February 26. As a composer he is known for his operas, cantatas, chamber music, a great symphony and distinctive preludes for the piano. Since 1919 in America he has given proof of technical powers, and true virtuoso instinct for the piano. Seldom is a composer of high rank so fortunate as to be able to set forth as pianist his own music in his own way. His opera, "Aleko," took first prize at the Moscow Conservatory in 1891, and was presented by Safonof two years later in Moscow. After the fall of the Czar his estate in Russia was confiscated, and he settled in America. Each fine day he is out in his garden or field, a workman in overalls, where he finds his recreation.

NATIONAL LEAGUE TO HOLD AUDITIONS

Music Club to Present Names of Resident Artists for Consideration

The National Music League of New York City, of which Mrs. Otto Kahn is president, announces through its western press representative, Miss Gene O'Hara, a plan for establishing a western division. The National Music League has been actively functioning in the securing of western engagements for its artists throughout the country, for several years. The first development of a regional division is to be started on the Pacific Coast.

Heretofore the activities of the league in the West have been confined to booking and have been in charge of Miss Ramona Little.

The new plan, which was worked out by Mrs. Vera Bull Hull, the associate director in charge of booking, during a recent visit to Los Angeles, includes auditions to be held in Los Angeles and in San Francisco, for artists indorsed by musical organizations and clubs who have happened to engage them.

Harold V. Milligan of New York is executive director of the National Music League and it is sponsored by a long list of distinguished eastern patrons of music. National League artists who have been heard here include Mina Hager, the Marianne Kneisel Quartet, Catherine Wade-Smith and Marie Montana.

CLASSES UNDER WAY

Lysbeth Le Fevre Introduces Novel Methods For Fall Term

After interesting experimentation in her studio, Lysbeth Le Fevre, well-known cellist, has worked out a plan whereby her younger cello students may have one class lesson with one private lesson a week. This plan enables the children to hear other children who are in the class and to give constructive criticism on each other's work.

Miss Le Fevre, who is an eminent concert cellist as well as a teacher of the cello, has appeared as solo artist with many of the leading clubs of Southern California, as well as appearing as soloist with the Glendale Symphony Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, the Berlin Symphony Orchestra and the Euterpe Orchestra in The Hague, Holland.

SPAIETH EDITS 'WHO IS WHO'

A new edition of "Who is Who in Music" will appear this year under the general editorship of Dr. Sigmund Spaeth of New York, national director of community concerts, and well known as a writer and lecturer on music. Among the associate editors are W. J. Henderson, Lawrence Gilman, Leonard Liebling, George Gartlan, Glenn Dillard Gunn and Maurice Rosenfeld, and there will be important contributions in addition, by Walter Damrosch and other well-known figures in the musical field.

It is planned to make the new edition as complete as possible, covering both the United States and England, and including short biographies of all the significant living artists, publishers, composers and other individuals intimately connected with modern music. The book, however, will not be merely biographical, but will contain also a number of articles of vital interest concerning present conditions in the concert field, grand opera, radio, the motion pictures and talkies, the schools and the churches. The new "Who is Who in Music" is announced for publication early in the fall.

Kurt Mueller Appointed as Musart Leader

Prof. Kurt Mueller, eminent Berlin pianist, will teach every Friday and Saturday in the new conservatory of music, Musart. Prof. Mueller studied under the famous Wagnerian, Karl Klindworth, and was assistant to Xavier Scharwenka. He later taught in Helsingfors, Finland, where he succeeded the renowned Ferrucio Busoni as head of the piano department of the government conservatory.

Prof. Mueller has taught in many European conservatories and he numbers many of the best-known musical personages among his friends. Mueller's compositions are well known in Germany, Finland and America. He wrote many orchestra, piano, church and song compositions.

MISS GOETZ WILL RESUME LECTURES

Margaret Goetz announces her fifth season of opera and composers' pictured programs to be given at the Biltmore on four successive Saturdays. The first lecture will be given in the evening of next Saturday, the story of "Turandot" and of "Faust" composing the program.

Two Schubert programs will follow and the concluding program in the afternoon of October 20 will be on MacDowell.

Assisting artists are Mmes. Melba French Barr, Roscoe W. Bell, Henley Bussing, Emma Mesrow Fitch, Emeline Rammelt, Helene Stirn, Georgianna Strauss, Florence Kaiser White, Elmer Bramell, Leslie Brigham, Gage Christopher, Dr. Carl Omeron, the Fuhrer Erb Trio and Linian Chancer, Ivy Mae Travis and G. Davis Brillhart, accompanists.

Singers Engaged for Opera by Noted Lecturer

Honors will go to four well-known soloists of the Southland who have just been named by Dr. Frank Nagel to sing the principal roles of "L'Amore Dei Tre Re," ("The Love of Three Kings,") in the Opera Reading Club presentation the morning of October 1. Dr. Nagel is supervising the performance.

The Montemizzi opera, which is to be followed by the semiannual luncheon meeting of the organization at the new Roosevelt Hotel, will have Alice Forsyth Mosher, soprano, in the only feminine role, that of "Fiora." The three kings will be portrayed by Parish Williams, tenor; Dr. Carl Omeron, baritone, and Leslie Brigham, bass, all well known in musical circles of the city. The El Capitan Theater will be the scene of the presentation.

Dr. Nagel, who has supervised some sixty-two operas for the organization during the last seven years, is now completing the translation of the tragedy.

Anticipation is keen among Los Angeles and Hollywood operagoers relative to the performance, as "The Love of Three Kings" has been chosen as the second opera on the schedule of the coming season of the grand-opera association. The club offering will be in English and in summary form, while the later presentation is to be in the original Italian.

Plans for the Roosevelt luncheon meeting are being made by Mrs. Louis Jacques, president of the club, who will preside at the huge table for the guests of honor, assisted by Mrs. George Dickson.

FIRST MEETING HELD

The Tronitz Club's first meeting of the season was held Saturday afternoon at the home of Miss Rosalyne Asner. The year book, containing the list of exceptionally interesting programs for the coming year, was distributed at that time. The program committee has been fortunate in securing very famous lecturers and artists for the year.

SCHOOL OF DRAMA MOVES STUDIOS

Robert W. Major

Celebrating its growth to a prominent place among drama schools of California from a small beginning four years ago at 1925 Wilshire Boulevard, the Major School of Acting will hold an opening in its new quarters in the Beaux Arts Building, next Saturday evening. A unique program in which more than 100 graduates of the school, together with students, faculty members, directors and members of the cast of the Major Players in Long Beach will participate, will be presented in the Beaux Arts Theater and will be followed by a dance.

Robert W. Taylor, organizer and director of the school, found it necessary to find larger quarters immediately, due to the recent affiliation with Musart, a musical organization headed by Parrish Williams and with Crown Pictures Corporation of Hollywood, although it was his original plan to stay at the Wilshire address until he was ready to build his own theater and school. The school will occupy the entire second floor of the Beaux Arts Building, using the theater for all productions, and auditoriums on the second floor for class and demonstration work. Offices, rehearsal rooms and a drama library will also be located on the second floor.

The Major Theater was opened in Long Beach more than four months ago and a large cast of players, all graduates of the school, called in from stock companies and motion-picture work to present drama there.

TO GIVE COURSE

The Figures Institute announces the engagement of Eugene Wolber, L.L.M. and L.L.B., who will give a course in escrow and California realty law over a period of six weeks. There will be five day sessions and a night course for three evenings a week.

SILENT MOVIES BRIGHTEN UP

Talkies Expected to Give Them New [illegible] Bern Talks of Sound Plans; Tearle's Stage Qualifications

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

[illegible] once in awhile motion pictures get into the position of [illegible] with themselves. They are into this situation with a [illegible] at the present time. It's the talkies versus the silents. And [illegible]

[illegible] ment than the other ten. They take therefore the general classification of program. special and superspecial, though the terms themselves are becoming rather outworn.

Bern expects to use a number of new stars and directors in some of the smaller types of features. "Experience has often proven that a director's earliest pictures represent his most successful efforts, and I think it is worth while to experiment with theory," said Bern. One of the first directors who will have an opportunity under his supervision will be Willis Goldbeck, the scenarist.

I HAVE a deep dark suspicion that a great actor was lost to the stage when Conway Tearle went into the movies. It is based on a belated view of his work in "Mid-Channel" which closed this week, and which offered some of the most spell-binding acting that has been seen this year. Tearle's voice is particularly splendid and resonant, and although I had heard reports that his articulation was not always perfectly clear, I did not find this to be the case. What impresses about his work is its finish and authority.

Lawrence Grant, who also appears in this play, gives a remarkable performance. In some ways he is the star of the latter show.

Ann Davis remains distinctly an acquisition. Her portrayal in "Mid-Channel" with a minor exception or two, was remarkably well done. She is by far one of the best leading women who has recently appeared here.

MANIFESTLY a much better type of actor and actress is being attracted to the stage from season to season. A comparison with the casts of a year or two ago is all in favor of those being seen today. The stage is going to see a constant improvement during the next few years—so great, perhaps, what with new talent being drawn here by talking pictures, that productions will rank second to none.

An interesting fact was disclosed by "Mid-Channel," namely that revivals, no matter how well done, do not have inherent drawing power. The Tearle season at the Belasco was a very fair one, but it probably would have been much bigger had he presented a brand new play. Incidentally, the Los Angeles engagement was a much greater success than the San Francisco, which proves perhaps in a degree the appreciation which audiences here have for acting regardless of play.

FROM all reports "Mother Knows Best" is due to cause the greatest stir of any talking picture yet produced. It is not all talkie by any means, but the impersonations of famous stage folk for which Madge Bellamy is responsible i. is predicted, promise a sensation.

Miss Bellamy has battled a hard road in the movies, suffering no small share of critical jibes in days gone by, but has enjoyed more favorable attention of late. It would seem that "Mother Knows Best" provides a climax in her career. Louise Dresser also is heralded for a triumph in this film.

THER" LEARNS TO PLAY

Work-a-Day Woman, All Her Days Takes Up Yachting, Bobs Her Hair

[illegible] is learning to play. It really is a startling innova[illegible]

[illegible]

Billy says she must wear socks, and wear flying colored veils that stream out behind as she floats down Hollywood Boulevard, so that everyone will shout "There goes Belle Bennett."

All the same, Belle's very real "mother complex" has proved highly advantageous to her. She is the shining screen mother of them all—she has wrung our hearts as a hard-boiled mother, a gentle mother, a nice practical mother, an old mother, a young mother—and even as a cigar-smoking childless mother in what she says is her favorite picture of them all "The Devil's Skipper," although it was never seen at first-run houses. Now she is to play the queen-mother in Doug Fairbanks's "The Man in the Iron Mask"—in which again, young Billy Bakewell will be included.

"Well, do you want me to help kill your mother complex?" I asked her, in view of the campaign manager's machinations.

"REALLY ME"

"Oh, no. I couldn't part with that," says Belle, as though I were suggesting cutting off her nose . . . "Why that really is me. Won't it do if I am just a gay, playful, swimming, dancing, automobiling mother?"

We decided it would. Incidentally it is highly becoming to Belle to learn to play. She hasn't actually worn any of the wild and shameless socks Billy insists upon presenting her with—but she can laugh joyously about them, and pelt Billy with them when he becomes obstreperous.

In the meantime she is a sweet reasonable mother in "The Battle of the Sexes"—just as a nice American mother of that standing would be.

FIRST ALL-TALKING

"Interference," the first Broadway stage hit to come to the audible screen, will be Paramount's initial all-talking motion picture. Clive Brook, Evelyn Brent, William Powell and Doris Kenyon are featured, with Roy J. Pomeroy directing.

MYRNA LOY IS SEEN AS GIRL CROOK

"State Street Sadie," Story of Gang Fights, Goes Into Warner Theater

The deadly "type" is not so deadly after all!

Quite contrary to being deadly, it is a distinct advantage, according to Myrna Loy whose strange green eyes and flaming hair has marked her as one of the most decidedly typed young ladies of the screen.

"But I don't mind it a bit," Myrna explained, when she had evaded the eagle-eye of her director on Warner Brothers new production, "Fancy Baggage" long enough to sneak to the sidelines of the set and chat for a moment.

"Of course stories constitute the biggest problem," she explained, "it is always hard to find suitable roles for types . . . but when once they are found they are usually outstanding, both in plot and character possibilities. And furthermore," she said with a smile, "a 'type' is very seldom called upon to fill any little vacancy that may arise in a cast. That is one decided advantage over being a straight ingenue."

Two short, shrill blasts of a whistle shrilled across the stage and Myrna was gone like the proverbial "shot from a gun," back to the yacht interior where the scenes were being made, and where the director had been putting Wallace McDonald, Hallam Cooley and Audrey Ferris through a rehearsal.

A white sports outfit, combined with a scarf and hat of a green to match her eyes, set Myrna off as a type indeed and set one to wondering why it took the films such a long time to discover her possibilities.

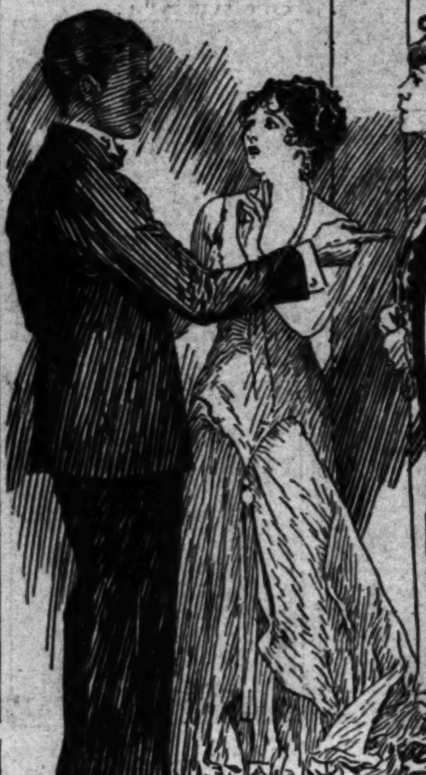
Off the set once again, however, conversation turned to "State Street Sadie," opening tomorrow as the new attraction at Warners' Theater.

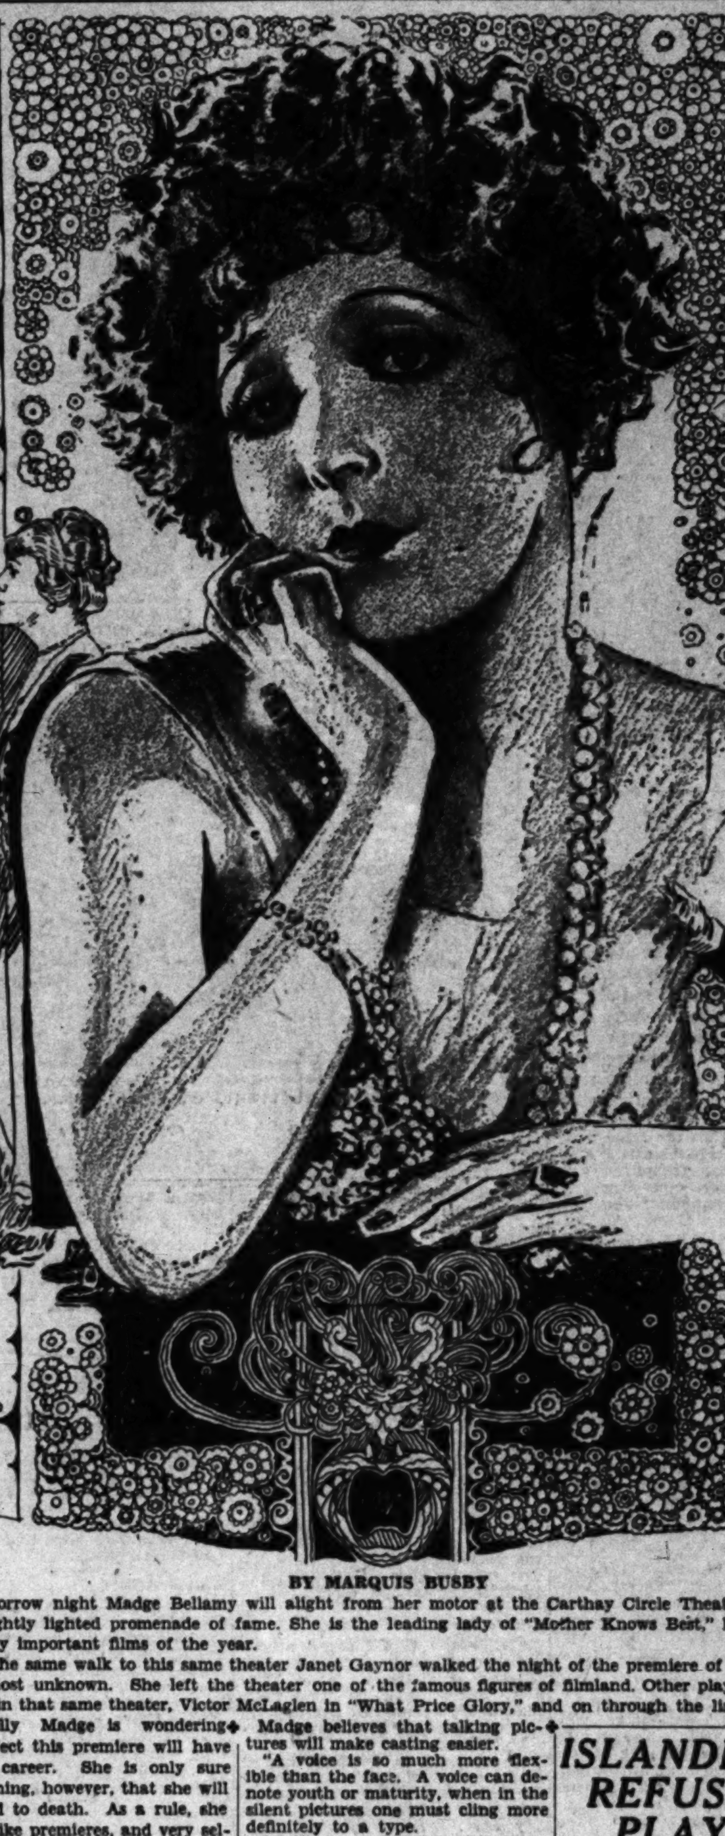
"I'm on the other side of the law again," she laughed. "My role is very similar to the one I played in "The Girl From Chicago." That was my first venture into crookdom. Since that time I have had an almost steady job carrying a .38 and dodging machine-gun bullets." After another fifteen minutes of rehearsing she ran back to continue.

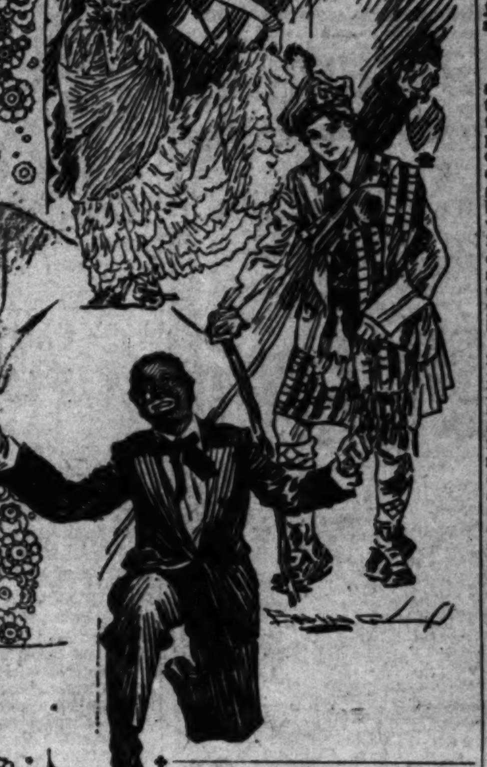
"It seems very funny, this associating with perfectly nice cinema characters, people who aren't afraid every time they hear a siren. Its a nice change, but difficult to become accustomed to."

"MOTHER KNOWS BEST"---OCCASIONALLY

In the white light of publicity live the leading characters of "Mother Knows Best," which will have a premiere at the Carthay Circle Theater tomorrow night. A selfish mother comes near ruining the life of her famous daughter, an actress with a marvelous gift of mimicry. When the girl falls in love with a young vaudeville entertainer the mother intercedes. Sketches below, by Times Staff Artist A. L. Ewing, show Madge Bellamy, Louise Dresser and Barry Norton.







BY MARQUIS BUSBY

Tomorrow night Madge Bellamy will alight from her motor at the Carthay Circle Theater and walk up that brightly lighted promenade of fame. She is the leading lady of "Mother Knows Best," hailed as one of the really important films of the year.

Up the same walk to this same theater Janet Gaynor walked the night of the premiere of "Seventh Heaven," almost unknown. She left the theater one of the famous figures of filmland. Other players have gained renown in that same theater, Victor McLaglen in "What Price Glory," and on through the list.

Naturally Madge is wondering what effect this premiere will have on her career. She is only sure of one thing, however, that she will be scared to death. As a rule, she doesn't like premieres, and very seldom attends one.

THRILLS COME LATE

"I used to wonder," she confessed, "when my screen career was going so slowly if I would ever be so fortunate as to take part in a big premiere. Then I argued, even if I did, it would be too late. There wouldn't be any thrill left. Now, even if I have been on the screen for a long time, I'm beginning to believe that it will be thrilling after all."

Madge's career has been unusually varied. One no sooner had her catalogued as an old-fashioned ingenue with long curls than she emerged as a blonde and bobbed flapper, a modern of the moderns. Now, in "Mother Knows Best," she is to be another personality and wear her own reddish-brown hair again. The role is difficult. It calls for drama, and the art of mimicry to a high degree.

The story tells of a young stage star, given the marvelous gift of mimicry. She rises to fame with a determined, selfish mother mapping her career. She falls in love, but her mother stops the romance. In Edna Ferber's short story of the same name there is an unhappy ending. The picture ends more happily for the young actress.

There are Movietone sequences wherein Madge gives imitations of Harry Lauder, Al Jolson and Anna Held.

GIFT OF MIMICRY

"I have always liked to imitate voices," she said. "When I hear a distinctive or unusual voice I go home and try and mimic it. The three imitations I give in the pictures were difficult, not particularly suited to my voice. They told me, though, that in my imitations of Jolson and Lauder there was a boyish quality to my voice. I suppose that is the next thing to a man's voice."

She had wanted to do a Movietone sequence with an imitation of Raquel Meller. She does give the impersonation, but without the sound device.

Madge believes that talking pictures will make casting easier.

"A voice is so much more flexible than the face. A voice can denote youth or maturity, when in the silent pictures one must cling more definitely to a type.

Madge is a refutation of the theory that a beautiful woman is also a dumb one, although she has been accused of being b.b.d. with the rest of the film beauties. Madge is so literary that she could sit down and discuss books with Gene Tunney without feeling in the least ill at ease.

FATHER A PROFESSOR

Her interest in books is not strange. Her father occupied the chair of literature in a Texas university. Their home was right across the street from a stone cottage which had been owned by William Sydney Porter. Porter, too late to enjoy it in life, was to achieve fame as O. Henry. But the natives of the Texas town considered him "no good." When Madge was at the Elsie Dinsmore age she was reading Balzac and DeMaupassant. When she was 15 she was reading George Moore's "Confession of a Young Man."

"I have a George Moore education," she smiled. "When Moore would refer to another writer I would immediately get the book. I used to go in a library and feel sad because I could never read all the books."

Before Madge starts work on her next Fox picture, "Subway," which William Beaudine is to direct, she is buying furniture for her new Italian home, which overlooks Los Feliz Boulevard and the hills. The house is now in the early gas-main period. Until the gas is in the house, Madge and her mother are eating out, from hot dog stands along the road to the Ambassador dining-room.

She admits she is a mother's girl. Only once have they been separated, while Madge was touring Canada with William Gillette in "Dear Brutus." She went to sleep every night with a hair-brush underneath her pillow to ward off possible burglars. And her mother wrote so many letters that the hotel bellboys delivered them to her room one at a time. It took most of her salary for tips.

Plane Battle Epic Lauded by Frenchman

While the realism of the air-battle scenes has been said to almost approach the real thing for authenticity, it was only recently that the Folies Bergeres set in Paramount's "Wings," now in its second week at the Criterion, won a similar compliment.

A Frenchman is the authority who avers that the famous center of Parisian night and gaity has been reproduced with worthy precision. Harry d'Abbadie d'Arrast, now a director for Paramount, stated recently that on viewing again the air picture, he was startled with the likeness of the film reproduction and the real thing as he recalls it from a not long past visit.

In the set, one of the largest interiors ever constructed in a motion-picture studio, 750 extras, representing every nation of the world, povided the background for the work of Clara Bow, Charles Rogers, Richard Arlen and Roscoe Karns.

EVELYN BRENT ASSIGNED

Evelyn Brent has been assigned to play the chief feminine role in a feature production to be filmed by Paramount and directed by Lewis Milestone, director of "The Racket."

ISLANDERS REFUSE TO PLAY DEAD

Superstition Keeps Natives From Filling Roles for South Sea Film

In the future motion-picture directors who invade little-known lands to film superstitious natives will do well to take along a "dead man crew," if they profit by the experience of W. S. Van Dyke in the Society Island group below the Equator.

Van Dyke encountered an odd attitude toward death on the part of the 800 native Polynesians of the cast during the five months he spent filming "White Shadows in the South Seas," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's first sound picture, now showing at Grauman's Chinese Theater.

In filming a thrilling sequence of the production in a remote part of the Pacific archipelago, it became necessary for some of the native actors to "play dead." They flatly refused and a poll of the entire company failed to produce a single native who would simulate death, even for extra monetary reward. They explained they feared to incur the wrath of native gods.

As Monte Blue and Raquel Torres, the principals of the production with Robert Anderson, were the only white members of the cast, it became necessary to delay the scene a day while Caucasians from the nearest trading post were sent for to be stained with brown paint as the "dead man crew."

In spite of all sorts of superstitions, which often delayed the filming for days, Van Dyke obtained the first authentic picture of the life and customs of the dying race of the Marquesas Islands of the Society group, a thrilling drama which has won the plaudits of world travelers who have visited the region as the first accurate production of the South Seas.

TALKIES TO BELONG TO ACTORS

Silent Drama Depended Upon Director; Epochal Change, Says Conway

"The movies were directors' pictures; the talkies will be actors' pictures."

Such, at least, is the opinion of the man to whom falls the distinction of producing Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's first film with dialogue. He is Jack Conway; and the talkie which in its last two reels records the speech and sayings of the characters is "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Conway has many silent dramas to his credit. Among them is "While the City Sleeps," in which he directed Lon Chaney. This is being screened at Loew's State Theater during the current week.

"I had never directed Chaney before," explained Conway—a youngish, brown-haired, blue-eyed, six-footer with a slow, easy manner of speech—"and it proved to be a pleasure too long deferred. Like the good actor he is, he contributed more to his characterization of the flat-footed 'dick' than he ever could have by just taking directions.

"I should like to hear Chaney in a talking picture. His voice would intensify the vividness of his parts."

Conway has no cut-and-dried "formulas" for making motion pictures.

"Years ago, when it was all new to me," he said, "I would have told you a thousand and one things about what should and what shouldn't be done. Today I have but a single primary rule, and that is: 'Entertainment first.'

"To entertain, I think a picture should be human—and that means funny, sad and exciting. 'Come Through,' which I made with Herbert Rawlinson years ago on the Universal lot, was the first crook drama, I believe, in which a villain of the underworld was painted as 'not all bad.' No man is."

Conway, who directed William Haines in "Brown of Harvard" and "The Smart Set," enjoyed working with him on the speaking sequences of "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

"We reshot the two final reels in three days," the director recalled, "using the recording apparatus at the Lasky studio pending the completion of our sound stages here.

"I rehearsed the company in each scene just as I would have for a stage piece. There were three players besides Haines: Lionel Barrymore, Leila Hyams and Howard Hickman. They talked quietly and naturally, and the reproduction of all four of their voices was splendid.

"My own voice, caught by the apparatus on occasions, when I raised it to give directions, was the only one that 'played back' to us unsatisfactorily; and there, I think,

'MOTHER KNOWS BEST,' TRIUMPH

Praise Showered on Madge Bellamy

Barry Norton, Louise Dresser Also Excellent

"Singing Fool" Called Hit of Box Office

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, Sept. 20. (Exclusive)—Praised by every critic, "Mother Knows Best" can be said to have scored nothing short of a triumph at the Globe Theater, where it is expected to run as long as any picture ever shown there.

At the outset it may as well be said that the performance of Madge Bellamy is considered the high light of the picture which, fine though it is, would undoubtedly have lost by Miss Bellamy's absence from it. More than one reviewer, associating her only with lingerie comedies, has termed her performance a revelation, but those of us who have had faith in her gifts as a serious actress are less surprised than we are eager to felicitate her on taking advantage of what is without doubt her best opportunity.

Congratulations to Winfield Sheehan are also in order for his faith in Edna Ferber's short stories as suitable screen material, to say nothing of his courage in risking loss on a picture which shows the more terrible aspects of mother love rather than the saccharine fiction hitherto characterizing the majority of maternal parents on the screen.

TASTEFUL DIRECTION

Excellent balance, taste and insight into character are shown in the direction of J. G. Blystone, but this is more evident in the earlier part of the picture than the later episodes. To the critic the logical end is where Sally and her mother go to Europe, or perhaps it might be extended to include her parting with "the boy" at the front. Her illness and her mother's anxiety cause the picture to drag, but in spite of this the popular appeal of the work is insured by the reappearance of "the boy" unexpected by all except the more knowing.

So keenly were spectators following the progress of the story at a recent performance that when Barry Norton came upon the scene a sigh of relief and sympathy swept most of the audience. In fact, Mr. Norton evoked sighs and murmurs on several earlier occasions as well, not apparently because of any brilliant acting, but perhaps on account of a personal appeal which combines youth, eagerness and sincerity. The same audible reaction was noted in "The Legion of the Condemned" and before that in "What Price Glory."

SPACIOUS CAREER

Evidently Mr. Norton is destined for a spacious career, while that of Louise Dresser cannot but fail to achieve fresh impetus through her notable acting in what many contend is her most effective role since "The Goose Woman." She is especially successful in the earlier episodes before her domineering tactics conflict with the desires of her daughter, but even at the height of the success which comes to mother and daughter, she retains sympathy and compels the spectators to see her side of the case. One of the most admirable points in the picture is that the mother is never made to seem a villainess.

Interpolation of dialogue, though not exactly necessary to further plot or characterization, is not resented and is, in fact, accomplished with some skill and should do much to add to the entertainment of talkie-mad public. Miss Bellamy's audible impersonations of Sir Harry Lauder, Al Jolson and Anna Held are impressionistic rather than mimetic but they too add to the convincingness of Sally's public success.

However, one who saw Anna Held a score of times takes issue with the designer of the costume Miss Bellamy wears. Its clumsiness would have been scorned by the French singer even when she first appeared in this country late in the nineties, when she no more disguised the daintiness of her figure then than Miss Bellamy should have done now. But this carping criticism does not lessen the triumph of the picture.

With the opening of "The Singing Fool" at the Winter Garden Wednesday night still another step was taken by Al Jolson in achieving overwhelming personal popularity and adding to the box office strength of Warner Brothers. The picture itself is the essence of commonplaceness in every respect but as it obviously was fabricated to exploit Al Jolson as a singer and chatterer it is unlikely that the public will find any fault with a two-hour

VON STERNBERG NO REALIST

Director Uses "Highbrow" Technique, Impressionistic Method, for Vivid Effects

"The man who makes highbrow pictures for lowbrows."

In some such manner has been described Josef von Sternberg, the quiet looking little man who directed "Docks of New York" now at the Metropolitan, Emil Jannings in "The Last Command," "Underworld" and "The Dragnet," all for Paramount.

The reason for this lies in the fact that Von Sternberg uses the tools of so-called "highbrowism," specifically the impressionistic method, to obtain the results he does.

Yet his pictures are not found to appeal more to the intellectuals who know what impressionism is or think they do, than to the masses. "Underworld" and "The Last Command" broke box-office records with as equal ease in the neighborhood theaters of Podunk and Oshkosh, and the smaller houses of New York's East Side, as in the big dressed-up showshops.

They all seem to be infused with vast amounts of power and dramatic action. They are astonishingly vivid pieces of filmcraft. They have been called examples of fine realism.

This last, Von Sternberg disclaims emphatically. He is not a realist, he says. "I try to translate for the screen the things seen into the things one feels he sees. That is impressionism.

"I have a friend who painted a picture of a little church in a poor district of Russia. It was a humble little building and its interior was worn and shabby. Yet my friend painted that church not in its drabness but as it would appear to a worshiper who felt in his soul it was a place of glorious beauty. People who had never seen this church came to my painter friend and told him how beautiful a likeness it was of something they had seen. Yet, it was not a likeness. It was rather their feeling for it translated to the screen.

"That's what I try to do with my pictures. I cannot record just what is seen. The feeling must be recorded. In 'Docks of New York' George Bancroft is a big, lusty sailor going on land after a long voyage for just one night and day. He wants to see life.

"Betty Compson is a woman who

An opening at the Carthay Circle, a Lon Chaney picture at Loew's, a George Bancroft melodrama at the Metropolitan, a new talkie at Warner Brothers and a farce comedy at the Boulevard—these are the high lights of the Motion-picture calendar of the coming seven days.

The Fox production of "Mother Knows Best," starring Madge Bellamy and based on the short story of Edna Ferber, arrives at the Carthay Circle Theater tomorrow evening amidst a blare of bright lights and the radio announcer's shouts.

"While the City Sleeps," an underworld drama, brings Lon Chaney to Loew's. Josef Von Sternberg's latest directorial effort, "Docks of New York," depicts George Bancroft and Betty Compson in a powerful story of water-front life.

The new talkie at Warner Brothers is "State Street Sadie," story of a Chicago flapper whose father, a police officer, is shot down. "Just Married," at the Boulevard, from the farce by Anne Nichols, presents James Hall and Ruth Taylor in opposite roles.

At the Shrine this week will be Pauline Frederick in the "Devil's Island." Other features include: "Godless Girl," Biltmore; "Hunting Big Game in Africa," Broadway Palace; "White Shadows in the South Seas," Grauman's Chinese; "Wings," Criterion; "Excess Baggage," Egyptian; "Tenth Avenue," Ritz; "Lights of New York, Tower; "Red Dance," Uptown, and Figueroa; "Battle of Sexes," United Artists.

Boulevard

"Just Married," Paramount picture, costarring Ruth Taylor and James Hall, is now showing at the Boulevard in connection with a new edition of the Boulevard Revue, with Jimmie Hodges, musical comedy star, Gwen Evans, "Red" Corcoran and line-up of chorus girls. "Just Married" first appeared in play form, where it ran for more than a year and a half in New York. Anne Nichols, who wrote "Abie's Irish Rose," is its author.

Biltmore

"The Godless Girl," now playing at the Biltmore Theater with two performances daily, was directed by Cecil B. De Mille from the story by Jeanie Macpherson, and filmed on one of the largest motion-picture stages ever constructed, 315 feet long, 142 feet wide, altogether about 44,000 square feet of floor space.

Broadway Palace

"Hunting Big Game in Africa" is the attraction current at the Broadway Palace Theater. Cameramen spent more than a year and a half in unexplored regions of Africa and with the aid of a small automobile ran the animals down to secure what are called phenomenal close-ups.

Carthay Circle

To the Carthay Circle tomorrow evening will come "Mother Knows Best," a Fox production of the Edna Ferber story starring Madge Bellamy. This is the story of an actress whose mother dominates her whole life, from her career to her love affair with a boy at the "front." Barry Norton plays the role of the boy while Louise Dresser is seen as the mother.

The picture has received unstinted praise in the East and Madge Bellamy is said to do some of the finest work of her career. The opening will be accompanied by the usual blare of lights and radio announcements with a brilliant array of picture personages in the first-night audience.

Chinese

"White Shadows in the South Seas," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's first sound picture, introduced by a spectacular Sid Grauman prologue, is entering its eighth week at Grauman's Chinese Theater. It stars Monte Blue with Raquel Torres. A Vitaphone drama, Movietone comedy and Fox Movietone News are included on the program.

Criterion

"Wings," Paramount's air picture, continues at the Criterion Theater. The production won much favorable comment during its previous showing, being heralded as the best drama of its kind ever filmed. The cast includes Charles Rogers, Richard Arlen, Gary Cooper, Clara Bow and Jobyna Ralston.

Egyptian

"Excess Baggage," William Haines's newest starring picture, is the feature screen attraction at Grauman's Egyptian Theater this week. The story deals with backstage life among vaudeville performers, and is an adaptation of the stage play of the same name. The cast includes Josephine Dunn, Ricardo Cortez and others.

Loew's State

"While the City Sleeps," a new underworld drama featuring Lon Chaney, is at Loew's State Theater. A cast including Anita Page, Mae Busch and Carrol Nye appears in support of the star. Jack Conway directed.

On the stage is the Fanchon and Marco revue, "Happy Idea," featuring Ted Doner with Bonny Thompson, Alene and Evans, and the Varsity Four.

Metropolitan

"Docks of New York," a thrilling story of the water front featuring George Bancroft and Baclanova, is the current attraction offered at the Metropolitan Theater. The production is another story of the underworld directed by Joseph Von Sternberg, and boasts Betty Compson as another member of the cast.

On the stage Henry Busse, former star of the Paul Whiteman Orchestra, leads the Publix Revue, "Flapperettes."

Ritz

Phyllis Haver has an underworld role in "Tenth Avenue," crook drama now showing at the Ritz Theater. Also on the program is Fox Movietone talking news, and Saturday night only a number of variety acts on the stage.

Shrine Auditorium

Pauline Frederick will be presented in "Devil's Island," a highly dramatic story from the pen of Leah Baird, at the Shrine Theater beginning today. It was directed by Frank O'Connor and includes a notable supporting cast. They are Marion Nixon, George Lewis, Richard Tucker, William Dunne, Harry Northrup and Leo White.

Laura La Plante will also be seen in a rollicking comedy, "Silk Stockings." This is one of her best comedies and from all reports she keeps the audience in a state of merriment.

C. Sharpe Minor, presenting his own original novelties at the organ, is providing a tremendous hit and the Shrine patrons look forward each evening to his little "get together," where they may raise their voices to the ceiling with the zooming of the mighty organ.

Tower

The first all-taking picture to show downtown is "Lights of New York," a Warner Brothers' talkie with Helene Costello, which opens at the Tower Theater tomorrow.

The cast includes Helene Costello, Cullen Landis, Gladys Brockwell, Mary Carr, Wheeler Oakman, Eugene Pallette, Robert Elliott, Tom Dugan, Tom McGuire, Guy D'Ennery, Walter Percival and Jere Delaney.

Some interesting Vitaphone presentations will be seen and heard in conjunction with the feature, according to Manager Michelstetter.

Uptown

Dolores Del Rio and Charles Farrell have their first roles together in "The Red Dance," which is screening this week at both the Uptown and Figueroa theaters. Miss Del Rio has the role of a Russian peasant and Farrell appears as a member of the aristocracy.

Two entertaining talking Vitaphone acts, and Fox Movietone talking news are featured on both programs and an added feature at the Uptown is Sam West and his West Coast Syncopators.

United Artists

"The Battle of the Sexes," D. W. Griffith's second personally directed production for United Artists, is at the United Artists' Theater. Telling a story of modern life and problems, the production boasts a cast headed by Jean Hersholt, Belle Bennett and Phyllis Haver. William Bakewell and Sally O'Neill appear in the juvenile roles. Short subjects and an overture will complete the new program.

Warners'

"State Street Sadie," another Warner Brothers' Vitaphone talking picture, opens an engagement for two weeks only at Warner Brothers' Theater tomorrow afternoon. Conrad Nagel heads the cast, which also includes Myrna Loy, William Russell, Georgia Stone and Pat Hartigan. Archie Mayo directed. The story is by Melville Crosman and scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr. "State Street Sadie" tells the story of a Chicago flapper, whose father, a police officer, has been murdered while trailing a bank robber. Larry Ceballos will offer another of his revues, "Gorgeous," with a brand-new cast of principals.

'MOTHER KNOWS BEST,' TRIUMPH

monologue by a favored artist and Mr. Jolson has the advantage of bringing to talking pictures precisely the same quality of showmanship and vocal advantage that he displays on the stage.

BETTY BRONSON LIKED

The odds are vastly in favor of the new picture. In fact, no odds exist. "The Singing Fool" is a natural. The reception given the entertainment was tremendous. The supporting players acquit themselves well in dialogue, this being especially true of Betty Bronson whose enunciation and vocal qualities reflect the delicate charm of her personality. Josephine Dunn has likewise made a favorable impression in her talking debut, while the artless prattle of the child, David Lee, seemed second only to the efforts of Mr. Jolson himself in stirring the hearts of listeners.

Another triumph even more personal was scored by Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor at the opening of "The Big Fight" Tuesday night, attended by more excitement than is usually seen in Broadway theaters. Despite naive and trite material, the critics have applauded its movement and climatic punch when Mr. Dempsey battles with his opponent. In fact he enjoys the unique distinction of being the only actor who by the mere stripping of his sweater can cause an ovation. The action of the couple has been praised by the more restrained reviewers because of its spontaneity and naturalness. Cautiously announced at first for but four weeks the piece now seems likely to run indefinitely.

WATER-FRONT STORIES

"The River Pirate" at the Roxy and "The Docks of New York" at the Paramount, have much in common so far as characters and locale are concerned but their treatment differs widely and each has proved highly popular. The former is thought to adhere more to conventions than the latter for it romanticizes the river and those who ply upon it, while the latter concerns itself more with stark realities and murky atmosyhere. Toward the end of the picture this is done at a sacrifice of interests for the proceedings drag and the characters play with the deliberation of Greek tragedy. But as a whole it is an impressive work in the opinion of the majority. Excellent performances are contributed by all the players in both films.

"The Camerman" at the Capitol in conjunction with a personal appearance of the juveniles of "Our Gang" has filled the theater to overflowing. Apparently either attraction would have done as much, but the combination has proved irresistible and in the opinion of those whose verdict finds its way into print, Mr. Keaton finds himself with his best picture in a long time. It is consistently amusing, skillful and active, and his unwitting participation in the tong war in Chinatown is one of the best sequences he has ever made, though it is a matter of regret to many that the name of his Simian coadjutor is kept secret, for the monkey's "acting" is of stellar importance.

OLD MELODRAMA

"The Whip" at the Strand has the advantage of a beautiful production and competent acting by a cast of favorites, but in the main it is a bit dull in spite of a wreck, a race and a spectacular hunt ball. For all its richness of investiture its origin is easily traceable to the old-fashioned melodrama which once held sway when the world was considerably younger.

Paul L. Stein is applauded for the brilliance of his direction in "Man Made Woman" at the Hippodrome, which should be the last house in the world to show such a distinguished work. Its lack of excitement is more than made up for by direction, acting and the exquisite taste of its settings, but these advantages are scarcely to be counted upon to impress audiences who are attracted to small-time vaudeville. Mr. Stein's work has been compared to that of Lubitsch and St. Clair, without the slyness of the former or the humor of the latter, but with a lightness, delicacy and originality that either might be proud of. In keeping with the spirit of the piece, it is no surprise to find gently skillful acting the rule with Leatrice Joy as blithe as a May morning and Seena Owen making her reappearance noteworthy with a graceful and distinguished performance.

MINOR ROLE FOOTSTOOL TO HEIGHTS

Leo Carrillo Scores Hit in Valet Role That Makes Him Star

Leo Carrillo's career parallels that of the late Richard Mansfield. Both studied painting before they went on the stage. Both turned a minor role into the most prominent character in a play, winning such success that stardom followed. Carrillo, moreover, was called "The Mansfield of today" when he appeared in Booth Tarkington's "Magnolia" in New York a few seasons ago. To make the resemblance in their careers still stronger, one of Carrillo's greatest successes was as "Beau Brummel" in the Clyde Fitch play which made Mansfield a star.

When "A Parisian Romance" first was staged, Mansfield was given the comparatively—or so the management thought—unimportant role of Baron Chevrial. He made his characterization of the aged roue so striking that he scored the hit of the piece and the next season he was elevated to stardom. After Carrillo had played a season as the Italian in "Twin Beds," he was sent for by a theatrical manager who offered him the leading role in "Upstairs and Down," the comedy by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Carrillo took the play home, read it that night and returned it the following day. "I don't want to play the lead," he said, "but I should like the role of the valet."

"But that's a comparatively minor part," protested the manager.

"I don't care," answered the actor, "I'd be satisfied to play it."

Current Drama

The stage calendar for the week offers considerably more excitement for the theater than has prevailed in Los Angeles in some months. Three plays will open between today and Tuesday.

First will be "The Shannons of Broadway," Broadway comedy of last season relating the trials of a vaudeville couple who try to run a small-town hotel. It opens with today's matinee at the El Capitan and with Mrs. James Gleason in her original role.

Next comes "The Squall," a torrid drama of a fugitive gypsy girl, also from the New York stage of last season, and to be seen in Los Angeles beginning tonight on the Belasco stage. Dorothy Burgess, Bertha Mann, Frederic Burt and Charles Brokaw are in the cast.

On Tuesday then will arrive Dixie McCoy's first production at the Hollywood Music Box, the drama, "Tarnish," by Gilbert Emery with Virginia Valli, Albert Gran and Barton Hepburn in the leads.

Other offerings of the week are "Lombardi, Ltd.," Hollywood Playhouse; "Happy Days," Mayan; "The Desert Song," Majestic; "Wooden Kimono," President; "The Devil's Disciple," Pasadena Playhouse; "Arms and the Man," Vine Street; Joseph Regan, Orpheum; Frank Keenan, Hillstreet, and Jack Holt and Betty Compson in "Court Martial" at the Pantages.

Belasco

"The Squall," hailed as one of the most daring plays of the past theatrical season in New York City, will tonight open at the Belasco Theater for a limited engagement.

The cast will be headed by Dorothy Burgess, who scored an emphatic success as Nubi, the gypsy homewrecker, in the same play in the East; Bertha Mann, seen last in Los Angeles in "The Devil's Plum Tree;" Frederic Burt and Charles Brokaw have the two leading masculine roles.

The story of "The Squall" has to do with a fugitive gypsy girl, sheltered from the wrath of her brutal mate, devastates the household of her benefactors with her wiles and witcheries.

El Capitan

"The Shannons of Broadway" is a play about actors, but not about theatrical life, says Lucile Gleason, who will play her original role of Emma Shannon in the Broadway comedy hit with the Henry Duffy Players at the El Capitan, starting with the matinee today.

James Gleason, who wrote "Is Zat So," "The Fall Guy" and who has just completed "Mr. Bones" for Al Jolson, wrote "The Shannons of Broadway" for his wife. They co-starred in the comedy throughout its thirty-five weeks' run at the Martin Beck Theater in New York last season.

Hollywood Playhouse

Carrillo asserts that "Lombardi, Ltd.," now playing at the Hollywood Playhouse, contains a fine lesson for theatergoers. "It teaches the value of cheerfulness and of belief that the world is a good place to live in," says the star. "Tito gets a terrific bump that almost destroys his love of others, but he recovers in time and the result is that the reward is waiting for him. Although I have played Tito several thousand times, it still is my favorite stage character."

Mayan

At the Mayan Theater is "Happy Days," described as a "whirlie-girlie" show. The music is by Leo Flanders, while the book is credited to Max Dill, C. D. McGettigan and Harrington Reynolds. In the cast are May Boley, last seen here in "Hit the Deck;" Harrington Reynolds, Fields and Johnston, Ruth Golden, Don Carroll, Buddy Wattles, Virginia Cleary, Richard Cramer and others. The scenes of "Happy Days" are laid at Pebble Beach.

Music Box

Dixie McCoy's production of the New York success, "Tarnish," opens Tuesday evening at the Hollywood Music Box. The drama was written by Gilbert Emery, author of "The Hero," and other dramas popular in both London and New York.

The cast is headed by Albert Gran and Virginia Valli, both popular screen stars. Others in the cast are Pauline Garon, Barton Hepburn, Fan Bourke, Maude Turner Gordon, Mattie Edwards and Duane Thompson.

Majestic

Lillian Albertson's production of "The Desert Song," which has broken every known record for Los Angeles, at least as far as musical plays are concerned, goes into its fortieth week at the Majestic. It is now in its concluding weeks and will then start on an extended tour of the country. It is a noteworthy fact that during this entire time the cast has remained identically the same with Perry Askam, Johnny Arthur and Tanzi, still heading the company of 100, which includes the male chorus that has attracted widespread favorable comment.

President

"It is necessary for any mystery play to have a certain amount of comedy," asserts Helen Keers, who plays the comic and terrified Aggie in "The Wooden Kimono," which the Henry Duffy Players are presenting at the President. "If it didn't the tension would be too much for an audience. There is a certain chill and fascination about a mystery play, but if the tension is prolonged too much the audience gets almost hysterical. A good laugh in the right place relieves the tension."

Pasadena Community Playhouse

"The Devil's Disciple," a George Bernard Shaw tirade against Puritanism, is at the Pasadena Community Playhouse. Irving Pichel, last seen as Lazarus in "Lazarus Laughed," leads the cast which numbers as well Ralph Freud, Helen Hardison, Samuel Hinds and others.

Vine-street

A production of Bernard Shaw's comedy, "Arms and the Man," is at the Vine-street. Edward Everett Horton, of course, appears, while Florence Eldridge, who starred in the Theater Guild production of this play, is to be seen as Raina.

Orpheum

Joseph Regan, young Irish-American tenor, will hold over a second week at the Orpheum on the program beginning today. Other features of the new bill will be Arthur Byron, stage star with his wife and two daughters in "A Family Affair," and Ralph Olsen and Sue St. John in dance specialties. Harry Norwood and Alpha Hall, Raymond and Wells, Al Abbott, Fantino Sisters and Percival Potter complete the program.

Hillstreet

Frank Keenan, stage and screen star, headlines the Hillstreet Theater program for the week starting today, appearing in "The Second Performance," a playlet. Other Keith-Albee-Orpheum stage attractions scheduled include the Music Art Revue, Jay Velie, Franklin D'Armore and Company, Charlie Wilson and The College Flirt.

Pathe's "Love Over Night," a comedy romance with Rod La Rocque, Jeanette Loff, Tom Kennedy and Mary Carr, will be the screen feature. Edward H. Griffith directed.

Pantages

"Court-martial," co-starring Jack Holt and Betty Compson, is billed as a special attraction on the new bill opening tomorrow at the Pantages Theater. Difficult feats of horsemanship by the stars are of particular note in the feature.

In addition to the stars the cast includes Pat Harmon, Doris Hill, Frank Lackteen, Frank Austin, George Cowl and Zack Williams.

Six acts of Pantages vaudeville will be seen on the stage.

Players Make Up Comedy to Fan's Delight

This week is "Extemporaneous Week," at the Burbank Theater, Sixth and Main streets.

In other words, instead of going by the lines in a script the favorites will indulge in "making up" their gags as they go along.

It all started last week, when, after the show had been decided upon, two or three dozen of funny gags were suggested, and presented "on the spot" much to the delight and satisfaction of Burbank patrons, who are said to have found more than the usual amount of laugh-provoking material than heretofore.

Lee "Bud" Harrison led the honors last week for sudden and unexpected laughs with Bob Greer a close second and the Burbank Quartet third.

With George Clark, Ruby Darby, Parker Gee, and the others of the cast conspiring with Claude Kennedy and his recording orchestra for amusing ideas, this week's bill should go over the top, it is said.

Ten beauties were added yesterday to the Burbank chorus, which will also, this week, deviate from routine, and do their own stuff.

Follies Books Feature Bill

"Night Club Girls," which starts today at the Follies, is a fascinating burlesque and one which is bound to meet with the approval of theatergoers. The comedy element will be provided by Chic Barkham and Max Coleman, dialect comedians.

Billie O'Neill, who is a "bundle of pep," will introduce a live-wire number and Soubrettes Hazel Miller and Miss Wagner will feature two brand new song and dance specialties. The forty young ladies of the chorus have been specially trained to execute a cycle of ensemble numbers said to be of metropolitan magnitude.

MILESTON TO DIRECT

Lewis Mileston, director of "The Racket," is to direct a production for Paramount. The title or subject has not yet been announced.

BROMFIELD PROBES RELIGION

Story of Annie Spragg, Daughter of Religious Faker, Reveals Basic Likeness of Two Seemingly Widely Divergent Passions

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

THE STRANGE CASE OF MISS ANNIE SPRAGG. By Louis Bromfield. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York.

Louis Bromfield dubs his new novel "a holiday in Italian baroque." It is as the publishers say, a probing into the twin mysteries of love and religion and the confusion that lies between.

In the beginning was the prophet, Cyrus Spragg, who in the covered-wagon era set himself up as an itinerant preacher. Finding that he had the power to draw a following, especially among women, he founded a cult. He was a charlatan, a rogue and a sensualist, but he had a power that few women could resist.

From him sprang Uriah Spragg and Annie. Uriah realized all the evil of his father's life and thought by living austerely to atone for it and keep himself and his young sister safe. But Annie proved to have some of that disturbing attraction that had set her father apart. Of this came tragedy, with Annie left broken and half insane, to take refuge in Italy.

In order to tell his story and point his moral Bromfield moves from Italy to Illinois and Iowa and then back, with divagations in London and Brighton.

He begins with an account of the interest in the death of Annie Spragg, who had for years lived in Italy and had wandered here and there, always dressed in a shabby black dress that dragged the dust, a ruin of a picture hat, a heavy veil, and with white gloves on her hands. After death scars on her hands and body led an overwrought nun and some excitable poor folk to believe Annie a candidate for sainthood.

In due time Bromfield works back to the story of Annie's father. But before he has told this story he leaves it for Italy and a certain fascinating priest and an equally fascinating princess. From this he goes back to the American prairie and gives the Spraggs another turn.

The trouble is that Bromfield is trying to tie too many ends together, to make connections that are not inherent in the characters or the events, to bring too many people at one time across his bridge of passion and religion.

So, though there is good character presentation here, there is no satisfactory story. The imagination is stirred, the interest is aroused, but the reader is baffled and annoyed by the method or lack of method adopted. Of course one is aware that there is a philosophy of life presented, however, ironically, and that there is much between the lines. But that is not enough. In a novel we want a story, not eight or ten, and we want to know whose story it is. Thornton Wilder did this sort of thing successfully in "The Bridge of San Luis Rey," but his device was so clever that it worked.

Bromfield in his first novel, "The Green Bay Tree," did his best work. As he grows more fashionably cynical he gets farther away from the intensity and reality and drama of life, which he so ably caught in his earlier work, which includes "Possession."

HERITAGE. By Rose C. Feld. Alfred A. Knopf. New York.

This first novel is a well-written chronicle of the lives of three generations of Wetherbys, who lived their narrow lives on a bleak New Hampshire farm.

First there was Joel, who in his youth had thought to escape beyond the mountains, but who had married Sarah, which meant settling down on the farm. At 50, we are told, Joel was a tired old man waiting for the release of death. Sarah, only five years younger, stood as straight and erect as the day she was a bride.

Joel's son Ernest would have left the farm when he married Rachel, the daughter of French settlers. But he was told that when Joel died the farm would be his. So he stayed on, and Rachel put up with the hardness and ugliness of her life in Sarah's house. After Joel's death the farm became not Ernest's but Sarah's. Here the indomitable, hard-spirited, hateful old woman made every one miserable.

Very ably the author pictures the grilling, heart-breaking life, hard enough without Sarah's cruel dominance. Into it was drawn at length Ernest's son, Lucian, and his young wife, until four generations lived and hated in the unhappy house.

The character development is well portrayed, with Rachel growing wise and mellow; Sarah, vain and crafty; Ernest, weak and discouraged; and Lucian learning to accept the results of his own acts.

A LITTLE CLOWN LOST. By Barry Benefield. The Century Company, New York.

Barry Benefield in his first novel, "The Chicken Wagon Family," adopted the whimsical, sentimental, amusing when not grotesque style of story. In his second book, "Bugles in the Night," he continued in the same strain. Now in "A Little Clown Lost" we have another tale that appeals to grown-up children.

Here we have the dreamy-eyed, good-as-gold Phoebe Dibble, who innocently worms herself into the life of Shep Tideboy, upright orphan who lives alone on his run-down Louisiana plantation. When Shep's guardian, accompanied by the Sheriff, comes to compel Shep to go to school, the boy and girl run away together and marry.

Then Shep develops an altogether surprising love of learning.

THE MURDER OF MRS. DAVENPORT. By Anthony Gilbert. Lincoln MacVeigh, the Dial Press, New York.

Here is a new mystery story with a mystery author, who hides himself under a fictitious name. Like our Willard Huntington Wright, this author considers it not quite up to his own high standard to write detective fiction. Probably, if success rewards his efforts, he will, like Wright, come out in the open later. With "The Canary Murder Case" and the other Philo Vance stories selling by the hundreds, Wright has proved that mystery pays better than criticism or art.

Helena Davenport was a handsome woman with a past. When she was found strangled in her own apartment half a dozen suspects might have been unearthed. But investigation showed a clear trail to the scientist, Sir Denis Brinsley. When Sir Denis was arrested and refused to answer certain important questions, it looked bad.

But Scott Egerton, Member of Parliament, saw that the trail leading to his friend, Sir Denis, was too perfect and, by hook and crook, he discovered the facts that enabled him to piece together the true story of the crime.

It's well plotted and well rounded. Who wrote it?

WILL O' THE WISP. By Patricia Wentworth. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

This is another of the popular "Now You See it and Now You Don't See it" order of tales, but it arouses the jaded interest of readers by wearing its mystery with a difference and letting professional detectives severely alone.

David Angus St. Kenn Fordyce, a young English architect, while traveling in the Antipodes, met a young girl whose father had suddenly died and left her without means of getting to London, where her only relative, an aunt, named Nelly Smith, was living. David was at the time newly "crossed in love," and in a particularly reckless mood. Also he deeply pitied the 16-year-old Erica Moore, who, even if she succeeded in reaching London, might never find her aunt with the undistinctive name, so as one way out of the muddle David married Erica and sailed with her for England.

The vessel on which the pair embarked went to bits in a gale when ten days out from Melbourne. Erica, with the other women, was placed in the first boat to be launched from the sinking ship, while David followed in a later one. The first boat never reached land, and David, after lingering in Cape Town for months in hopes of hearing from it, left his address with a well-known solicitor and returned to England.

For two years he had no news, and then he found in his daily newspaper a notice with no appended address or other means of identification, which read: "David A. St. K.: Your wife is living." When the notice appeared a second and third time, David placed his announcement in the same column which stated that "Anyone giving information with regard to Erica Moore will be rewarded," and added his office address. Of the coil in which this advertisement involved him, how David managed to unwind it, and what he found at its end the novel interestingly tells.

DOSTOEVSKY FROM WOODCUT BY MABEL PUGH

DOSTOEVSKY'S WORK EVALUATED

German Writer Invades New Field With Critical Review of Life and Craft of Great Russian Novelist

REVIEWED BY ARTHUR MILLIER

DOSTOEVSKY. The Man and His Work. By Julius Meier-Graefe. Translated by Robert H. Marks. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

Julius Meier-Graefe, who has hitherto written only critical studies of painters, invades a new field with "Dostoevsky." Scarcely a work that the general reader will enjoy, its modern-painter style of building up by means of a thousand little touches put on at random will prove disconcerting to many. But it marks a mile-post in Dostoevsky appreciation.

The life and work of this epileptic Russian of the nineteenth century, described by Brandes in his letter to Nietzsche, as "a great poet but an altogether detestable fellow, altogether Christian in his emotions, and quite 'sadique' at the same time," are treated as indivisible. To be sure he makes a hero of him, but decidedly he understands him better than earlier critics, because he is legitimately in that line of self-torturing evangelists beloved of this German, who so well understood Vincent Van Gogh, and, we can only surmise from many hints, will some day give us a more sympathetic study of Rembrandt than is now available.

Sensitized by harsh experiences and poverty, Dostoevsky became the poet of the "feelings." In those wildly moving novels, superficially of the detective breed, only the feelings matter. Love of Russia, a belief that western "clockwork" civilization had no value for his people, and faith in the "Russian Christ," necessitated by his axiom that "each is guilty for all," these leading ideas motivate all his tales. Perhaps the most signal service of Meier-Graefe's study is to trace the development of his essential ideas, the evolution of characters, which, in the earlier works are often comic and unreal, into the unsurpassed human beings of "The Idiot" and "The Brothers Karamazov."

UNFAVORABLY COMPARED

Dostoevsky always thought of himself as the journalist, and hence many critics have maintained that he produced journalism and not art. They compared him unfavorably with the agate-worded Flaubert, even with the polished, Westernized Turgenev. But "that is how he always set about, went to small folk, looked at them, revealed them and whispered thoughts and feelings to them."

So the German sums him up, with that enthusiasm that gives life to his book. Schiller was his youthful inspiration and all of Dostoevsky seems to have formed young. His life and work is a development of these Schilleresque themes. Even prison and army life could not kill the sweet-voiced singer who won Russia with the music of poverty in "Poor Folk." That Christian and sinner were one in the man is proved by his treatment of his unfaithful first wife. More, the idea that Dostoevsky was an essentially unhappy or gloomy man is refuted. But how could such a man, whatever he might suffer, be anything but happy in such a dramatically illuminated world?

SUCCESS TURNS HEAD

Who does not know those early self-portraits of Rembrandt; vain, overdressed, extravagantly gesturing. An unbearable fellow. That was the young Dostoevsky of "Poor Folks." Run after in society, squandering his new-made money, his head quite turned. No, not quite turned, perhaps, because here came "The Double," the first bitter taste of that obscure world of impotent brooding that was to blossom many years later in "Letters From the Underworld."

A few ideas but they could only be expressed at the right time. "I am a sick man, I am a vile man!" So begins that intolerable monologue, and surely the author who cannot create as he wishes is also speaking.

Intoxicated with success and then to be completely humiliated and forced into close contact with mire. How to escape from the mire? How to be a "human being" and not "a louse?" That was Raskolnikov's problem in "Crime and Punishment," on which he erected his fantastic "superman" murder and finally went off to Siberia, wearing, but not embracing, the cross.

After "Crime and Punishment" Dostoevsky's sketch-books, and sometimes, Meier-Graefe shows us, his hasty, inferior novels were nothing but sketch books for greater works—reveal him vacillating between the "great sinner" hero and the "Christ-man" hero. In "The Idiot," last book but one, and incomparably greater than any that preceded it, Christ triumphs. Yet his sketches show he intended the Idiot to be a sinner. There is no sin in this Prince Myshkin, only ill health, and so while he is not "the positive hero," he remains one of the author's greatest figures.

But in "The Brothers Karamazov," final and most complete statement of all Dostoevsky's fluid ideas, man himself triumphs. In this terrific struggle of a father and four sons it is Dmitri who wins us as he won his author. Whatever his original intention we are gripped by the father and this son. Old man Karamazov, sensualist, but vital to the core. The son, "a man in every fibre of his being, in good and in evil." Here at last is the "positive hero" and he is simply man. Alyosha, the Christman, resumes his time-old role of mediator.

To Meier-Graefe, Dostoevsky is the special spokesman to our century. Where others have given us art or realism he has spoken and revealed life. Now, when castes break down, when man leaves behind that world of hardy noblemen and clowns that Shakespeare knew, this man reveals again the surprises of the human soul, made now of more delicate and doubtful stuff.

Here you are, gentlemen! And in

Gossip of the Book World

"Fat Cats" flourish in American politics, according to Frank R. Kent in "Political Behavior" (Morrow.) He defines a "Fat Cat" as a man who, having reached middle age and achieved success in finance or business, yearns for public honor and prestige. Among the most notable "Fat Cats" are Andrew W. Mellon and Senator T. Coleman Du Pont, according to Kent.

On the 28th of September, in the twenty-eighth year of this century, Joseph C. Lincoln's twenty-eighth work of fiction will be published. This surprising coincidence, Mr. Lincoln's publishers, Appleton, insist is not intentional, but in the words of Brother Juniper is "an act of God." "Silas Bradford's Boy" is the title of Mr. Lincoln's new novel.

"Brief Candle," by Norman Venner, pictures Oliver Honey, cynical, hard, embittered by the war, who learns he has six months to live, and continues to thumb his nose at life. The novel is concerned only with these six months, and moves swiftly and artistically to a satisfying climax. (Bobbs-Merrill.)

Heading the list of nonfiction best sellers (as compiled by R. R. Bowker) is Maurois's biography of Disraeli, seven months after publication. As Laurence Stallings remarked: "'Disraeli' is not only a book of a month. It is a work to go on the shelf in the library where old books are kept, where the ones are stored that are withdrawn from time to time, to be read again and pondered over."

"Youth's Last Stand," by Percy Marks, which is his first college novel since the sensational "The Plastic Age," begins in College Humor for October. It is the story of a college boy who went to school determined not to be "collegiate" and to secure the utmost in education without letting his efforts be dissipated on rah-rah activities.

"Lad," the collie, is one of the most loved characters in America. Actually millions of readers, young and old, know and love this remarkable dog. His master, Albert Payson Terhune, is writing about him again, and for the Red Book exclusively. There can and will be no more popular feature to dog lovers than "The Whisperer," a new story of Lad in the Red Book Magazine for October.

"Why have you never tried free verse," an admirer of "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, Jr.," and "Nautical Lays of a Landsman" asked Wallace Irwin recently. "Why should I?" replied Irwin with the admirable and direct logic of Hashimura Togo. "The only difference between modern verse and modern prose is in the typesetting." Whereupon he took part of Chapter XXXVII in his new novel, "Lew Tyler and the Ladies," and cut off the lines into the form of vers libre.

The many secret episodes entered on the Goncourt brothers' diary which has lain entombed for thirty years, owing to the provisions of the Goncourts' will, are now revealed for the first time in "Zola and His Time," by Matthew Josephson, which is being published by the Macauley Company. For forty years the Goncourts, who were in the center of French literary and political life, wrote this immense journal, which contained the memoirs of all the celebrities of Europe between 1855 and 1895. Suits have been brought against the executors of their will by relatives of prominent people mentioned therein, so that these secret memoirs might be published. Few living people have seen these hidden volumes of the Goncourt memoirs and among them Matthew Josephson, who now gives their significant details in "Zola and His Time."

IS CIVILIZATION MENACED

Writer Says That Mechanical Skill in [illegible] of Destruction Outruns Moral [illegible] Threatens World Chaos

BY THOMAS F. FORD

THE DAY AFTER TOMORROW. What is Going to Happen in the World. By Philip Gibbs. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.

Man's advance in science and genius in mechanics has carried him to dazzling heights of achievement. Progress along these lines is going forward with the speed of the winds. But man seems to be backward as ever in moral and intellectual progress. If he continues, thinks Philip Gibbs, before long our material civilization will destroy mankind.

What, Gibbs asks, will it profit man if he conquer the whole world of material things, discover the source of all vital energy and devise means for its utilization, if, after the means are devised, he turns them to destructive ends? It is the fear that we are on the verge of such a development, with its resultant debacle, that inspires men like Gibbs to speak out with words of warning as to what the future may have in store for a materially rich but morally bankrupt world.

Man has conquered the air. The "central blue" becomes a limitless ocean for his "argosies of magic sails" as it also becomes a means whereby one of these lone argonauts may be capable of dropping a giant engine of destruction upon a city and either by earth-rocking explosive force level it in ruins, or by some deadly vapor snuff out the life of every living thing within its confines.

Tennyson long ago foresaw this aerial development and its dangers when in his poem "Locksley Hall" he said:

"Saw the heavens filled with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nation's airy navies grappling in the central blue.
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales."

Statisticians and economists tell us that the supplies of fuel for power-producing purposes, such as coal and petroleum, are rapidly nearing exhaustion. It is this that has spurred the scientist to make prodigious efforts to discover new sources of power. [illegible] of color, their strong sense of the "personality" of the place depicted. Certainly he has succeeded here.

The large cafe scene, reproduced here, has this truthful feel to it also, and so has the amusing double portrait of a French cafe proprietor and his wife.

But more than anywhere, the real Douglas crops out in the water colors. These are spontaneous, lyrical and whimsical, and are less restrained by the French tendency to work in grays. They show a charming outlook on life and are rich in color.

As for the eroticism that so troubled Fred Hogue, it resolves itself into one female with, and one without, underwear. Dostoevsky said he never saw an ugly woman, Walt Whitman said something the same, and Rembrandt seemed to enjoy painting them. Personally I prefer all those artists' ugly women to Mr. Douglas's variety, in fact I don't believe in his women at all, don't think he is remotely interested in them except as subjects for a design.

That is my quarrel with "modernism" as doctrine. It has set up a new academy as rigid as the old ones and its corner-stone is called "significant form," the invention of an English art critic. If an artist, chasing this myth to Paris or elsewhere, succeeds in revealing to us something of the beauty of life, then it is as good a horse to ride as any other. In the water colors and some of the smaller canvases I think Mr. Douglas has done this and we can be thankful and enjoy them without bothering our heads about his division of art into modern and academic.

COUNTY FAIR PRIZES

$500 Awarded Artists for Works Shown at Pomona

The art exhibits that are now such an important and welcome feature of every fair are visited, during their short annual duration, by tens of thousands of people, many of whom never see another art exhibit for a year. And they enjoy these exhibits, discuss the pictures, form their own conclusions about what is and is not art. That is the best possible course in art appreciation, because there is a kind of art for everybody and each seeks out his own. This is the last day to see the Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona, which boasts a permanent building for the arts.

Prizes at the fair were awarded as follows: Oil paintings, Millard Sheets, "The Gypsy Camp," first prize, $100; Stewart Robertson, "Romance," second prize, $30; Edith P. Truesdell, "Mother Earth," third prize, $20.

Sculpture: Humberto Pedretti, "Ecce Homo," first prize, $100; Harold Swartz, "Seated Woman," second prize, $30; S. D. Oliver, "Moon Goddess," third prize, $20.

Water colors and pastels: Karl Yens, "Enchantment," first prize, $100; Max Wieczorek, "The Green Shawl," second prize, $30; Barse Miller, "Lucky Day," third prize, $20.

Miniatures: Gertrude L. Little, "Lilies," first prize, $30; Ella Shepard Bush, "Porcelain, Lacquer and Patina," second prize, $20.

Honorable mentions in painting were awarded Joseph Kleitsch, Ernest Browning Smith, Luvena B. Vysekal and George Brandriff; in sculpture to Frederico Giorgi, Jason Herron, Frederick P. Humphrey and Henry Lion; for water colors and pastels to Hope M. Bryson, Julian E. Garnsey, Robert Hallowell and Irene B. Robinson; for miniatures to Emma Siboni, Sarah E. Traux and Clare Shepard Sisler.

COLLECTORS BUY

Among Los Angeles collectors who have purchased paintings by Dedrick Brandes Stuber from his exhibition at the Wilshire Galleries this month are Mr. Willits J. Hole, Mrs. W. H. Fisher and Mr. John Law.

News of the Art World

The acquisition of the fine Rembrandt, variously known as "A Man in a Fur Cap" or "An Elderly Jew in a Fur Cap," by Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Keeler of Los Angeles, a piece of news published here during the week, has twofold interest. It acquaints Los Angeles people with the presence here of the Keeler collection of fine American paintings, which has been forming quietly over a period of years, and holds out the hope that more of our wealthy people will follow this example and bring to our city such fine works by great masters.

A great painting has imperishable value as long as pigment and wood or canvas hold together. Great works have an affinity for each other. They shine best in good company. We need fine collections of masterpieces that have withstood the acid test of time-judgment just as much as we need contemporary art or collections of more modest works. It is obvious, even from a photograph, that the Keeler picture has great power and distinction, though it is only a small work. It is in just such heads, however, that Rembrandt reached some of his greatest heights. The city, the owners, and the Newhouse Galleries who sold the picture are to be congratulated on this transaction.

Phelan Exhibit

Honorable mentions in the figure composition exhibit at the Bohemian Club, San Francisco, were given to Herman Struck, E. Sievert Weinberg, Everett Gee Jackson, Douglass Parshall and R. J. Prohaska.

Pennsylvania Annuals

The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts announces its twenty-sixth annual water color exhibition from November 4 to December 9, next. The Pennsylvania Society of Miniature Painters will hold their annual at the same time.

Fountain for La Jolla

Merrell Gage has just completed a charming wall fountain for the children's patio of the La Jolla Public Library. A little girl sits on a rock holding an open book. Behind her is a eucalyptus bough.

Famous Six Collection

Fifty works by artists of the Holland School of the seventeenth century, including water colors, drawings and etchings by Rembrandt, will go under the hammer at the galleries of Messrs. Frederick Muller & Co. in Amsterdam October 16. All of these works are from the famous Six collection, long one of Holland's most prized treasures. Prof. Jan Six, who died in 1927, was the last owner of a collection that had remained in the Six family since the time of Rembrandt. Among the painters represented are Jan Van Der Heyde, Meindert Hobbema, Pieter De Hoogh, Jacob Jordaens, Nicholas Maes, Cornelius De Man, Aert Van Der Neer, Jacob Ochtervelt, Adriaen Van Ostade, Paulus Potter, Jacob Ruysdael, Jan Steen and Gerard Terborch.

Emperor's Carpet Sold

The "Emperor's Carpet," given by Peter the Great of Russia to Leopold I of Austria, was sold recently at auction at Christie's, London, to the International Art Galleries, New York, for $112,500.

"Damozel" in Sculpture

"The Blessed Damozel," a sculpture figure by Nana Bryant of Boston, illustrating Rosetti's poem, is being widely praised for the exquisite beauty of the design.

War Memorial Resented

The new war memorial at Bolzano, Italy, on Austria's frontier, has stirred anti-Italian feeling because of its fascismo symbols and boastful pro-Roman inscriptions. Mussolini's name is prominent on the pediment.

Washington on Pine Panel

A portait of Washington painted by Stuart on a pine panel has been acquired by the Albright Museum, Buffalo. It has been in the possession of an old Philadelphia family.

COUNTY FAIR ART

The Los Angeles County Fair art exhibition opens Tuesday until the 23rd inst., inclusive, in the art building of the fair grounds at Pomona. Last year over 127,000 people visited the art galleries. Five hundred dollars in prizes will be awarded works of art. Paintings, sculpture, miniatures, prints and art-craft objects will be displayed. Theodore B. Modra is director and Millard Sheets, assistant director.

An Old Man With a Fur Cap"

FOUR ARTISTS OF LAGUNA

Their Works Are Current Attraction at State Building in Exposition Park

BY HARRIET H. BARRY

The gallery of the State Exposition Building at Exposition Park, which is dedicated to the use of the California artist, has for the month of September an exhibition of the works of four of the leading artists of Laguna Beach—George K. Brandriff, Thomas L. Hunt, Clarence K. Hinkle and William Griffith. It is a satisfying exhibition, for these painters form a congenial group. Each expresses beauty, but each has his individual method of expression and sincerity rules all alike. The showing is colorful and striking and should prove interesting to the casual observer as well as the confirmed "art fan."

George Brandriff, a comparatively newcomer, has developed his art in the West. While we cannot call him a mature artist, his work has strength and dignity and is most beautiful to look at. He shows twelve marines and landscapes, and of these the one entitled "New Church at Laguna" is perhaps the best, as it shows fine arrangement of the masses and strong color planning. "Evening Glow, Lake George" is a study of the quiet mood of a mountain lake, reflecting the towering peaks which we do not see. "Spring Freshet," a stream rushing from verdure-clad hills is especially satisfying and well handled. In fact, Mr. Brandriff is at his best when he paints in a low key, although some which are done in high key, such as "Tioga Pass' 'are equally strong. "Tioga Pass" shows a fine rendering of light on snow as well as beautiful perspective. He expresses wonderful things with his cloud masses, which hover darkly over the ocean or rush forward in the fresh winds.

Thomas L. Hunt tells his story in a different way. We feel in his pictures the sparkle and tang which bring to us the life of the sea, for Mr. Hunt is an interpreter of beach scenes and fishing boats. These paintings vibrate with light effects produced by means of broken color. They are decorative, and in several of them a pleasing effect is gained by an absence of aerial perspective. "In the Harbor," showing a single sail against a background of fishing smacks, gives a fine treatment of reflections in quiet water. "Incoming Tide" shows waters seething over a rocky coast. "Still Life" is a brilliant decorative color study. "Early Morning' 'and "After Rain" give us other phases of sea and sky worked out in glowing color and strong composition. Mr. Hunt's paintings will delight the observer who loves the vigor and sparkle produced by the use of pure color.

Clarence Hinkle needs no introduction to the art-loving public. He is the most modern of this group, and does not paint at all times in the same mood. He likes to spring little surprises. His showing includes both landscape and figure studies, and combinations of both. One, especially pleasing to me, shows a woman's figure in a leafy arbor and is full of the warm haze of the summer afternoon. A portrait, "Julie Raymond," is quite a contrast to this, for it is clear cut and reveals the positive and interesting character of the sitter. This is also true of a portrait of William Griffith. "The Treat" is more loosely handled but gives an unusually pleasing arrangement. "On the Farm" is a composition consisting of a number of rotund porkers lit with a rosy glow of inspiration. There is also a somber and indistinct study of a man's face and figure which has a strange fascination and which one is sure to go back to at least a second time.

William Griffith's pastels show a joyous mood in which he gives us the freshness and vigor of the sea, the bloom of orchards in spring time, the varying moods of the desert and the golden glow of autumn. "From El Toro Grade" is a study of spring greens and "Spring and Banning," a delicate thing to delight the nature lover. "Eucalypti in Autumn" shows more strength but does not lose in fine treatment. "Mt. Morino," especially good in color, and "The Smoke Trees," vibrating with desert light, are in contrast with the first mentioned pictures. Two of "Diver's Cave" are full of action, both of the air and waves and of the beach life of groups of holiday makers. There is a good handling of the medium, and a style that is spontaneous and sincere.

THREE GIANTS TAKE NATURE AS GUIDE

"In my judgment that is the excellent and divine painting which is most like and best imitates any work of immortal God, whether a human figure, or a wild and strange animal, or a simple and easy fish, or a bird of the air, or any other creature. . . . To imitate each of these things in its species seems to me to be nothing else but to desire to imitate the work of immortal God. And yet that thing will be the most noble and perfect in the works of painting which in itself reproduced the thing which is most noble and of the greatest delicacy and knowledge." MICHELANGELO.

"Life in Nature proves the truth of these things; therefore consider her diligently, guide thyself by her, and swerve not from Nature, thinking that thou canst find something better of thyself, for thou wilt be deceived. For Art standeth firmly fixed in Nature, and whoso can thence rend her forth, he only possesseth her."

ALBRECHT DURER.

"The eye, which is called the window of the soul, is the chief means whereby the understanding may most fully and abundantly appreciate the infinite works of nature. . . . All visible things derive their existence from Nature, and from these same things is born painting."

LEONARDO DA VINCI.

AN ANTI-EUCALYPTUS LETTER

Painter Claims Ancient Distinction Between Creative Art and Imitation; Says "Eucalyptus School" Ignorant of Art Principles

The division of art into creative and "harmless" may indeed be a recent invention. But the distinction between creative art and imitation dates at least as far back as the second Han Dynasty, about the beginning of the Christian era. Bas reliefs of this time were very evidently done by artisans who worked from paintings of creative artists. Early Assyrian artists "borrowed" freely from the Chaldeans. With Phidias and his followers who imitated and perfected outward form, Greek art became superficial and decadent. In adopting the art of China, Japan adopted Chinese methods, rather than spirit and principles. The Mayans blended Chinese and Egyptian art. The Romans copied the decadent Greeks. Under the old apprentice system in vogue among European old masters, the student became so adept an imitator of his master that in many cases it is almost impossible even now to tell the work of the master from that of the student. Not only this, but the work of one master is sometimes mistaken for the work of another.

With the breaking up of the apprentice system and the beginning of the academies, classic or decadent Greek and Italian art was made a fetish along with recipes for painting derived from the works of the masters. The best of the old masters were thrust aside. Those whose work was photographic, external, with the basic problems of the modern photographer, those of lighting effects, form by means of light and shade, textures, detail and so on—these painters, who could make hand-painted and colored illustrations and photographs to suit the public demand, were extolled as the best artists. They are still so extolled.

Early American painters introduced into this country the decadent art of Europe. With few exceptions, American painters, including those of today, have based their work upon the same foundations and used the same recipes. We have as yet attained no national principles, traditions. There is little hope of our attaining them through the efforts of the Eucalyptus School, which is devoted mainly to the continuance of academician formulas and recipes.

Creative art, on the other hand, has a vital tradition which goes back to the cave dwellers, who are estimated to have lived between 30,000 and 50,000 years before Christ. The collective contribution of art principles which form the creative tradition are derived from the original works of creative artists of all races and times. Followers of the academician or formalized and sterilized tradition paint for the public, in California as they did in Italy; they study popular demand and supply a commodity.

The hope for a racial art in America rests upon the creative tradition, which is ever alive and ever being augmented. One creative artist in Los Angeles has made a real contribution to this tradition. This contribution is spacial color potentiality. He lays no claim to the discovery of the principles of color chords, rhythmic organization and several other principles sometimes mistakenly attributed to him. The principle of suggestion of form, for instance, was taught by Chinese old masters. An excellent example of the way American art, or art which is based upon universal creative principles by the American artist, is promptly stamped on by "imported technique," was recently given at the Los Angeles Museum, when a jury exhibited their ignorance of creative art by refusing to hang a good painting based upon the creative tradition. The jury saw in it a strong similarity to the work of this other creative artist, and without consideration of the principles upon which it was based, they refused it on that ground. In this work was no evidence of imitation. It was based upon very ancient principles, among which was form suggestion, and the recently contributed principle of special color potentiality. These principles are not the exclusive property of anyone. But in current local exhibitions the juries constantly admit paintings by the "Eucalyptus Painters" which are so much alike in thought, technique and result that when we have seen several of them we have seen them all.

In this commercial age creative art is unlikely to prove popular or to secure general intelligent understanding. The Eucalyptus School and its like will flourish so long as layman, imitator and critic fail to distinguish between creative art and imitation, which have nothing in common except tools, materials and some of the technical skill.

CHARLES JOSEPH RIDER.

The above is doubtless caviar for the general, but will baffle the layman, who may now dimly perceive why artists often seem like a bunch of hopeless nuts. Here's man, here's life, here's the tools: and instead of seeing, feeling and painting, some artists knock off work about 10:30 in the morning and go around to a friend's studio to argue the principles of art. The particular group with whom Mr. Rider is persona grata are all heated up about how oriental and Egyptian art got into Mexico, and are particularly strong on taking acknowledged works of art to pieces and showing you the wires on which they work.

But that is about as valuable as taking a baby to pieces or hunting for the human soul with a dissecting knife. Nothing comes of it but a lot of rhythm (highly visible,) "spacial color potentiality," "color chords" and such like, animals that simply lie down in their tracks and refuse to work. With every new statement of principle a fresh academy is founded. Mr. Rider is simply batting for the S. McDonald Wright academy, whereas, in the old days, he probably batted for the William M. Chase academy.

Now that is what I like about the "Eucalyptus" school—it never yet has hardened into an academy. They go out and paint a sunset if they love sunsets, whereas a budding artist in Mr. Rider's coterie would be torn limb from limb by his pack if he dared essay such disgusting realism for so poor a reason as love. And they do take it so, calling everybody else "illustrators" and such unkind names. George Inness? George Bellows? Just candy-box cover artists!

Be yourself Charles! Once you painted frightened-looking monochromes, then you got the new gospel and painted poor nature as red as the end of Falstaff's nose, with occasional dashes of blue-violet and blue-green for luck. Once in a while you forget yourself and just paint something and then it's not so bad. Some day look at a tree until you forget "creative principles" and you may surprise yourself!

'SHANNONS' ARE AT EL CAPITAN

Broadway Play of Vaudeville Pair Opens Today

Mrs. James Gleason Seen in Original Role

Husband Busy Writing Film Scenarios

BY ALMA WHITAKER

One just drops into conversation with that most comfortable person, Mrs. Jimmie Gleason, wife of the author of "The Shannons of Broadway," which opens at El Capitan on the Sabbath. But she is Lucille Webster on the program.

"No, I'm just a hired actress," she grins when one asks her if her famous husband is producing this play of his under the Duffy banner. "We've been playing it all around—with half a dozen different endings. It's a play about vaudeville people—they are a race apart, you know. I get upstage because a small-town hotel won't take my dog in, so I buy 'em up and the troupe tries to run the hotel—phew. See those boys with the saxophones. We are trying to turn them into actors in a week's rehearsals. They are catching on so quickly."

"This is really my play, you know. My husband gave it to me for a Christmas present. He also gave me 'Rain or Shine' for a birthday present this year, so I'm sitting pretty, thank you, because they are both hits. He is writing another now, 'Puffy,' which has seventy-five people in it all over 70 years of age."

"Which," I couldn't resist interpolating, "he is going to give you for Mother's Day."

"This dog of ours in the play—we took him to England with us. He used to take tea with the wardrobe woman every afternoon and trot out for a drink with the men at the corner 'pub'—oh, but he's smart. He loved England as we did. You know they adore American plays over there—our kind. They can do the society drama type a darned sight better themselves. But Jimmy's plays are all regular everyday American fun," bubbles Mrs. Gleason, who, since it was during rehearsal, would startle me every now and then by catching her cue in the middle of a sentence with me, hop up, do a dramatic bit, and come back to finish the sentence just where she left off.

Mrs. Gleason was in vaudeville herself for three years and is full of gay stories about past celebrities—Lily Langtry, for instance, who could not walk from her dressing-room to the stage unless they laid down a bit of red velvet carpet for her. "The couple in this play are based on those dear old famous ones, Emma and Micky Sharrock," she told me. "Jimmy has captured their characters to the life."

But at that, Lucille Webster is a "local girl who has made good." She used to live in Pasadena as a girl, and her mamma was fondly watching rehearsals of "The Shannons of Broadway" yesterday.

"Oh, yes," she was saying presently, "we open on Sunday. That's the only wicked thing about the West—those Sunday performances."

Jimmy Gleason, best known to us as the author and principal actor of "Is Zat So?" is not in this play—he is writing a story for Vilma Banky. But he hopes in to give them a hint or two during rehearsals occasionally. And their 20-year-old son, Russell, who is torn between college and pictures, is now in this new De Mille picture with Phyllis Haver—only two other players in it.

"Say," his clever mamma is saying presently, "I want to play a real newspaper woman in a play. There hasn't been one yet. 'The Racket,' 'Chicago,' 'The Front Page'—oh, ever so many about newspaper men, but they always make a newspaper woman so dumb. Jimmy will have to write one for me."

"And he should present it to you on Thanksgiving Day," I murmured.

TALKIES WILL BE FOR ACTORS

is the whole secret of recording voices:

"As long as the speaker modulates his tones, says what he has to say without a consciousness of the microphone—talks, in fact, as I am doing now—there is no reason for him to worry about the addition of sound to movies."

The director deplored the passing of the inaudible drama, because with it went the myriad nuances, the directorial and pantomimic touches, which made subtlety in the cinema a fine art. Only brilliance of dialogue, flashes of clever repartee, could possibly take its place—and with the speed with which talkies would have to be turned out, he wondered, he said, how the playwright would find time to include them.

"Unless we watch our step," he concluded, "our talkies will be just—cheap."

Raymond Cannon, young director who is now at Fox shooting scenes of "Husbands Are Liars," starring Conrad Nagel and June Collyer, once owned a motion-picture magazine. Cannon successfully managed this weekly for some time, and only sold it when the call from a studio lot could no longer be resisted.

AUDIENCE TERRIFIES MISS VALLI

Picture Actress Shivers at Thought of 'Tarnish' First Night on Tuesday

Virginia Valli has faced 1000 audiences without flinching—probably because, from the security of an animated screen, she was totally unaware of their presence. Now, on Tuesday evening at the Music Box Theater, she is to step before another audience, and she regards the prospect with a fearful expectancy.

"I am glad all those people will be in darkness," she confided. "It is so long since I have been on the stage, the very thought makes me nervous. Fortunately we have a proven play and a good cast, and when the action begins to move smoothly, there is no reason why I shouldn't move along with it, is there?"

The play is "Tarnish," by Gilbert Emery, and in the cast, besides Miss Valli, are Albert Gran, Pauline Garon, Fan Bourke, Duane Thompson, Barton Hepburn, Maude Turner Gordon and others of varying experience. A. Leslie Pearce is directing.

"Mr. Pearce has been away for a week," Miss Valli explained, "putting the finishing touches on 'The Royal Family' in San Francisco, and we have had to rehearse our lines without him. The lines, I think, will take care of themselves, but how we did need Mr. Pearce to tell us what to do with our arms and legs! They will get in the way, you know.

"Pictures hamper one's freedom of movement. I am accustomed to standing in one place before a camera, or moving, when I do, within a carefully circumscribed area. The stage is like the whole, wide world."

Miss Valli has been rehearsing night and day. Albert Gran and Miss Garon have been occupied during the day with film engagements, making it necessary for the troupe to return after nightfall.

"I am giving up pictures entirely for the run of the play," the actress continued. "It is, frankly, the hardest thing I ever have attempted, I don't feel that I could do my best if I divided my time between theater and studio."

Miss Valli is under contract to Tiffany-Stahl for two productions, one to be directed by Reginald Barker, the other by John M. Stahl. She played for that concern in "The Street of Illusion," still unreleased.

"We worked right here in the Music Box for a week," she recalled, "so in a way it is like home to me. I think it will make me feel easier to do 'Tarnish' here."

Miss Valli appeared briefly in stock in Milwaukee. For the rest, her acting has been confined to many motion pictures, and an occasional sketch at the Writers' Club.

"THE SQUALL" RIDES IN VIEW

the essence of sweet respectability in any role which she essayed.

"I would have turned up my nose in horror at the thought of playing anyone whose character was not quite all it should be," she explained with a sly smile. "In fact, I did turn down one play because I thought I shouldn't play such a terrible person as the girl in the play was.

"Now I'm positively reveling in these roles. They are twice as interesting as goody-goody ones. There is much more opportunity for building characterization. There is more work to them and consequently more interest.

PLAYED IN EAST

"My 'reformation,'" and she laughed, "came about when I went up to Rochester a summer ago to play stock for Gilbert Miller. I did this play, 'The Squall.' I did 'Lulu Belle' and others. People said I had a flair for such parts. I was good. Then I played 'The Squall' on a short tour through the East.

"When Mr. Butler of the Belasco was east, some one told him of my work and he engaged me to play this same role here. There is some talk of my doing 'Lulu Belle,' too. I hope so.

"Before that I had played on Broadway in 'Dancing Mothers,' by Edgar Selwyn and Edmund Goulding. I understudied Helen Hayes and when Mr. Selwyn took her out to put her in 'Quarantine,' I was given the part. Then there was 'An Adorable Liar,' by Roy Bryant, and the musical comedy, 'Bye, Bye Bonnie.'

"I am to go back to New York this winter. Two plays are being written for me. One is 'Jezebel's Daughter,' by George Brooks and the other 'Woman and Puppet' from the French by Pierre Louys."

In "The Squall" Miss Burgess, as the gypsy who runs wild in the home of some residents of Old Mexico, vamping not only the son of the family, but the husband as well, is barefooted most of the time. This has been rather hard during rehearsals when the Belasco stage is not dressed up. Last week she stepped on a sharp piece of metal and cut her foot.

Although educated in the East, she lived as a very small girl in Los Angeles. This is her first visit "home" in seven years. Her mother is with her.

"No, I'm not married," she explained. "I've been rather near to it, but that's all."

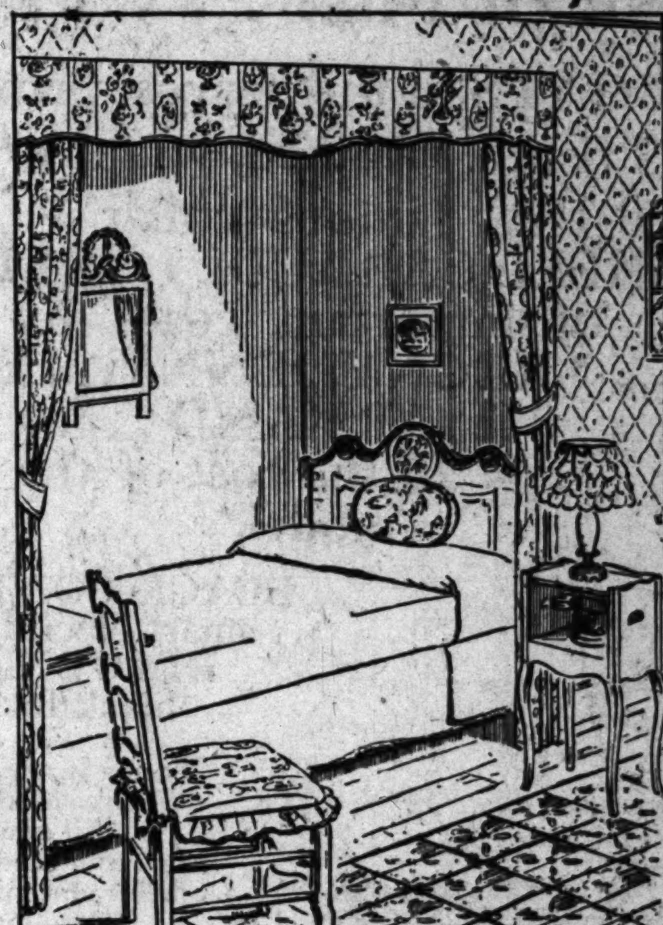
Five women reflect furniture fashions! Which is your type?

Jeanne d'Arc was born in Domremy January 16, 1412. According to John, Duke of Alencon, the peasant maid had 4 charges from her "voices." To put the English to flight; to deliver the Duke of Orleans from the hands of the enemy, to see Charles VII crowned at Rheims and to raise the siege of Orleans. She fulfilled her mission . . . and was burned as a witch.

Bullock's Provincial Furniture Most Charming of all . . . .



Sketched from one of Bullock's furnished rooms on the seventh floor. The entire room is done in Provincial styles. Bed in alcove, $165. Table, $40. Chair, $31.75 (without pad) Lamp, $27.50. Mirror, $24.75. Rug, $9.50 square yard. Seventh Floor.

The name of Joan of Arc is not lightly to be linked with fashion. Here was a simple peasant girl of 17 who saved one nation from the illegitimate encroachment of another nation. She will symbolize for all time the finest, truest type of womanhood.

And so, in its way, does Provincial Furniture combine all furniture virtues. It is rugged and strong as those who toil with their hands yet its lines are fluid like music. In proportion, Provincial Furniture is [illegible], fine, noble.

Its great beauty, like that of genuine aristocracy, is that it is at home with practically all other types of furniture. You need not hesitate to put one of Bullock's French Provincial Chairs in your Spanish or Early American home.

Bullock's will tell you more about Provincial Furniture in a few weeks . . .

I was singing the lyric roles, Michaela in "Carmen," and Musetta in "Boheme," and, too, I sang the page, Stephano, in "Romeo and Juliet." I thought then I should be forever in grand opera, but now I like operetta much better, and have almost forgotten my ambitions for the bigger roles in grand opera.

"A gentleman had heard me sing at a concert in one of the clubs and he spoke to Miss Albertson about me. That was about a year ago and nothing came of it. Then when she was casting "The Desert Song," she remembered me, sent for me, heard me sing, and engaged me."

Tanzi has a big voice which, coming from her small frame, causes much comment.

House Found Delightful Necessity

California has found another victim. Florence Eldridge, who is the Raina of the Edward Everett Horton production of George Bernard Shaw's comedy "Arms and the Man," now playing at the Vine-street Theater, has taken a house in the hills of Hollywood, and prepared to settle down for a stay temporarily at least.

Florence has been one of the most popular leading women on Broadway, New York, for the past several seasons, and was only lured away from the metropolis because her husband, Frederick March, was coming to the Coast to play one of the leading roles in "The Royal Family," soon to make its appearance in Los Angeles; and, being a dutiful wife, she was prepared to put her own career behind and follow in "father's" footsteps.

But no sooner had she set foot in Hollywood than the Hortons got wind of the fact, and being all set to produce the Shaw comedy they just grabbed Florence and wouldn't take "no" for an answer. So she is delighting audiences at the Vine-street with her acting of the role which she played for the New York Theatrical Guild production of the same play, and being a homebody nothing would suffice but a real house, set on a hill, with a fireplace, patio, fountain, yard, view and all the appurtenances of a California domicile.

"Lights of New York" Now at Tower

There is nothing as fascinating as the human voice is the belief of Byron Foy and so strong is his belief that he is master craftsman of talking pictures.

For months he had an idea of making an all-talkie picture and Warner Brothers were behind him in his belief—both in himself and in the future of the all-talkie picture.

It is the beginning of a new era in talking pictures. Tomorrow it has its first downtown showing at the Tower Theater. The cast includes such notables as Helene Costello, Cullen Landis, Gladys Brockwell, Mary Carr, Wheeler Oakman, Robert Elliott, Eugene Pallette, Tom Dugan, Tom McGuire, Guy D'Ennery, Walter Percival and Jere Delaney.

HOW THRILLING!
THERE'S MRS. BARNEY!
NEW "THEATER MART" WILL OPEN WITH "SENSATION"!

And to think our motion-picture stars are still barred from our California Blue Book!

Yet if entertaining socially distinguished persons is the chief raison d'etre of society (and certainly a prevalent ambition,) and society eligibility is so largely attained and secured thereby, motion-picture people are forever "scooping" our Blue Book queens.

Prince George of England was the year's social plum. Mary and Doug obtained him. None but motion-picture people were invited to meet him—nary a Blue Book queen on the horizon anywhere. A bare thirty people comprised the hallowed circle—including the hosts and the guest of honor and his two friends—thus, just twenty-five motion-picture people were deemed eligible for the exclusive affair.

This means a lot of social heartaches in Hollywood. Any one of us could name at least a score more who might reasonably have considered themselves eligible, under the circumstances. Yet but seven out of the twenty-five invited, were deemed distinguished enough to "sit below the salt" at the table with His Highness. The rest went to a reception afterward.

The standard of selection is quite different from that of Blue Book society — or even of the honor guest's mama, Queen Mary of England. But it was probably just as justifiable. The situation is highly modern and interesting—and largely peculiar to Southern California.

Mrs. Grauman, whose rooms were right next door to the Prince at the Ambassador, was so hoping for an opportunity to say, "I'm glad to meet you. I met your father in Canada in 1890 when he was Prince of Wales, and when your great-grandma was Queen. Your Uncle Clarence was alive then, and your papa's chances of being King weren't so good." But Prince George was very elusive.

Mrs. Jesse Lasky has proved so retiring, that it is not generally known she is a clever artist of still-life subjects and an exhibition is to be held of her work in New York this spring.

Also her 17-year-old son is such a good poet that admirers are quite apt to quote him across dinner tables.

And talking of poets, Mrs. Marshall Breeden has celebrated the arrival of her firstborn, Marshall David Breeden (born the 10th inst.) with a charming little poem, which was inclosed with the birth announcements. A baby with an author for a father and a poet for a mother, ought to prove a most distinguished youngster.

Mildred Goudge of Santa Monica, who is now Mrs. Gerald Woods, is recorded as having "a darling little apartment in Berkeley, and a mighty sweet husband." It seems that a wild revival of ping-pong is the fashionable amusement in that circle these days . . . in fact, it has spread to San Francisco. Hollywood is doing considerable ping-ponging, too. Oh, the memories that will arouse. Such a lot of the courting in 1900 was done over ping-pong tables . . .

When Peggy Hamilton marshaled her thirty screen celebrities at Rogers Airport on Sunday, to fly in state (Maddux and Richfield air-pullmans) to Mines Field, everyone wanted to fly with Art Goebel and Peggy needed all her poise. Which embarrassment caused us to leave nigh an hour late.

So that when Goebel landed his stylish cargo right down in front of the grand stand, and we alighted in a cloud of dust and heard the frantic excitement, we all bowed politely—thinking it was for us.

But a field manager yelled at us and hustled us out of the way—even, I mean, such celebs. as Ruth Elder, Belle Bennett, Natalie Kingston, Doris Arbuckle, Kathleen Clifford etc.—and we discovered Lindbergh, army air planes, men dropping from parachutes all about is, were occasioning the furor, and all the crowd wanted us to do was to get out of the way quickly and sit down. They—ahem—told us so, loudly and in chorus. So the remaining planes had to land their precious cargo away off—and that occasioned more heartburnings for Peggy to soothe. But Peggy, attired in a saucy white aviation costume, never turned a hair. Her poise was marvelous and she retrieved dignity and order out of chaos with calm poise. We were even almost popular before we finally left.

When a pilot of one of the planes played a little trick, Wanda Hawley became hysterical and grasped the pilot round his neck . . .

When we tried to scatter flowers on the grand stand, the wind took them clear to Australia . . .

It also disturbed the carefully prepared beauty of the motion-picture queens, so that some hasty toilettes were made just as we landed.

Devoted husbands accompanying charmers to Rogers Field, were not included in the flying party. So, among others, Charlie Mailles, Tom Miranda and George Landy had a marvelous chance to prove their sweet and patient dispositions—waiting for Claire McDowell, Josephine Miranda and Katherine McGuire, since our hectic party was not allowed to leave the field till dusk.

But all's well that ends well—and most of us arrived at Lois Wilson's party at Beverly Hills later in the evening—where Lois proved a most meticulous hostess. Gloria Swanson was there, but we couldn't coax any titbits about the Prince's visit out of her. Gloria was wearing a smart fall brown outfit with a tight-fitting small hat—she wore a large floppy summer hat for the Prince.

Alice Pike Barney's new "Theater Mart" is already to be launched in "the most unique playhouse in Hollywood," vide the invitations, situated at 605 North Juanita avenue. Alice herself is president of "The Board of Governors." Only new plays, preferably by new authors, are to be produced. The first will be one by Rita Kissen, "Sensation," for which rehearsals are in progress.

Among the hostesses at the party on Wednesday were Mmes. Hancock Banning, Chester Hoag, R. D. Shepard, Samuel Thomas, Alexander Barrett, and Lady Middleton Brown—so it is to have a Blue Book tang. We prefer our Bohemia to have "class" out here.

Te Women Lawyers' Club held its first meeting of the season, with that interesting Mila K. Schenkel as guest of honor—the first woman to be admitted to the bar in Poland. She proved a clever speaker in her recital of the great difference between judicial procedures in this country and her own. All respectable adult males are on the jury list and must serve when called—thirty-six of them on each panel from which a jury of twelve must be selected. No women on Polish juries yet—and only twenty women lawyers in all Poland, since they were only admitted to practice in 1920. Judicial salaries in Poland are $55 a month!

This clever girl has married Sidney Schenkel of Los Angeles and will now remain here. She is an accomplished linguist, very good looking, and loves American slang.

PRO-MUSICA WILL OPEN SEASON

Three Programs Announced Include Quartet and Notable Composers

The Los Angeles chapter of Pro-Musica will begin its season with a musicale at the Biltmore October 1. The Musart Quartet, which is sponsored by the local chapter of Pro-Musica and consists of the well-known artists, Josef Borrissof and George Benkert, violinists; Emile Ferir, violinist, and Nicholas Ochi-Albi, violoncellist, will be introduced at this time in a program of particular interest.

This quartet will prepare the works required by various visiting composers who will appear before the members of Pro-Musica this season. Their selection for the first performance will include numbers by Mozart, Bloch, Tailleferre and Debussy.

Ottorino Respighi, the Italian composer, will give a recital under the auspices of Pro-Musica this winter and another event will be the program by Arthur Honnegger.

Mrs. Samuel T. Clover is president of the organization and will be assisted in receiving by the new board of directors and technical board.

SOCIETY OF CINEMALAND

BY MYRA NYE

It is not at all surprising that the last word for social affairs in Cinemaland is the aerial party. Several have been given to distinguished guests during the last fortnight. In honor of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, Peggy Hamilton entertained the last Sunday of the Mines Field meet when thirty lovely stars of the cinema firmament were guests. It must be admitted that the Lone Eagle did not come within walking distance of the doves and stars but he was easily in the same air with them over the field. It must be admitted also that the lovely feminine guests did not attract any great amount of attention, comparatively speaking. But that is as it should be when air history is being made and at a time when the stars are still not sufficiently airminded.

Miss Hamilton's special guests of honor were: Art Goebel, Al Wilson, Ruth Elder and Priscilla Dean, who, it is rumored is soon to wed Lieut. Leslie Arnold.

Eighteen of the Maddux and Richfield planes took off in a parade from Rogers Field to Mines Field, where the air races were being held, carrying the loveliest array of femininity ever seen on any aviation field. The planes circled the grandstand while the girls dropped showers of flowers upon the spectators. At least they were supposed to drop but a surprising and impertinent wind blew them far away. Landing, they were met by flyers who placed wreaths around their necks in Hawaiian fashion with leis; and escorted them to their boxes.

Belle Bennette, who was hostess to a week-end party at Catalina, flew from Catalina, landing just in time to join Miss Hamilton's party. Among other guests were: Natalie Kingston, Priscilla Dean, Marguerite de la Motte, Doris Arbuckle, Alice Calhoun, Corliss Palmer, Kathleen Clifford, Kathryn McGuire, June Marlowe, Claire McDowell, Mabel Julienne Scott, Vera Lewis, Marion Nixon, Violet La Plante, Diana Ellis, Ann Rork, Mary Ashcroft, Sally Eilers, Wanda Hawley, Sharon Lynn, Edna May Cooper, Georgia Hale, Lady Nesta Lansdowne, Majel Coleman, Gloria Grey, Jane Laurell, Ona Brown, Mrs. Finis Fox, Mrs. Milton Cohen, Mrs. Lillian Asher, Jeannette Braddock, Honey Hurley, Mrs. Swodbi Meade, Dorothy Snow, Dorothy Sims and Virginia Hills.

Miss Hamilton was stunning in an aviation suit of white poiret twill with black patent leather boots and white leather helmet.

Leaves for East

Mrs. Oscar W. Miller of Beverly Hills left Friday for the East, accompanied by her son, Winston Miller, who will enter Prinston Preparatory School.

Mrs. Miller had as her house guest during August Mrs. Nunice S. Bittman, well-known singer.

Lois Wilson Party

An informal party of great charm with a congenial group of the most prominent among the cinemalite gathered together was given by Lois Wilson last Sunday evening. Buffet supper was served and conversation, an increasingly rare art, was enjoyed. The affair was given at Miss Wilson's Beberly Hills home.

Arriving

Grace Duffie Boylan, nationally known writer of Memphis, Tenn., and mother of Malcolm Stuart Boylan, is due to arrive here in time for the opening of "Mother Knows Best" at Carthay Circle Theater tomorrow night. She plans to spend the winter here as the house guest of the Boylans at 1738 Livonia avenue.

Janet Gaynor has returned from San Francisco, where she attended the opening of the grand opera season.

Where Are They Now

Alfred Santell will leave soon for New York to take scenes in Vilma Banky's next picture, which he is directing.

Irene Rich is in New York, business and pleasure combined. Her daughter is re-entering an eastern college this month.

Robert Armstrong will soon depart for San Francisco for scenes in "Leathernecks," the Pathe picture featuring Armstrong.

Dorothy Dwan is going to Canada for exterior scenes in a picture to be made by the Thunder Bay Film Company as soon as her stage engagement permits.

Marie Prevost is in New York on a shopping trip and will return soon.

Alice Joyce, who is in Hollywood, will return to her New York home soon.

Sue Carroll is in Europe making a picture for Fox Film Company. Nick Stuart is in the same troupe.

Tom Mix is going to San Francisco for locations in his film started this week at the F. B. O. studio.

James Gleason is making a hurried trip to Portland this month to visit relatives at the close of his United Artists' engagement to write for Vilma Banky.

Prince George at Cafe

Prince George was an honored guest at the Montmartre Wednesday a week ago at a dinner party sponsored by Rear-Admiral Moffat, U.S.N. Other guests included Lieut. Storres of the United States Navy air squadron and officers of the British and American navy.

Another interesting party on that night was given by Carl Laemmle, Sr., in honor of Ernest Laemmle. The long table was elaborately decorated with brilliantly hued flowers and novel favors were presented the guests, among whom were: Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Veigt, Mr. and Mrs. William Seiter (Laura La Plante,) Mr. and Mrs. Neil Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Lowe (Lilyan Tashman,) Mrs. Ernst Lubitsch, Miss Mary Philbin, Miss Rosabelle Laemmle, Barbara Kent, Carmel Myers, Bessie Love, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Edward Laemmle and Paul Fejos.

Mrs. Lloyd Smith, who is the mother of Harold Lloyd, entertained in honor of Mrs. Francis Wayne, a newspaper woman from Colorado, at a charmingly appointed luncheon Wednesday. Place favors were china animals with pink elephants predominating in the jungle, and the table was centered with gorgeous dahlias. Mrs. Lloyd Smith's guests included Mrs. Grace Glaser, Mrs. Dorothy Donnell Calhoun, Alma Whitaker, Gladys Hall, Myra Nye, Mrs. Louis Spratlin and Mrs. G. H. Gold.

Among others of Cinemaland lunching at the cafe that noon were Mrs. Norman Taurog, who lunched with Mrs. Albert Ray, Lina Basquette, slender and attractive in a three-toned blue crepe frock with velvet hat to match, lunching with June Collyer in a lavender dress embroidered in coral. Leatrice Joy and Billy Joy entertained Joy Auburn, Polly Ann Young and Jack Carroll.

PRINCE GEORGE HOGS SPOTLIGHT

him, so that his first impression out at United Artists studio was a regular royal rodeo de luxe, with large he-men cowboys and fiery California mustangs showing off their daring stunts sumptuously.

So that much of the royal comment on that occasion was "Bravo! Perfectly rippin'!" and Doug was called upon to answer a million questions.

Nothing could have been more Britishly genteel than the masculine tea-party in Mary's bungalow on the lot. Prince George, loose-limbed, and wearing those roomy English-cut clothes, relaxed deliciously over his toast—and obviously felt the occasion glamourfully comme il faut.

Then, at the dinner party at Pickfair afterward, things were gay, but suitably decorous. It was not for Doug and Mary, our own royal noblesse obligers, to stage any wild parties. And everyone knows how prettily such charmers as Swanson, Garbo, Goudal, Claire Windsor (happy name for the occasion, Claire's) and Damita can behave when the occasions demand it. These with Chaplin, Gilbert, Doug, and the Prince and his friends, formed the dining party. Only three male actors, you see. Doug's bonhomme as a host, combined as it is with well-attained regal assurance, leaves naught to be desired. Chaplin, notwithstanding his humble beginnings in English poverty, is what Elinor Glyn would certainly call "a nature's gentleman." So how could His Highness have any but the nicest possible impressions of our screen luminaries, with Mary as the shining chatelaine of a perfectly appointed home?

ON BEST BEHAVIOR

It is safe to say also that all those bidden for after dinner were on their very nicest behavior. Even Lupe Velez, 'tis said, moderated her transports with nice discretion. Billie Dove just looked lovely and said the right things. Norma Shearer, of British extraction, has long since learned gracious condescension. As for the men, what better Exhibit A's could have been mustered than gentle Ramon Novarro, aristocratic Ronald Colman and Ralph Forbes, picturesque Tom Mix . . . and we may be sure the husbands, Irving Willatt, Irving Thalberg, Kenneth Hawks, conducted themselves with all the impressive dignity they could muster. And quite definitely, little lovely June Collyed made a royal hit . . . even if Damita was claiming former acquaintance.

True, there was a slight slackening of royal decorum when a roadhouse was visited later in the evening—by a selected few. But see the wisdom of reserving that slackening for a suitable environment. And—ahem—likewise for a public place where it is most desirable that no one creates any sort of a scene. His Highness may well have received the impression that Hollywood, even in its unrestrained hilarity, is most circumspect. Certainly he himself was not too severely tempted to indiscretion. He might have been much less safe at certain unrestrained Blue Book parties we could name . . .

INFORMAL ARRANGEMENT

Then pause and consider the discretion of the second day's frivolities. A very private royal suite at the Ambassador, with his friends William Slater and Elliott Rogers, from 6 a.m. until noon. Then a distinguished married lady, a nearly engaged lady, and a debutante for lunch—Mme. La Marquise de la Coudray de Falaise, a most superior chaperone; Damita, hovering on the brink of being engaged to a duke, and June Collyer. True, the arrangement was otherwise informal, for each lady arrived alone, proceeded to the sixth floor unaccompanied, and tapped meekly on the royal door—to be, however, immediately and rapturously admitted. We are informed on excellent authority that "sight-seeing" occupied this pleasant party after lunch—an occupation ardently approved in the best Chamber of Commerce circles.

How, therefore, can His Highness have taken any but the nicest impressions away with him? Dared he but speak for publication, he must surely have declared that he wished his royal mama could have been here to see how utterly de rigeur and comme il faut everything had been. Outside of an unusual preponderance of beautiful women, and that rodeo, he might have been officially visiting any foreign capital—with of course, the mayoral receptions and speeches, the civic banquets and speeches, the consular receptions and speeches, left out. But even his royal mama would surely forgive the latter omission, having suffered them, as it were, herself.

It was, of course, an agreeable arrangement on that "sight-seeing" trip that the two bespoke ladies should ride in a limousine with Elliott Rogers, preceded by a saucy sport model containing June Collyer, the debutante, and the Prince, with William Slater busily occupied at the wheel. Consider the wisdom of this choice, though. How we might have trembled for him had it been other than nice little June . . . we can think of some names that . . . well, never mind.

There would certainly have been a thrill for the audience at the Belasco Theater, witnessing "Mid-Channel," that ancient English triangle play, had they known that Gloria Swanson had Prince George there with her on the last night of his allegedly "stolen leave."

No, take it all in all, the Prince's stolen leave was exceptionally well stage-managed by Doug and Mary—both as regards His Highness's impressions of Hollywood and the British Empire's impression of him.

COGHLAN PRAISED

John Krafft, who is titling "Marked Money" for Pathe, is especially pleased with the juvenile characterization by Junior Coghlan, which he says will add to the laurels the boy gained in the title role of "Let 'Er Go Gallegher."

By the Way

By EVA G. TAYLOR

In the western world, in contradistinction to the eastern ,or oriental, service is regarded as the highest form of religion.

Service to humanity in some form of organized effort, or individual helpfulness, is eulogized as the ideal to be striven for.

Miss Maude Royden, the English woman preacher, recognizes this characteristic in us as a people. Writing in a current magazine, she says:

"The American woman's idea of religion is service."

While acknowledging the benefits to society which this mania for doing things confers, Miss Royden points out the dangers of excessive zeal in service. She says that American religious women "believe much too strongly in external reformation."

"They have been too active in the service of the world to give much thought to themselves, consequently they really do not know themselves or human nature." She admits that while "the concentration on spiritual discipline may be the besetting sin of the spiritual East, a complete neglect of it is the curse of the practical West."

Whether or not we agree with Miss Royden's methods and preachments, it would seem that she has struck the basic cause of our religious unrest and confusion.

The overemphasis of "doing" and the neglect of "living," spurred on by countless activities whose urge increases the nerve tension; lack of quietness and poise, absence of spiritual peace; looking outward always, instead of within; rushing into maelstroms of excitement; always seeking to reform the world by outside pressure, instead of helping it to change from within. All this is characteristic of our life today.

As a people we are restless, nervous, keyed up to a high pitch.

We have little real spiritual life, such as the gentle Quakers have always possessed.

Our jazzy age is not conducive to silent introspection, nor to deep thinking.

Much less is it harmony with the inner, or subjective life.

To furnish an outlet for the pent-up forces we must rush into various lines of social, political or religious service.

In our enthusiasm we fail to discriminate and often get a wrong slant on conditions and remedies.

We use external means to conquer an evil instead of redeeming it within.

Miss Royden admires the spirit and courage of American women in "putting things over," but deplores the loss of spiritual vision.

In closing her kindly criticism of us, she says:

"I believe American Protestant religion lacks the spiritual depth and the sense of eternal things which comes only from intensive spiritual discipline. In other words, it has in building the City of God, neglected the making of saints."

This may be the key to the chaotic conditions complained of by the religious and civic workers of the age.

Rev. William Henry Spence, a modernist, frankly admits that modernism has its evils.

Dr. Spence is a minister of the Church of Christ at Dartmouth College.

He deplores the loss of the "awareness of God" in the surrender "to the dreary philosophy of materialistic mechanism."

He says: "As a philosophy mechanism appears to be passing, but outside the academic world it is still producing its characteristic bitter fruits, chief of which is a paralyzing cynicism."

He admits that "evolution is an enemy of the Christian religion . . . in so far as one's theory of evolution is atheistic."

Others, who see "that an expanded universe means an expanded view of God, have felt their reverence and adoration grow as each new scientific discovery has widened their understanding of creation."

"It ought to have been possible," Dr. Spence declares, "for all of us to keep alive and fresh within us a consciousness of God and a faith that is Christian in its expression of that consciousness, even if our whole conception of His creative process were changed."

Recovering the "lost radiance of Christianity" should be the ideal before us while pursuing our scientific investigations.

Each new discovery of evolutionary development should increase our reverence for and adoration of the infinite source of life.

Ignorance may deny divinity; enlightenment, never.

It is staggering to note the vast expanses of desert and barren plain in our journeys across the continent. So much of the earth's surface is apparently waste land or wastes of water. So little, relatively, under cultivation.

In the long geologic periods when our planet was forming and changing through cataclysmal throes, what evolutionary force produced these interminable wastes?

The path of glaciers is marked, but what condition put the stamp of monotonous desolation upon so large a portion of our country and others?

One lady was heard to say as the train raced over the barren plains: "I just adore mesquite and sagebrush. The desert is charming to me." I wondered. I tried by a mighty stretch of a keenly vivid imagination to fall in love with the forbidding land through which we were passing. All in vain.

I could fancy one saying: "I adore trees and woodland beauty. Mountain scenes are charming to me."

But to rave over desolation is quite impossible to me.

One may admire some phases of the desert; the gorgeous sunsets and the starry heavens which seem so close in the still nights. The scent of sagebrush is pleasing. Some of the flowers are beautiful and appealing in the pathetic loneliness of their setting.

But to ride through long hours over stretches of dreary land which serves little purpose save to add countless miles to Uncle Sam's domains, robs one of any cherished illusions concerning the desert.

How restful even the prairies of Nebraska seem, with their occasional rivers, tree-bordered, after [illegible]

BULLOCK'S

Again Advertising is called upon to tell the news that

A Great Silk Store has to Tell of Great Silk Values

UNDERLYING whatever success Bullock's may have attained have been, still are, and ever will be those Ideals of Bullock's which are as insistent upon standards of style and quality, as they are upon standards of value.

There must be no deviation — no matter how great the opportunity nor how low the price — these standards must be respected and maintained.

With every yard of Silk, at all times, as with every other item of merchandise sold by Bullock's, goes Bullock's name—the most valued possession of this business—the guarding of which is a cherished responsibility.

Note! The writer has sought earnestly for a choice of words that would adequately convey the idea of these beautiful Silks that are so inseparably associated with unusualness of value, at Bullock's.

Many pencils have been sharpened.

Many sheets of paper have been written over, torn to pieces, and thrown away. The futility of trying to put these silks and their particular and important attractiveness before you is more evident now at eleven-thirty in the morning than it was day before yesterday afternoon —at three.

There probably is some one who is capable of accomplishing this thing — of making this advertisement so sincere, and genuine, so enthusiastic and forceful— that it would compel the attention and arouse the interest of every woman who reads this paper, who has silks in her consciousness to any degree — and that is about all one should expect an advertisement to do—carry the story of these silks so that they will be understood and appreciated — so that

Monday, those women who should be interested in them, knowing of them, will come by hundreds to see and to share the values they present.

Substantiating and emphasizing their importance is their Bullock background of twenty-one years of business building merchandising directed towards friend making and friend keeping.

They are indeed Silks worthwhile, and values exceedingly so.

They must be told about—so here they are, to be seen to be appreciated.

Let them speak for themselves.

A Valiant, Heavy Satin Crepe Assumes position of leadership $2.00

A smart silk—of decided Fashion alertness and emphatic quality —in 28 shades—including Black, Pastel, and the more solid tones for street wear. Gray! Yes, indeed—and Blues; in a variety. Sandalwood, Patou, Malaga, Laurel Oak, Steel, Pewter, Tea Rose, Sweet Pea—even Pigeon and Mother Goose. What will you? But it is the quality, after all, that multiplies the fascination of this value.

Washable Truhu Crepe de Chine Challenges for first place $1.95

That truly remarkable silk—the same that is gaining so many new friends as the days go by and that at its regular price—50 colors just as though it were from regular stock, as well as black and white. Backed for 100 tubbings is its color—and its quality—but even the best of silks can be rubbed and scrubbed to death. A feature that is a feature—$1.95 yard.

A Famous Black Velvet $6.45

In a velvet year, if you please! This delightful transparent Black Velvet, replete with personality and that inspiration which leads art and skill to frocks of exotic charm. One sees this—another that—but all the world loves velvet. And no repertoire of dresses but will welcome the robe of transparent velvet in black—so economically now, at $6.45 yard.

Black Satin Crepe, a strong Value, a great Offering, at $2.45

A notable silk of notable desirability at the threshold of Fall. A notable quality, that perhaps has as its most notable feature its very low price. For $2.45 is as low a price for this beautiful black satin crepe, as $3.00 a yard is for a super-quality that may fit your purpose even better. Both of them planned for a destiny of friend-making. $2.45 and $3.00 yard.

The writer can see no reason why these remarkable values in Sports Wool Coatings should be held for the certainty of Cold Weather.

When a Store can Sell Such Splendid Wool Coatings $3.95

It should be a time of enthusiasm and spirited forehanded buying on the part of everyone who anticipates the need of wool coatings of this nature for some time to come.

The price is very low for the character of the coating concerned.

Napped surface for sports wear. Llama like in appearance — the small designs and diagonals that are approved of Fashion. Tans, Browns and Grays predominating. And at $3.95!

One of those occasions for saving that do not happen with any degree of frequency. A Quality Exploitation.

EIGHTY WEEKS LISTENING TO SHRIEKS IS HARD ON NERVES

When one is accustomed to cool climates and is suddenly thrust into California's warmest . . . when he can't buy anything to fit ready-made, but a handkerchief . . . and when he has played the same role in the same play for some eighty weeks . . . in just what type of a mood would you expect to find the gentleman?

Well, Dudley Clements isn't a bit like that! In spite of all these things he is one of the most aimable, likeable chaps who ever donned a slouch hat and pinned on a tin star to play the detective in a mystery play.

Clements, who tips the scale at 300 and something, started in the role of detective in "The Wooden Kimono" when the show opened in New York. The mystery thriller had no more than closed there when he was called to San Francisco for the same part . . . and now he is repeating himself at the President Theater here.

"Now there is some talk of taking it to Oakland to open Duff's new house there," Clements added, "Jest wot I thought," he tacked on, referring to the Pet phrase of his character in the production.

"It's nerve wracking, that's what it is," he continued. "Doing a mystery show for eighty weeks isn't like playing a farce comedy such as 'Tommy' or 'Why Men Leave Home.' You can go through weeks of those without any apparent wear or tear . . . but these mysteries. . . ."

For in spite of his eighty weeks Clements isn't at all sure that he will ever get over the spinal chills brought on by the unexpected shrieks of feminine members of an audience.

"You never know when one of them will burst forth with a blood-curdling howl," he explained, "some of them are wasting their time sitting in an audience watching the show. With screams such as they possess they should join the troupe and get paid for it. It would be easier on the rest of us, too, knowing just when to expect an outburst."

But even though Clement's nerves are undoubtedly "shot," he will tell you, with a doleful look at his wardrobe, that he hasn't lost a bit of weight.

Clements began his stage career as treasurer of a theater, working up from that position to manager of a small stock company. Business was poor, however, and money and actors scarce, so Clements found himself pinch-hitting in such roles as butler, spear carrier and voice in the dark.

His personality was such, however, that it wasn't long before he was recognized and signed for a New York production.

"Then I was actor and manager alternately, according to which proved the most profitable at the time," he explained.

Although "The Haunted House," and "The Wooden Kimono" are the only mysteries in which he has appeared, he has been prominently named in the cast of numerous New York productions, and, in addition to this, boasts a record before the camera.

He is all in favor of the footlights, however, especially since the advent of "talkies," which he believes will eventually serve as a means to bring the stage back to the position it once occupied, and which. . . .

"Jest wot I thought," came the answer, accompanied by a groan from Mr. Dudley Clements.

Noose Gives Pichel Thrill

Irving Pichel has had numerous sensations during his career as actor and director, but standing in a cart with a noose around his neck, trusting to the wisdom of the extras to remove the noose before they pull the cart away, is one that doesn't grow less keen no matter how many times the performance is repeated. As Dick Dudgeon in "The Devil's Disciple," Pichel goes carelessly to the scaffold in the place of Anthony Anderson (Ralph Freud,) ready to sacrifice his life for the husband of a woman whom he does not love, a rearrangement of the old theme of dying for a hopeless love, and which is part of the story of the current play at the Pasadena Community Playhouse, the 18th to 29th insts.

Pichel played this same role before at the Berkeley Playhouse, but admits his inability to get used to either the noose or the cart. He contends both are unreliable and lose none of their realism by being stage props.

Clair Soeurs

Created the original of this purple petal frock in a new light wool called "ondamousa." Two-piece model, with pert side tie. Sports Apparel Shop $69.50.

Regny

Stresses the flared skirt on a two-piece sheer wool frock in navy mixture with modern design in navy stripes on the blouse. Replica in the Sports Apparel Shop, $55.

Patou

Introduces "slate blue" in a daytime crepe frock, suggesting a raised waistline. A new feature is the stitched back panel, elongated. Misses' Shop replica $95.

Lecomte

Inspires a transparent velvet afternoon frock in a "tuckin" effect, achieved with a separate peplum flounce that fastens at the back with jet buttons. Misses' Shop $110.

Paris Replicas

Reproduced from Original Models Presented First in Los Angeles by May Company Fashion Shops

From the openings in Paris, only a few models in the many collections are assured a season of triumph. It is for this reason that The May Company Stylist attended the openings of the great houses . . . to select, at once, the "stars" of the presentations. Gowns, frocks, tailleurs . . . . were singled out, brought to New York and there copied by America's foremost studios.

Monday smart Los Angeles gathers on the Floor of Fashions to view both originals and replicas. Lovely creations that tell a fascinating story of Fall and Winter newness . . . of a mode of elegance, femininity, alluring intricacy! Of new fabrics and colors! Each replica an authentic reproduction of a master original, correct in every detail . . . differing only in their moderate May Company prices.

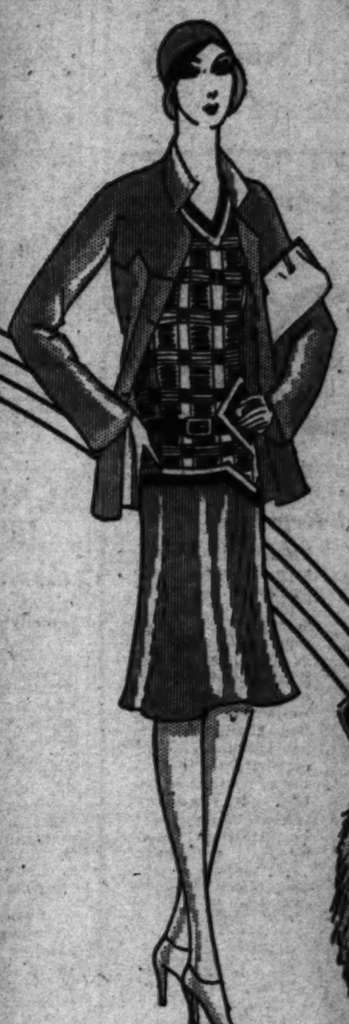
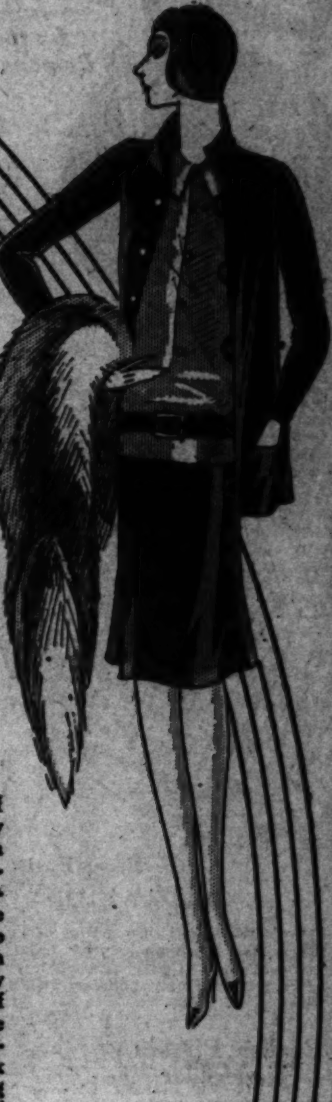
Lelong

Lends authenticity to the increasing favor shown by Paris to lace. In all the important collections, lace evening gowns hold positions of prominence . . . in colors, in newer "deep" shades, in black. New in the realm of lovely laces is chenille lace, which fashions an exquisite evening gown in bleu de nuit. Interest is centered in the tiered and paneled skirt with uneven hemline . . . the simple, molded blouse, a boutonniere of matching feather flowers. A narrow belt fastening with a lovely buckle in modernistic triangle design accentuates the lovely slimness of the silhouette, adding a charming youthful touch. Gown Shop, $185.



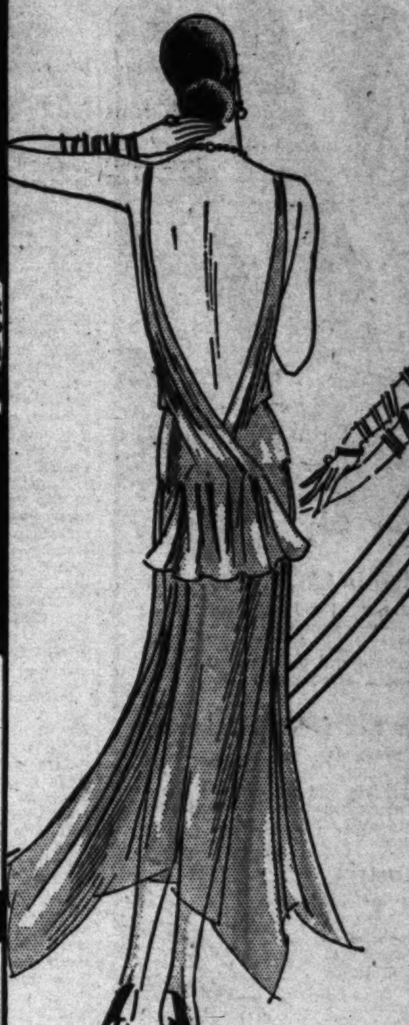
Rochas

Sponsors a three-piece knitted costume, its circular skirt flaring beneath a short, double-breasted jacket. Replica in tawny copper with suede belt. Sports Shop $79.50.



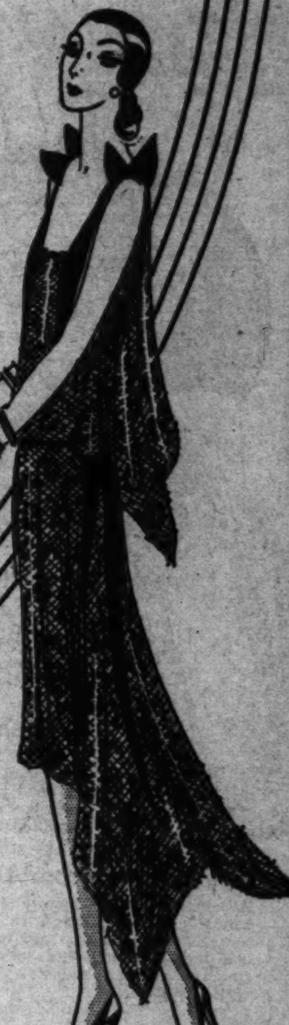
Molyneux

Acclaims the popularity of costume velvet; The May Company reproduces a three-piece tailleur in costume velvet and tweed, retaining the dark georgette blouse (a new note) and the trimming of quaint wooden ball buttons. Strikingly smart is the color scheme of the small light check on the dark costume velvet background . . . the clever back panel of the skirt breaking the straight line. Misses' Shop $69.50.



Patou

Presented "Sapphire" at his Autumn opening. Replica in chiffon of this same jewel shade shows a new swathed blouse and back decolletage. Gown Shop, $79.50.



Chanel

Combines lace and satin in an evening frock which ties at the shoulders in youthful satin bows. The replica in black dips longer-at-the-back. Gown Shop $69.50.

etc., have been settled more or less formally and about fifty informally. No record is kept of the latter, since the grievance is frequently adjusted through a few telephonic conversations a limited number of cases have come before the conciliation committee which the academy maintains, and in each case has been amicably arbitrated. Ordinarily a large proportion of these would have led to legal complications, but this has been avoided. A significant phase is that the majority of the complaints have been presented by nonmembers of the academy, the conciliation feature being open to everyone.

TALKIE CONFERENCES

Undoubtedly the promotion of harmony in this fashion has been one of the most important functions of the organization, though of late academic research has become of greater interest than in the past, according to Mr. Woods. The academy has been holding a series of conferences on the subject of talking pictures, which have been very actively and largely attended. The meetings are held in the clubrooms in the Roosevelt Hotel. Shortly a report will be issued covering the findings.

One report has already been published on the investigations into the subject of incandescent illumination, which occupied the attention of the body for four or five months. This deals extensively with the cost of this new form of lighting, the use of which in studios has been stimulated through the academy effort. It also takes up the problems of photography, make-up and the like which have been induced by the change from the old form of arc lighting. Practically all studios now use the incandescents in a majority of sets. They are virtually a necessity for sound pictures.

The impression is gleaned from all this that the academy is providing by degrees a clearinghouse for the exchange of ideas in the industry. And while a great many of the subjects dealt with have little of interest for the public at large, they are of enormous value to the industry, and it is surmised will lead to economies and other benefits in the making of pictures.

AWARDS FOR TALENT

On the artistic side awards are to be made for achievements in acting, writing, directing, technical work and in the general field of production. Preparations are under way now for the giving of the first of these awards. Members are requested to nominate candidates, and their selection of nominees then go before two different boards of judges. The first board of judges is selected from the branch in which the award is to be given. They will make a specific choice based on their knowledge of this particular branch. Their selection will then go before a central board of judges to be passed on by them, and the final choice made. The aim is to insure the maximum of fairness to all concerned, and as in the instance of the conciliation of disputes the competition is not limited to members, but may include anyone who has recorded a notable feat in the industry.

It may be interesting to note that in the instance of the writer the awards are divided into three classes including (1) for the best original scenarios (2) for the best adaptation (3) and for the best title writing, in the opinion of the judges. Directorial awards comprise two: (1) drama (2) comedy; production (1) outstanding picture (2) artistic quality.

TECHNICAL RESEARCH

Growing out of academy activities will be a research laboratory for pictures, which will be established by The Motion-Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., the Hays organization. J. A. Ball, formerly in charge of the Technicolor Laboratory, will supervise this work, and already heads a technical bureau, which has been conducting a survey preparing the way for the laboratory.

To the casual reader this may all seem removed from the screen itself, which is dependent so much on story and acting in its larger analysis, but the objective throughout is the increasing of the facilities for screen expression. The motion-picture is peculiarly a combination of art and industry, and it has been frequently the rule that the artistic development is proportionate to the industrial. The scientific side of picture making has never perhaps received such well-directed attention and interest as it has since the academy has come into existence, and this gives every promise of being one of its largest contributions.

A further expression of the aims of the organization will be the construction of a permanent building, an ultimate plan. Steps to realize this have not as yet been taken, but probably will be in the course of the next year or two. The present quarters are sufficiently commodious for most requirements now.

sia, talked frankly and bluntly to the producers and directors, saw a large number of Russian pictures, presented his conclusions to the Russian government heads, sold the Russians eight productions of his own, made provision for a visit to Hollywood by three or four of Russia's leading directors and technical experts, and returned to his home here—eminently satisfied.

The Russians have an interesting provision in their export and import regulations providing that they may not import a greater number of motion-picture productions than they export pictures of their own. This thoughtful provision has succeeded in keeping importations down, but it does not appear to have resulted in the expected increase in exports.

STUDY FILM TYPES

The reason, as Mr. Schenck and the Russian motion-picture makers agreed, is found in the type of picture produced under the soviet regime. Hence the visit of the Russians to this country. They will study not only American film methods, but American film tastes. And while possibly emulating the first, they plan definitely to satisfy the second.

Their salaries will be paid by the soviet government and their expenses will be paid by Mr. Shenck and his organization. This was suggested by Mr. Schenck after discovering the salary scale obtaining in the Russian industry.

It seems in Russia that the Griffiths, the De Milles, the Cruzes, the Lubitsches and other shining directorial geniuses, together with the Pickfords, the Chaneys, the Chaplins and the like are paid salaries representing something in the neighborhood of a couple of hundred dollars a month. Possibly Mr. Schenck said $100 a month, but in any event the amount approximates the average sum spent by an average picture celebrity in this country for the unessentials of a day or week.

Russian pictures, Mr. Schenck discovered, are artistic as regards acting and settings. Russian directors are producing pictures on a par with the output here and the actors compare favorably with those of this country.

The available market for motion pictures in Russia, however, is discouragingly small, as the country has not more than 1200 theaters equipped for films and the total number of seats in these theaters will not exceed 350,000—not an impressive figure in comparison with the 16,000 theaters and approximately 24,000,000 seats provided for the motion-picture lover in the United States.

The charge made for admission to Russian theaters seems to proceed on a sliding scale, some of the theaters being open to the public without charge and others requiring a fee which, on a comparative basis, is larger than that obtained in this country.

Success for the plan to exchange pictures is foreseen by Mr. Schenck, who is convinced that a Russian Mushik and a Hollywood sheik are brothers under the skin in such elemental matters as love, hate, friendship, courage, cowardice and other emotions common to mankind.

The entire problem of the Russians, therefore, would seem to concern the business of shaving the hero and teaching him to make love and outwit the villain in the fashion approved hereabouts. For themselves, it seems, the Russians are well satisfied with the stories filmed in this country, their only need being title writers capable of making a lucid translation of the theme.

Sunday-School Lesson

The International Sunday-school lesson for September 30 is a quarterly review, "Paul, the Missionary"—Philippians iv, 4-9.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

"Once upon a time there was a man"—that is the oldest formula for history as well as for fiction. When a great man appears, changes are sure to follow. A few names in each century stand out as the embodiment of the life of that time. This is nature's tribute to personality. Systems have no such power. What could have seemed more firmly established and dominant than the Russian and German monarchies and aristocracies fifteen years ago? Yet they crumbled up like pasteboard when subjected to strain. Power resides not in institutions, but in individuals—a lesson which neither the politicians nor the ecclesiastics seem able to learn.

Frankly facing the facts, we find that the Christian church during the past nineteen centuries has organized itself into certain great bodies, such as the eastern orthodox, or Greek church; the western Roman Catholic church; the Nestorian church; the Gregorian church; the Coptic church, and, latterly, the Protestant churches. Yet one single man has been more powerful in the lives of Christians than any or all of these. That man is the Jew, Saul of Tarsus, who became Paul, the Apostle of Jesus Christ, and His greatest interpreter. This simple fact is big with meaning. It is worth the ordinary person's thinking about. Why did one unofficial Jew, when converted to a new religion in an obscure province of the Roman Empire, become a more powerful figure in history than Cyrus or Alexander or Julius Caesar or Ghengis Khan or Charlemagne or Napoleon? Paul had no army. He held no civil office. No king or noble was his patron. He was not rich: during his most fruitful years he worked at his trade as a tentmaker. He was often in prison, and finally died by the executioner's sword. Whence then comes the persisting power of this man down the centuries?

"THE THINKING BAYONET"

As the old saying has it, it is "the thinking bayonet" that wins all wars. Paul's power was the power of ideas and of spirit. He has laid hold of the minds and imaginations of men in all lands because of his great brain and his great heart. He put into vivid words truths for all times. His phrases and figures of speech are more commonly quoted than those of Shakespeare.

Paul differs from other great thinkers in that there was a moral and spiritual purpose in every word he uttered. He might have talked politics or philosophy or travel—for he was abundantly qualified to do so—but, instead, he talked the marvel and the mystery of the new life that is offered to men in Christ Jesus. His brain was stamped deep with the name and character of his Master. To him to live was Christ.

All the other considerations that commonly move men he brushed aside: Christ, and Christ only, was the center and circumference of his life.

Did this big idea set Paul apart from his fellows? On the contrary; it linked him to them. Most "leaders" of men, in all spheres, ignore the profound truth which Paul built upon — and it is the bedrock of democracy and religion—namely, that the lowliest person has a capacity for the loftiest truth. Everybody can understand right and justice and freedom; that is why the Orient is still aflame today with the Allied war aims. What is more, every man and woman has a capacity for thoughts about God.

This trained thinker from the schools of Tarsus and Jerusalem got his new faith by way of a personal experience. It did not come to him as a philosophical presentation or as a result of academic discussion. Instead, it knocked him down at midday, on the Damascus road, as an individual conversion. Paul was made a Christian by a personal encounter with Christ. It was by his emotions, and not by his highly developed brain, that he became a disciple.

Of course, once his heart was set right, Paul's brain began to penetrate and organize and present the significance of Christ and His Gospel. No timid, narrow, conventional person was Paul. His new religion evoked all the force of his personality, and unleashed new powers which even he himself had never suspected. If it was true, it was true to the limit; and this convert had the audacity to go all the way with the truth that had been given him. For freedom had he been set free.

So he saw, as many others did not, that this Gospel could not be kept within Judean bounds. It had to be carried to the limits of the world, at whatever cost of personal labor and suffering. In the truest sense, Paul was an ambitious man. Also he was a practical man, and no cloistered dreamer. Whatever he saw as true, he dared to attempt as practicable. His vision, plus his purpose, made him Christianity's greatest missionary; and still today the pioneering leader of Christian thought.

A changed world was envisaged by this daring innovater. He was no "stand-patter," no defender of existing ills and abuses. Paul saw that the Gospel meant changed lives, or else it meant nothing. He flung into the face of an entrenched paganism, with all its materialism and lust and cruelty and selfishness, the truth of a new life, which makes men and society different.

Such a man as Paul was bound to encounter opposition. Every teacher of the applied Gospel does. Imperialism and exploitation in Paul's day were quite as real and alert forces as they are today. So Paul was mobbed and stoned and beaten and jailed, and finally beheaded, by the defenders of the established order.

But Paul took no time out to worry about that, and he kept right on preaching. His own fate was the least of his worries; so long as Christ was preached, nothing else mattered. How can life hurt a man like that? He is beyond the reach of all its slings and darts. So his message spread and his work grew; and still today they are spreading and growing everywhere. Untold millions know and love the master better because Paul was what he was.

THE UNITED STATES AGREED TO ESTABLISH NO BUSINESS IN THE CANAL ZONE WHICH WOULD COMPETE WITH PANAMANIAN COMMERCE.

BARITONE CAN ACT

Theatrical fame, though assured by the sponsorship of no less a celebrity than the famous Helena Modjeska, did not lure W. Richard Guiberson, when offered a promising role in a company controlled by the great Polish actress. It was the love of music and especially of song and singing which caused Guiberson to decline this offer to the amazement of his friends. The Los Angeles baritone has been acclaimed in the East as well as in his own State and, urged by many admirers accepted Impresario Behymer's offer to appear on the latter's Philharmonic Auditorium course January 13, next, in a recital of his own.

1/3 to 1/2 Less

Monday! What opportunity awaits home lovers who really appreciate the acquisition of truly fine things. Old World pieces . . . richly decorated, hand-carved . . . imbued with all the feeling of Medieval color and charm. Now brought to YOU at prices that are well within the reach of every home.

The May Company representatives abroad, acting for the SIX May Company stores, secured a large shipment at unexpected concessions. Joining this is the collection of a New York importer, who, under contract with European factories for maximum shipments, was willing to turn over a certain portion on a practically 'no-profit' basis.

Thus purchases aggregating about $100,000 were consummated. $50,000 worth is this store's share alone. Which means that you may buy this fine IMPORTED furniture at actual savings of ONE-THIRD to ONE-HALF the usual prices.

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

> Treat yourself to beauty. The right is ours to possess, in our surroundings, that which feeds the soul through the eyes. A group of lovely pottery, vases housing dainty flowers, a picture which pleases in the home or in the office, serve to uplift the thought, to inspire toward better work, and instead of being unwise extravagance, are incentive toward better living. And what, save better living, can be the objective of human existence?

Apprehending?

Shall we be driven into trains? This is the most momentous question just now besetting couture. Some of the most stunning evening gowns wearing the hip pannier, also wear an insidious train suspended therefrom. Those who remember the bothersome train of some years ago, that train which always was a stumbling block to man, during the dance, are sending up silent petitions to Fashion, that she withhold the train. Of course the train, as presented by the panniered evening gown, exercises a strong appeal. But, this is not an exacting train. It easily may be carried scarf-wise across the arm, upon occasion.

Small Bead Choker

One of the newest chokers is of very small beads, strung chain-wise into a rounded rope. These, especially in colors, jade, blue, red or gold, are exceptionally pretty and also, let us whisper, they serve to conceal those disfiguring wrinkles which persist in appearing below the chin, when a few pounds are lost or when—but no, no! Age never appears—not in this age!

Fur Sleeves

Fur finds many ways of inserting itself, of exerting its charm, in the newest wraps. One way is to become the sleeves of a fabric coat. A striking coat in black, of handsome weave, has sleeves of snowy ermine, the ermine also fashioning the high, long collar.

From Afar

Enlightening as to the many foreign countries from which are drawn the products used here, was the window exposition at that big Broadway store during the week. Grouped separately, and grouped artistically, their articles sent the thoughts to roam in remotest countries.

There were shown art objects and furniture from China; potteries, fabrics and garments from Austria; rubber sponges from Germany; children's dresses from Hungary; tams from France and Austria; tweed garments from England; wrist watches from Switzerland, art articles and dress accessories from Czecho; fabrics from the same source; linens from Ireland; while the quota from France, always extensive, was even more than imaginarily interesting.

Sponge Toys

The child who objects to bathing, could not but forget all else, when furnished with one or more of the toyful sponges, of the rubber family. There is scarcely an animal, bird or shape but is represented in these sponges. By means of these, bath-time becomes play-time.

Similar Bath-Mats

Promise that when the tubbing is completed, he shall step forth onto a bath-mat of rubber quite as interesting and colorful as are his bath sponges, should prove further inducement to the bath-objecting child. The rubber bath-mats grow more beautiful with each importation. True works of art, these may be chosen to correspond with the color plan of the bathroom. Many are poetically suggestive of water stretches, or of cool pools where water lilies thrive.

Face Hugging

Newest of the fine felts for fall hug the face most closely. Shaped similarly to the aviation cap, these hats leave little, if any, of the wearer's hair exposed. Colors are in harmony, if not exactly matching the garment with which they are worn and shapes are almost innocent of trimming, the merest motif, or self-felt serving as sole decoration.

Sequin Millinery

Dress hats, on the other hand, are all aglitter. Sequins, applied to lace or net, cover these from brim to crown. Not only the usual colors in these glitterings appear—gold, silver, bronze, steel—but other, brighter tints are shown, tints to match the frocks or wraps with whic hthey are worn, purples, blues, rose tints, green.

The Mood of the Mode

Some fur coats are lined with jersey cloth.

Oxford cloth is a favorite for the new coat.

Small muffs will be carried again this winter.

Some new sports crepes include woolen threads for warmth.

Shawl collars with overlapping points are seen on winter coats.

New coats show linings of the same color as the fur with which they are trimmed.

Copies of antiques in gold jewelry are being worn this fall.

A belt and purse of bright striped silk are new fall accessories.

Wide open-work silver bracelets, to be worn on each cuff of a sweater, are new.

A new umbrella has a leather-covered handle and waterproof case of black patent leather.

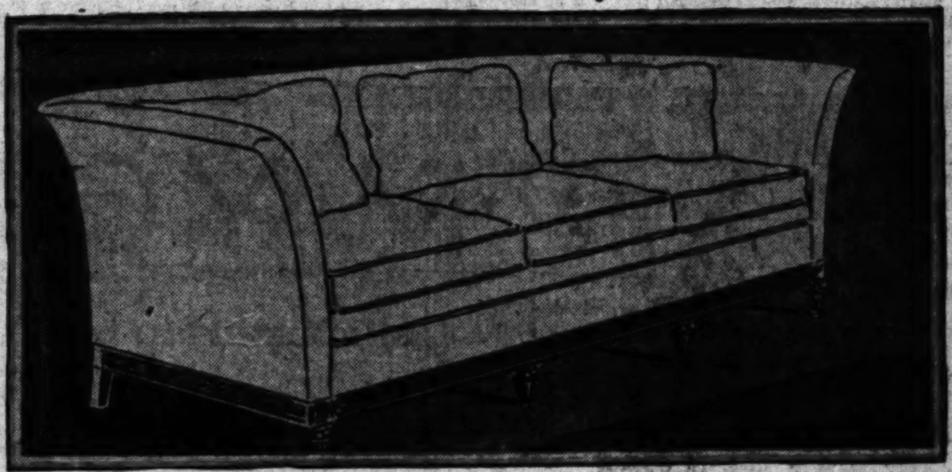
A new bag of black antelope has a pouch on the outside, in which to carry a handkerchief.

To match the evening shoes velvet envelope bags are trimmed with lines of silver leather.

Gloves of beige doeskin, in the tailored mannish mode, are smart worn with a brown fall suit.

Four Sofas By Barker Bros. Assure Their Fashion Importance Through Preference For English Lines

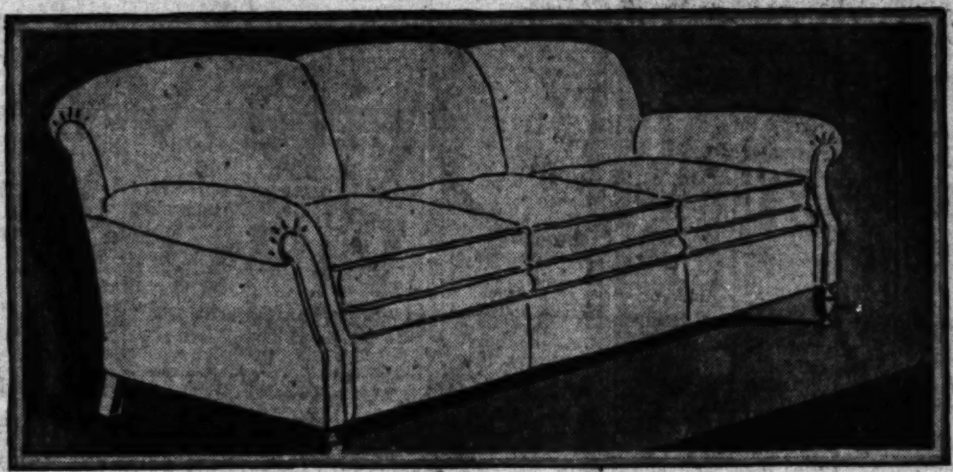
Four sofas by Barker Bros. all in the spirit of the new mode ...the adaptation of English traditions to the needs of modern homes. Whether they embody the more severe, direct types of the 17th Century or the delicate, feminine lines borrowed from 18th Century French design, they are correct... offering perfect assurance of fashion importance.



Features Georgian Lines. Uncovered, $100

THE CLASSIC lines of Georgian furniture find admirable parallel in this fashionable sofa. Nor has livability been neglected, for separate spring cushions and three luxurious back pillows offer the utmost in comfort. Many distinguished types of covering offer wide variety for choosing, presenting the opportunity to create a piece in perfect accord with your interior scheme. Same model with down cushions is priced at $135. Sketched at left.

Fabrics of every type in very wide variety make choice of covering a pleasure.



English Lounging Sofa. Uncovered, $85

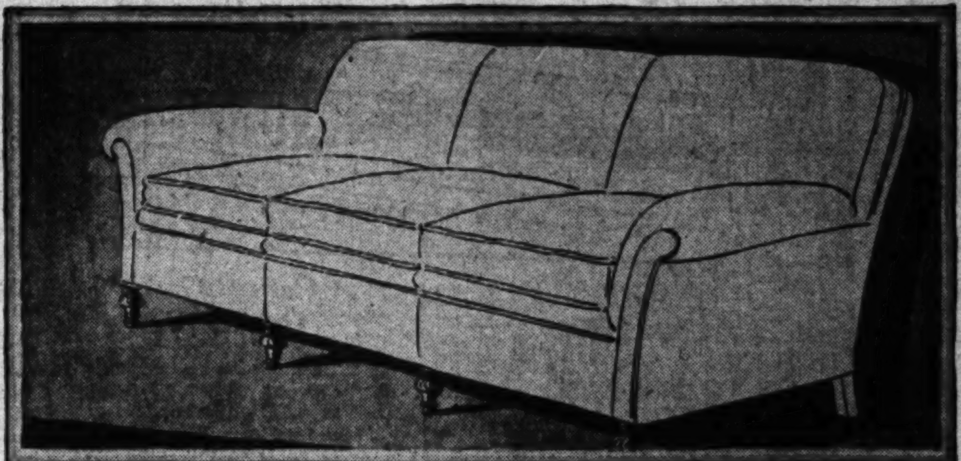
EVEN a casual glance at this interesting sofa speaks of comfort and relaxation, for the separate spring cushions and spring back were made for leisure hours. Jacobean in influence, reflecting the simple, direct lines and decidedly masculine note of this period. A wealth of fascinating coverings awaits your choosing, offering unlimited possibilities in creating a piece which becomes the important unit of the liviag room. Skctched at left.

Texture of fabrics is important—and at Barker Bros. there are all textures.

Sofa of Impressive Design. Uncovered, $155

A WORTHY rival to the famous models created by the 17th Century English upholsterers, whose art has been traditional for generations. Luxurious down cushions, deep spring back, subtly designed that it in no way detracts from the sleek, sophisticated lines that distinguish this sofa. Handsome coverings suggest themselves for this piece, promising a sofa that will lend extreme individuality to your room. (Second from bottom.) Sketched right.

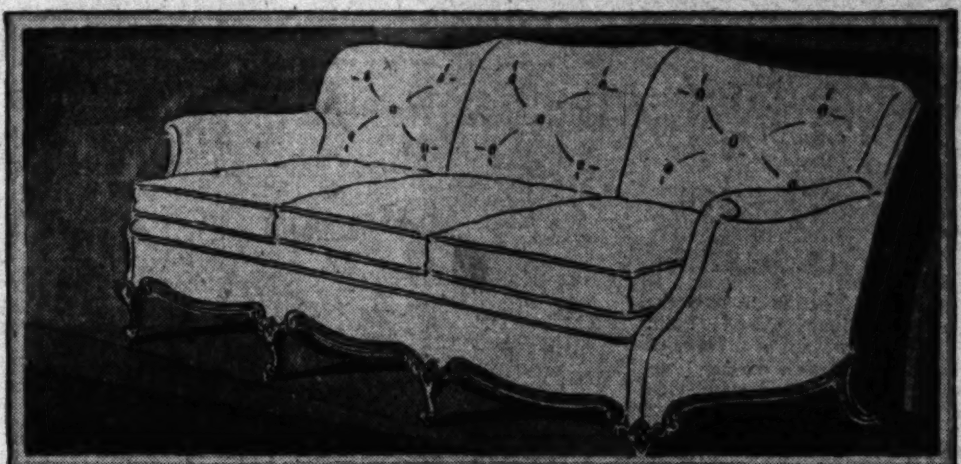
The wide price range on upholstery fabrics makes it possible to keep to a stated budget.



A Sofa With French Details. Uncovered, $225

FOR THE more formal living room, this sofa presents the ultimate in grace and beauty. Dignified, in the manner of the Georgian era, delicate through its charming French details, yet withal a piece that answers every modern demand for comfort. Loose down cushions, deep tufted back — luxurious, smart! And, of course, exquisite coverings to add the important touch to this unusually impressive piece. Sketched right.

Pieces shown are obtainable already covered, prices depending upon the type of upholstery.



Jacobean Tapestry

THE heavier type of coverings suggest themselves for the English lounging sofa. Particularly effective is a tapestry fabric in old green with a Jacobean design. Yard priced at $10.

Mohair Frieze

SUGGESTING paneled walls and heavy beamed ceilings, the 17th Century English sofa requires a dignified, impressive type of covering. Imported mohair frieze is most suitable. Yard at $12.

Antique Satin

LIGHTER fabrics, such as satins, damasks and silk velvets form exquisite coverings for the Georgian sofa. An antique satin in [illegible] blue is a happy choice. Yard priced at $10.

Henna Brocade

FOR THE "French trend" sofa, a covering that portrays the elegance of 18th Century life is charming. An unusually lovely brocade in mellow henna tones is outstanding. Yard $12.

The increasing vogue for furniture reflecting the inspiration of English pieces is not a matter of chance...it is a studied development in harmony with modern ideas of suitability. Because it possesses the indelible stamp of distinction, extreme livability and the necessary sophistication, it has found utmost favor in contemporary interiors. At Barker Bros. you will find all types... and prices to meet every need.

SALESMEN

MAKE $50 A WEEK

PART TIME

No matter what line of selling you are engaged in, you can make $50 a week and up by "cashing in" on the by-product of your sales effort.

You come in daily contact with people who are thinking along the lines we are operating—namely: Financial Independence through small monthly savings, and who would appreciate your bringing THE FORTUNE COLONY'S Plan to their attention. This is done thru the medium of a 32-page book, entitled "An Independent Income," which they read and understand, and understanding — buy.

Independent, Life-time Incomes are provided thru THE COLONY'S Plan of Income Estates. The lands are handled thru Trust and payments are made to a local bank. The income begins right from the start and the development is sponsored by a group of 22 prominent men, who would grace the directorate of any Los Angeles Bank.

Write today for a complimentary copy of our book on Independence. Read it yourself and if the plan appeals to you as fair and sensible, we will show you how, without interfering with your present duties, you can add at least $50 to your weekly income. (Full-time workers are making five times this amount.) This applies to both men and women.

Just write a post card to IRVIN D. QUICK, Secretary, 607 So. Western Avenue, Los Angeles, and say: "Mail me a copy of 'An Independent Income' and your proposition to part-time workers."

THE TELEPHONE ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT OF

The Los Angeles Times

will accept the application of a few well qualified young women who are capable of filling permanent positions in the above department.

Those chosen must meet fully the requirements of the work.

Applicants must be neat, bright, alert, quick thinking, with good eyesight, a clear, distinct voice, good hearing and an attractive personality.

The ability to use good English and spell correctly is absolutely essential.

A sufficient length of residence in Los Angeles to insure a knowledge of streets and territorial divisions is required.

As this is largely selling work, persons of a timid, retiring nature will not be successful.

This offers an unusual opportunity for those interested in advertising to affiliate with one of the leading newspaper organizations of the country.

Only those who desire a permanent, worth-while position will be considered.

Apply
116 North Broadway
Between 10 & 11 a.m. only
MONDAY, SEPT. 24TH.

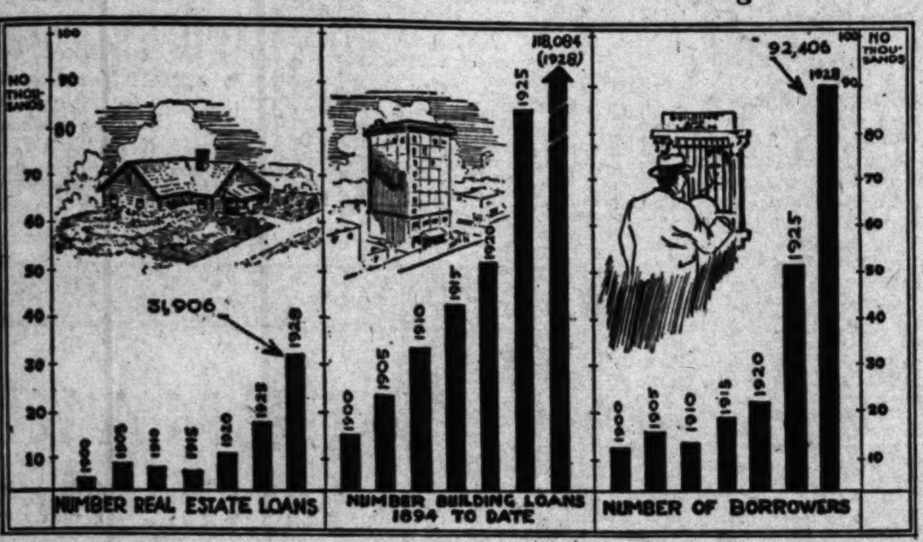
Charts Reflect Realty Soundness Over Long Period



FACT AND COMMENT

FACT AND COMMENT traveled to the Southwest's three national parks last week with an eye peeled for engineering feats, bits of architecture whether by nature or man made, projects and anything that savored of development.

In a background of unsurpassed scenic wonders, a singularly difficult water project was discovered nestling at the bottom of mile-deep Grand Canyon. Water is being lifted from Roaring Springs more than 3000 feet to the new lodge on the North Rim. That feat was accomplished in January when snow and ice imperiled the workers. At one point a vertical section of solid rock was scaled by man to place the stays for water pipe. Carl R. Gray, president of Union Pacific, was one of the first to inspect the project, at the risk of his life. To take materials to the site of operations at bottom of Grand Canyon, seventeen towers to hold a three-inch steel cable were necessary. They were placed, of necessity, in the most difficult positions conceivable.

At Zion National Park a tunnel one mile and a quarter is almost completed through solid rock at a cost of $2,000,000. It will be the route for the Zion-Mt. Carmel Highway, which will slash sixty miles off the route from Zion to Grand Canyon and eliminate some poor road. It is one of the most spectacular engineering feats in the world. At intervals throughout the tunnel, openings to vistas of great canyons are provided.

Rustic Architecture

For rustic architecture, the grandeur of Grand Canyon Lodge, million-dollar project of the Union Pacific on the North Rim, is perhaps unexcelled. Lodge and cabins are of exquisite design and planning, the work of a Los Angeles architect, Gilbert Stanley Underwood. Lodges at Zion, Bryce Canyon National Park, Cedar Breaks and Cedar City are also outstanding.

Roads are constantly being improved by Utah and Arizona. In the language of an auctioneer, the road improvements are "too numerous to mention."

Unjust Representation

Opposition to the present reapportionment program under Constitutional Amendment 28, which was approved in the 1926 election, was voiced last week by directors of the Los Angeles Realty Board.

In a resolution the directors ask support of the realty board

The upper chart based on building and loan associations' investments in California real estate since 1900, and the lower chart indicating the trend of Los Angeles county recordings since 1908, show clearly the upward trend that has been evident since early years of the State and county's growth.

More than 2000 property transfers were made within the city limits during the two weeks' period of September 7th to September 21st, inclusive, with activity centering principally in the southwest, Wilshire, San Fernando Valley, and Hollywood districts, according to the regular weekly survey prepared by the Standard Mortgage Company and based on filings as published in the Los Angeles Daily Recorder.

The report covering the last week gives indication of the approaching fall activity. During the week just closed every district in the city, except two, showed marked increase in volume of activity and the losses in these two districts were of slight importance.

SAN FERNANDO VALLEY

The San Fernando Valley had the biggest increase in activity, as indicated by deeds filed, with a total of 174 transfers last week, as compared with ninety-seven during the week ending the 14th inst., a gain for the week just closed of seventy-seven. The Southwest section was second in point of increase, with a total for the last week of 276, an increase of seventy-one over the week preceding. The Wilshire district ranked third in gain with an increase of fifty-seven, and the Hollywood section showed an increase for the week of thirty.

In the Los Angeles Harbor district there was a gain of twenty-three; in the West Washington district a gain of fourteen; in the Westgate-Sawtelle section, a gain of twenty; in the Elysian Park district, a gain of seven; in the Boyle Heights district, an increase of eighteen; in the Vernon industrial district, a gain of three; in the Venice-Playa Del Rey district, a gain of eight; in the Westlake Park district, a gain of thirteen, and in the Central Business district, a gain of six.

HIGHLAND PARK LOSES

The Highland Park section showed a loss of eleven for the last week, as compared with the preceding week, and the Eagle Rock district a loss of four.

The marked increase in transfers throughout the city is regarded as marking the end of the dull summer season and the approach of greater increased activity for the fall and winter months.

In the realty financing market during the last week there was a corresponding upward tendency in activity with ten of the fifteen districts showing distinct gains in valuation of new financing.

Increased activity throughout the

PACIFIC TRADE STATUS STUDIED

Growing Power of Coast Told in Session

Numerous Executives Figure in Complete Analysis

Shipping Board Member Cites Commerce Gains

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

Statistics impressive and significant and achievements far-reaching and encouraging were presented with attention-compelling ability to the consideration of the Pacific Foreign Trade Council convention here during the week. But dominant was the spirit of energy which animates progress toward not only making the Pacific the chief center of the world's commerce, but also thereby bringing into accord great nations that through a new mutual understanding powerfully will influence the well-being of the world.

In this sixth annual meeting, the organization gave powerful evidence of its wide scope and prestige. The cultural side of foreign trade contact was emphasized and it was received with marked favor.

There was a well-balanced blending of theory and practice in talks coming from representatives of all branches of the foreign export trade, from bankers, educators, governmental officials, and speakers from far reaches of the world.

REPRESENTATIVE SPEAKERS

An Egyptian Pasha brought the information that though his country has been growing date palms for the past 10,000 years, it has remained for Southern California to advance the culture of date palms brought here from Egypt, Mesopotamia and other trans-Pacific regions.

A Supreme Court justice of British Columbia drew a vivid word picture of the historical background of the nations that rim the Pacific and from his words came a colorful vision of great international possibilities fostered by commerce, and the commercial attache of the Mexican Embassy told importantly of Mexican trade.

An American Consul traveled more than 8000 miles to tell of affairs in his part of South America.

A college professor urged a foreign trade laboratory for research indicating the definite trend of transoceanic business.

MERCHANT MARINE ANGLES

Not only was the glory that was of the American merchant marine forcibly brought to notice in interesting historical review and references, but there was detailed presentation of what has happened to it and why the American flag tops so comparatively few trade vessels that plow their way to foreign ports.

A speaker urged governmental subsidy, and a Secretary of Merchant Marine; and the higher cost of ship construction in this country as compared with various foreign nations was stressed.

But what was not tossed into the convention for official consideration was the vigorous plaint that has welled up from the heart of the American shipping endeavor through the years anent the solar-plexus wallop that the La Follette seamen's act is accused of having dealt to the American merchant marine.

GREAT RECORD

From the sowing here of the seed of foreign trade during the middle of the experimental nineties, to this day when the business through the Port of Los Angeles is contemplating the billion-dollars-a-year mark, there has been written a chapter of trade progress that occupies a foremost place in the history of commerce. It is both an incentive and an aid to our entire Pacific Coast foreign trade advance.

What the Pacific Coast has done in commerce expansion was graphically outlined by Capt. Samuel S. Sandberg, Los Angeles, member of the United States Shipping Board, who, in the course of a paper, gave the information that:

"Foreign trade on the Pacific Coast has had a remarkable growth, having increased from a total of less than 6,000,000 tons in 1921, to more than 16,000,000 tons in 1927, a gain of 178 per cent.

"In 1921 the foreign trade through Pacific Coast ports amounted to 7 per cent of the total water-borne commerce of the United States. This has increased to 16 per cent in 1927.

"In 1921 the import trade of over 1,000,000 tons has increased 107 per cent, to nearly 3,000,000 tons.

"The export trade shows an advance of 200 per cent, from over 4,000,000 tons in 1921 to over 13,000,000 tons in 1927."

When in 1921 five ports were handling nearly 92 per cent of the

September in Building Lead

Holding a lead of more than $250,000 over the corresponding period last year, city building permits for the twenty-one days of September have reached $6,882,436, according to the city building superintendent.

Outstanding in the week's permits was one for a height-limit bank building at the northeast corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Vine street, and another for a height-limit apartment-house at 450 Rossmore. The comparative tabulation follows:

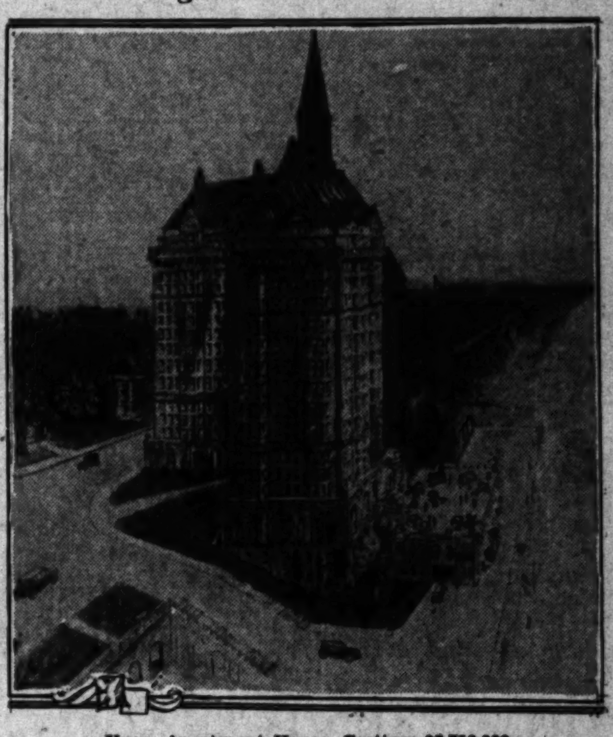
Second Highest Structure in County



Huge Apartment-House Costing $2,750,000

Rising 283 feet at its highest point, the apartment project shown above is rapidly nearing completion at Long Beach. It will rank as second only to the Los Angeles City Hall in height.

SKYSCRAPER RISES RAPIDLY

Completion of Long Beach Apartment Project Set for Thanksgiving Day

Rapid progress is being made on the construction of Villa Riviera, the $2,750,000 apartment-house at Ocean Boulevard and Alamitos avenue, Long Beach, and plans call for its completion by Thanksgiving Day.

With an elevation of fourteen stories on Ocean Boulevard and sixteen stories fronting the ocean, Villa Riviera will be exceeded in height in Southern California only by the Los Angeles City Hall. It is 283 feet from the ground to the dome.

The apartment is unique in that it is to be a co-operative institution in which each lease owner will be part owner of the building, the management of which will be in the hands of a board of governors chosen from leaders in Long Beach financial, commercial and industrial circles.

There will be 120 apartments and 364 rooms with ten apartments to a floor. A ballroom, an Italian roof garden, lounges and other recreational features will make the structure a community in itself.

Equipment includes high-speed elevators, vacuum type heating, dressing rooms for bathers, maids' quarters and a 100-car garage. John J. Hernan has been named manager of the building.

CITY HOTEL TRADED FOR DAIRY RANCH

Porterville Brothers Get Antlers in Los Angeles for 320 Acres

PORTERVILLE, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—James H. and Michael D. Gilligan have traded their 320-acre dairy ranch, eleven miles west of Porterville, for the Hotel Antlers in Los Angeles, according to report. The Hotel Antlers is at Fourth and Hill in the southern city. Gilligan brothers will take over the establishment immediately.

Anderson, Gourley and Woodruff, new owners of the dairy ranch, plan extensive improvements and will add to the herd of cattle.

A. B. Johnson and Orin McCabe of Hollywood acted as brokers in the transaction. McCabe is a former Porterville resident.

SEPTEMBER BUILDING AT HIGH TOTAL

Westwood Hills Area Out in Front With Record for Three-Week Period

The three-week building permit record for the Westwood Hills area during September has established a new high record for all time, according to advice from the Janss Investment Company this week.

A total of $453,510 is reported for the period. Starting the 5th inst., with $128,270 and following with weekly totals of $176,290 and $148,950 for the 12th and 19th inst., the total for September to date is expected to swell to more than $550,000 before the month is out—exceeding by more than 20 per cent any previous high mark.

A check of permits for the past ninety days in Westwood Hills shows an average of nearly one residential permit for each working day during the period, not including permits for business and income structures.

Ground Broken for Three New Seaside Homes

Ground was broken during the week for three more residences for individual owners in Huntington Palisades, according to L. A. Hardie, sales manager of this division of the Santa Monica Land & Water Co.

"With several homes approximating a total construction cost of close to $150,000 now nearing the completion stage and another $50,000 represented by the homes for which ground was broken this past week, Huntington Palisades is enjoying an era of intense building activity," says Hardie. "The pertinent feature of this building interest is that the homes are being built for private by contractors or builders for resale."

CONTRACT AWARDED

HUNTINGTON PARK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Reid & Alexander, local contractors, have been awarded the contract for the Allen & Rowland building, to be erected in the 300 block on South Pacific Boulevard. The building is to be a one-story structure with four small and one large store room. The building frontage will be 114 feet, and a depth of 140 feet.

WORK ON PACKING HOUSES SPEEDED

LINDSAY, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Work is being rushed on two packing-houses on the Santa Fe right of way, one for the Pepper Fruit Company at the Locke-street crossing and the other for Fred Krinard at the Hermosa-street crossing. The Pepper house will handle both citrus and green fruits. Its cost is estimated at $60,000. Addition of these two houses will make a total of seventeen packing-plants in the Lindsay district and will strengthen Lindsay's claim to being the largest single orange-shipping point in the world.

POINTS AND POINTERS—

PROFITS

In September, 1924, we sold to a client 100 feet on Vine street near Sunset Boulevard. Three years later we resold this property to another client. It produced for the original purchaser a profit of 84.2% on the entire purchase price; or approximately 28% per year.

Many conservative investments in well located vacant sites have resulted in very substantial profits, and with the great expansion now going on in Los Angeles we believe the "turnover" will be satisfactory.

BURBANK ADDS NEW SCHOOLS

Facilities for 2500 More Students Provided

Only 1 Cent Increase in City's Tax Levy

Enrollment Shows Decided Gain Over 1927

BURBANK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Facilities for 2500 more students, made possible by a recent bond issue of $763,000, which allowed the construction of a new junior high school, a new elementary school and additions to every school building in the city—all provided for by only a 1-cent increase in the school tax—that is the record of the Burbank Board of Education.

With a school levy of $1.82 this year, Burbank has gained adequate room to give its boys and girls educational advantages without crowding for the next three or four years, J. O. Bishop, president of the board, declared today.

CROWDING JUST STARTING

"Burbank was just beginning to feel the effects of cramped school quarters. Judging by the increased enrollment during the past six years, I am confident that we will have facilities to care for the city's students for at least four years to come."

Presenting one phase of the city's advancement, the figures of the first week's enrollment in the public schools here show that 454 more pupils than last year's opening week registered for the 1928-29 term.

There are 3389 enrolled here this year, as compared with 2935 who registered at the end of the first month of school last year.

The personnel of the school board includes Bishop, the president, a banker; Duncan Forsyth, a well-known contractor and business man; Dr. Edward Butterfield, a physician; Ray Sence and W. P. Coffman, both business men.

TO BE OPEN SOON

All of the additions to the present school plants here will be ready for occupancy shortly after the first of next month, while the new buildings will open the first of next semester.

The new school buildings are modeled after the prevailing Spanish design and will include a large auditorium in each of the two institutions.

The eighth elementary school building, now under construction, is located in the northwest section of the city, and the new junior high school is in the center of the valley section of Burbank.

Frank A. Henderson, the new superintendent of schools, who took office July 1, is reported to be collaborating with the school board in the program of conservative administration and has already made a number of constructive suggestions for the betterment of the system.

With the completion of the new school buildings, Burbank will have one senior high school with 509 students enrolled, two junior high schools with 832 pupils and eight elementary schools, whose total enrollment amounts to 2048 pupils.

This year 137 instructors have been elected to teach in the various schools here.

Two Business Holdings Sold

Sales of the northeast corner of Twelfth and Main streets, improved with six brick stores, and of a three-story brick store and loft building at 528 South Los Angeles street is reported this week by W. J. Kelly, local broker.

SUBDIVISION OPPORTUNITY

Unforeseen circumstances compel disposing of 4000 acres Arizona land at $4.50 per acre. Railway through property. Local investors have purchased adjoining 1500 acres at $200 to $250 per 10-acre tract without advertising or expert sales organization effort. This 4000 acres, if sold on same basis, would net subdivider approximately $50,000 after paying subdivider's commission. Subdivision plans, official survey maps, photographs, salesmen's selling outfits, printed forms and quantity of attractive printed folders, along with charter and transfer of shares issued by incorporated company owning property, all thrown in as a bonus, making it a complete ready-to-go proposition for the man or syndicate that can pay $1.50 per acre down within next few days. Balance of payments extended over period sufficient for live subdivider to meet further payments from sales, providing the wholesale purchaser does not want to hold the 4000 acres intact for investment. BUILDING AND LOAN

California building and loan associations made 31,906 real estate loans, principally on residential property, during the fiscal year closed June 30th, last, according to the annual report just submitted to Gov. Young by George S. Walker, State Building and Loan Commissioner. The average amount of loan is $2333.

Of this number 10,465 represent loans for building purposes most of which are repayable on the regular monthly payment plan in general use. This brings the total number of building loans from 1924 to date to 118,084.

During the last year 7407, loans were granted for improving old buildings. Associations have always shown an interest in aiding the home-owners to finance improvements. The percentage of building loans to real estate loans was 32.79 and the percentage of loans repaid during the year was 21.93.

COMPARISONS DRAWN

On Page 1 interesting comparisons can be made by reference to the chart. The number of real estate loans has doubled since 1920, while the number of building loans has more than doubled in the last eight years. In the same period the number of borrowers has increased from approximately 25,000 to more than 92,000, or 270 per cent, attesting to the widening sphere of influence of the building and loan movement in the loaning field. It is noteworthy that 25 per cent of the building and loan assets of the State are in the thirty-four Los Angeles associations and it is fair to assume that the same proportion of the business represented by the chart is done by local institutions.

Combined resources of California associations as of June 30, last, totaled $337,706,757, or a gain of $74,265,243, in the preceding twelve months, the greatest increase of any yearly period. This tremendous influx of new money has, in the main, been absorbed in the regular channels of business. The percentage of new loans to loans in force—over 47 per cent—is convincing proof of the increase in popularity of the monthly repayment loan plan for the man who owns and occupies his home.

FACT AND COMMENT

in disapproving the enforcement of Amendment 28 which will be submitted in a referendum on the November ballot.

That Los Angeles county, with a population of approximately 2,300,000 or 40 per cent of the State, should have only the same representation as Butte county, for example, is obviously unjust. Marion county has only 45,000 people, and Del Norte and Siskiyou counties have a joint population of only 22,000. Under the new amendment, those counties would be equal in representation to Los Angeles county.

Realty Governors

A proposal has been advanced for the creation of a board of governors for the State Real Estate Department which would pass on matters of policy in connection with real estate business under State regulation.

Inasmuch as control now rests with one individual, the State Real Estate Commissioner, the plan seems to have merit in that it would give brokers themselves some representation in the direction of the affairs of 58,000 California realty dealers. For one man to oversee 58,000 realty operators in one State rivals the troubles of the "Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe." To give the "old woman's" children a say in the management of the household, would have been folly. But when seasoned brokers who know their game thoroughly are given a voice in the policy of regulating a great profession, it would seem a wise move.

Eleven States now have such boards of governors. They oversee enforcement of real estate acts of the kind California adopted ten years ago, and which was copied by other States. There are six times as many persons engaged in the real estate business in California than before the World War. The income of the State Real Estate Department is $200,000 per year, making it one of the largest of the self-supporting branches of government. If proposed legislation is passed by the State Legislature, the income will be increased to $400,000 per year.

Southern California will find special interest in the proposal for a board of governors inasmuch as two-thirds of the 58,000 brokers in this State are in the southern territory.

FOUR DEALS ANNOUNCED BY CONCERN

Two Leases and Same Number of Sales Closed During Week

Increased business necessitating removal to larger quarters the entry of a British firm into Southern California markets and the investment possibilities of Los Angeles business property were the basic reasons governing the conclusion of two business property leases and a similar number of sales through the W. Ross Campbell Company, business property brokers, according to O. S. Lair, secretary-treasurer of the firm.

At a figure reported as $20,000, the Atlas Brass Foundry purchased the property at 1911 Santa Fe avenue which has a frontage of forty feet and a depth of 140 feet. The new owners will erect an iron-factory building on the property immediately, and when this is completed their production space will be increased 33 1-3 per cent, according to executives of the firm.

The one-story brick building located at 379 Hewitt street was leased to the Pioneer Paper and Printing Company for twelve years at approximately $24,000. The building, which was recently completed, contains a total of 4800 square feet of floor space. The lessees have occupied their new quarters.

Entering the Southern California market from England, the Electrolux Company, Inc., marketers and manufacturers of vacuum cleaners, leased office space which will serve as the firm's headquarters in this section in the Chester A. Wiliams Building. Two thousand feet of space on the fourth floor are affected by the lease which was drawn for a term of three years at a total rental approximating $13,000.

As an investment Edna and Ethel Lem purchased the property at 116 East Twenty-third street. The property has a frontage of forty feet and a depth of 134. The price was said to be in excess of $11,000. The property is unimproved and no improvements will be made by the new owners.

city as a whole is reflected in the fact that there were 1356 deeds recorded last week, as against 1024 during the previous, week a gain of 332. Mortgage and trust-deed filings for the week totaled 1156 with a valuation of $5,742,377.86, as compared with 948 such instruments, valued at $5,160,996.28, during the previous week. Releases of mortgage last week numbered 454, and there were 639 trust deeds reconveyed.

BUILDING LEASED

VISALIA, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Completion of negotiations by J. T. Morgan, owner of Morgan's Market here, for purchase of the Irma B. Cole Building on East Main street for about $20,000, has been announced by Everett C. Moran, a son and partner in the establishment. This sale was made through the Edwards Realty Company of this city and was at the rate of more than $1000 a front foot.

MAJOR INTERSECTION DEVELOPED

Santa Monica Grade Cut to Provide Direct Artery

Work Costing $40,000

ONE of the most important major intersections in west Los Angeles, in the opinion of realty experts, is being developed with lowering of the car-track grade along Santa Monica Boulevard at Westwood Boulevard in Westwood Hills. Work on the improvement, which is now under way, is costing $40,000 and involves the lowering and reballasting about 3000 feet of track on both sides of the Westwood Boulevard intersection.

Westwood Boulevard, under the new plan, will become a direct through north and south artery from Pico Boulevard on the south to the site of the new University of California campus north of Wilshire Boulevard. In addition Westwood Boulevard will intersect the new University Business Village now being developed.

FIFTY-TWO HERE FOR EACH STORE

All Retail Establishments Included in Survey

Large Shopping Areas Have Bearing on Districts

Caution Urged by Eberle in Going Into Business

The weighted average ratio of persons per retail store or outlet for about fifty communities in Southern California is fifty-two persons per store; the most common items, or model averages, range between forty-five and fifty, while the median is fifty. This ratio includes practically all classes of retail stores, the persons per outlet for any particular class of stores being much higher than the average.

Those facts are contained in a report just issued by the Eberle Economic Service on the retail-store situation, which points out that the figures should be used as a guide and not as an absolute basis.

"Fifty separate persons under ordinary circumstances may not support a separate store," the report states, "but every fifty persons in a community, which is large and representative enough, can support one outlet within a group of stores, allowance being made, of course, for unprofitable outlets."

FIFTY COMMUNITIES

The Eberle analysis of its data on the fifty communities of Southern California follows: Altadena shows ninety-two persons per store, or almost twice the average, this condition existing because most of the residents there trade in Pasadena. Hawthorne, including Lennox, shows a ratio of ninety-eight, and in this case most of the trading is done in Inglewood, which has a ratio of forty-five. Maywood and Southgate with ratios of 130 and 109, respectively, and Walnut Park with a ratio of 108, have inadequate shopping centers, and most of the trading by the residents is done in Huntington Park with a ratio of forty-three, despite the latter's proximity to the large shopping center of Los Angeles. Bell may also attract shoppers from Maywood.

The low ratio of twenty-seven for Newport-Balboa is due to the many beach resorters who frequent this area and who are not included in the permanent population. The same condition exists at Venice, with a ratio of thirty-one. Van Nuys and San Fernando have low ratios because the dense rural population tributary to these centers has not been included. In the case of San Fernando, when the rural population in the vicinity is included, the ratio is increased from thirty-three to forty-six.

"Size of the city does not make any particular difference in the ratio," says the report. "Likewise, data for forty cities in the neighborhood of Chicago show the same condition. It is the location of a particular community in proximity to a large shopping center, or a highly competitive suburban shopping district, which is one of the most disturbing factors of the ratio.

CONSISTENT RATIOS

"The data submitted show fairly consistent ratios and differentials which make such information highly valuable when contemplating new retail-store districts or outlets, and also when considering the readjustment of established districts. These ratios can be used by the subdividers and the city planner and by the prospective retailer. They can and should be used by the banks and mortgage companies in financing the subdivision of lots, or the erection of buildings, or extending credit in other ways. Not only should, in some of these cases, there be applied population ratios of a static nature, but also data measuring the dynamic aspects of the districts. The wholesaler and fixture merchant, likewise, can apply these ratios and data to avoid taking undue risks and thus reduce losses."

A few chain stores and department stores proceed along scientific lines when making extensions, but in a great number of cases stores are located after the most cursory investigation and in a most haphazard manner, according to the Eberle report. Before deciding on a store location the prospective retailer should consider the character of the population, whether it is largely permanent or transient, distance from large and small shopping centers, motives and trading habits of the population, existing relations between merchandise and services offered to the various classes of buyers, the report adds.

Oil Company Moving Office

The Miley Oil Company is moving its headquarters to the Subway Terminal Building about October 1, according to the announcement issued by Louis T. Clark, manager of that building. Its enlarged quarters, the need of which necessitated the move, are to include the Olive-street wing on the seventh floor.

Dedication of Phoenix Phone Building Held

PHOENIX, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Noon luncheons and receptions to the larger of the city's clubs were a section of a program of dedication of the $200,000 addition to the Arizona headquarters building of the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company. It was stated that the corporation now has a Phoenix investment of $2,500,000.

This week a $70,000 addition to the Y.W.C.A. group on West Monroe, with inclusion of a large dormitory, already filled, was occupied.

A new warehouse, 102 x 142, has been contracted to the Eagan Construction Company by the Central Arizona Light and Power Company, on a bid of $84,808. The location is at South Third avenue and Buchanan street, close to the company's main plant.

TITLE COVERAGE BETTERED

Insurance Companies to Invest Heavily Here as Result, California Executive Finds

Southern California title insurance companies, during the last two years, have made great advances in the type of title evidence which they provide, and in the coverage afforded by their title insurance policies, with the result that the great eastern life insurance companies are each year diverting increasingly large sums into Southern California for investment in mortgages, according to L. R. Lackey, vice-president and director of the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company.

Lackey has just returned from an extensive eastern tour, during which he visited the principal cities and consulted with executives of life insurance companies.

Until recent years, Lackey said, the eastern life insurance companies were somewhat reluctant to invest in Southern California mortgages on account of the type of title evidence provided by the title companies, and because of the incomplete coverage afforded by the title insurance policies. This condition has been so thoroughly rectified that California now leads all other sections of the country in the adequacy of title service. As a result, executives of the big life insurance companies have indicated their intention of increasing their investments in Southern California mortgages, Lackey stated.

"During the coming year," Mr. Lackey said, "it is safe to predict that the investments of the eastern life insurance companies in our mortgages will exceed those of any previous year by many millions of dollars. I found, during my eastern trip, that more companies than ever before have established loan representatives here, and others are contemplating entering this field next year. The result of this is that enormous quantities of money are made available to the realty owners of Southern California at exceedingly advantageous interest rates, ranging from 5 to 6 per cent.

FERGUSON TO HEAD LUNCHEON PLANNERS

Harold G. Ferguson, vice-president of the Los Angeles Realty Board, will head a committee to have charge of the regular semi-monthly luncheon meetings of the Los Angeles Realty Board during the fall and winter months. Serving with Ferguson will be Bernard Rosenthal, member of the board's directorate. Programs for the meetings will arranged by the committee.

GLENDALE BROKER IN NEW QUARTERS

R. N. Greenlaw

R. N. Greenlaw, for the last eight years a member of the Glendale Realty Company, has established his own company, known as the Greenlaw Realty Company, and opened offices on South Brand Boulvard.

Completion of the Hyperion-Glendale bridge will result in stimulated business in all branches of real estate in "the fastest growing city," according to Greenlaw.

ESTATOR! FINE NAME, EH WOT!

Britons Tag Realtors in Language All Their Own

"Realtors" are an unknown quantity in England, according to C. W. Grant, director of the Los Angeles Realty Board, who is enjoying a three months' tour of Europe.

In a letter received by Tom Ingersoll from Grant last week, he tells of experiencing considerable difficulty in explaining to the custom and passport officers at Dover just what his occupation was when he stated that he was a "realtor." On discovering that his business corresponded to that of an "estator" in England, and that he was not only from California but from Los Angeles, he was bombarded with questions about conditions here.

Brokers Guests at Runnymede

Runnymede brokers were entertained at a dinner given by D. H. Riker, president of the Runnymede Company, at El Caballero Country Club on Friday evening. El Caballero club was originally built by Gen. Otis for his country estate and later occupied by Edgar Rice Burroughs.

There are now more than 100 brokers handling Runnymede and they are located in every section of Los Angeles and its environs. A new group of buildings for housing the rapidly growing flocks, now numbering approximately 140,000 laying hens, is under way on the north side of Blythe street, representing the first construction on this side of that street, and work is nearing completion on the big addition to the egg grading and packing warehouse.

City Donates Plunge Funds

North Hollywood is to have a swimming pool 50x175 feet and bath-house ready for next summer's business. This was made possible by the City Playground Commission last week appropriating another $10,000 for the project. The July 1 playground budget carried an item of $20,000 for the plunge, but this was not sufficient to complete the project in the way of a bath-house. The playground commission transferred the needed $10,000 from another fund, assuring the building of the project.

The plunge will be located in the heart of the Studio City area. The bath-house will carry out the Spanish architecture motif which will predominate in all buildings in the park section.

MARKET PURCHASED

HUNTINGTON PARK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The California Market in the Masonic Temple has been sold by G. J. Woodward to Berk Brothers, who are the owners of three other stores in Los Angeles county. They expect to remove their main office to this city.

BOND FEES OF BROKERS AGAIN CUT

Second Reduction in Last Two Years Obtained by Real Estate Men

For the second time in two years the legislative council of the California Real Estate Association has obtained from the Towner Rating Bureau of New York a substantial reduction in the premium for the $2000 real estate brokers' bond required by the California Real Estate License Act.

The first cut two year ago brought the fee from $20 to $15. The new ruling requires but a $10 fee from brokers.

"This is a very material reduction and is given to California real estate brokers because of their improved experience," wrote R. H. Towner in a letter announcing the new rate.

PACIFIC TRADE STATUS STUDIED

Pacific Coast's entire foreign trade, Los Angeles was fourth in the list in trade volume, so the captain told it. "In 1921 these ports handled 99 per cent of the import tonnage and 90 per cent of the export cargoes."

The same five ports topped the Pacific Coast in trade volume in 1927 and with Los Angeles in first place followed by San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Tacoma in the order named, he pointed out, and the further gratifying information that the total 1927 tonnage through these ports was greater by 151 per cent than six years previously.

In every way and from every angle there is conclusive evidence that in scientific and practical procedure, adaptive celerity and inventive genius, accomplishment and outlook, the Pacific Coast is becoming more effectually "foreign-trade minded."

Nine Receive Diplomas for Appraisal Work

The members of the appraisal class of the Hollywood branch, Los Angeles Realty Board, were presented diplomas at the regular mid-week luncheon by Dean Campbell, professor of accounting of the University of Southern California.

Those receiving diplomas were George W. Zent, Ayers J. DuBois, Bernard J. Wall, Dan E. Lane, Arthur Darling, H. P. Dyer, C. W. Griffin, James Turnbull and Frank Miles. The entire class has voted to continue the appraisal study.

Broker Hurt in Car Crash

Leo A. White, broker of the Southwest region and chairman of publicity committee, Southwest branch—Los Angeles Realty Board—was injured in an automobile accident near San Bernardino last Sunday, while returning from Big Bear Lake.

Mr. White's wife, who was returning with him, was also injured. They were removed to a hospital at San Bernardino and returned to Los Angeles Monday evening.

Preliminary plans have been adopted by the Board of Education for a $350,000 new building to be erected at the Audubon Junior High School site.

CLUBHOUSE AT NORCO PROJECTED

Golf Structure Designed for Tract Project in Riverside Vicinity

Rex B. Clark, head of the Lake Norconian project near Riverside, has authorized the construction of a $100,000 clubhouse for the golf course at Norco. This will be in addition to the resort hotel and other buildings.

Bud Dwyer, golfing head of the D. J. Dwyer Company, was commissioned to design a clubhouse from the viewpoint of a practical golfer after making a study of what had been accomplished elsewhere in buildings of the type. Architecturally, both inside and out, the Norconian structure will follow lines typical of early California. The roof will be of varying contours of hand-made massive mission tiles. A Spanish tower will house the entrance and reception hall. There will be beamed ceilings, hand-decorated in bright Spanish colors. Everything is designed with an eye to convenience. A hallway to the left of the reception-room leads to the women's locker-room. To the right is a beautiful arcade, which leads to the grill, lounge room and men's lockers. The clubhouse will be a nonmembership proposition.

GRADE CROSSING PLAN HASTENED

City Takes Action Toward Separation Project

Ninth and Tenth Streets to be Made Wide Arteries

Heavy Traffic Expected to Follow Improvements

Looking forward to increased traffic along Ninth street when the Tenth-street opening and widening project is completed, the City Council has taken definite action toward the separation of grades of the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific tracks at Lemon street.

Tenth street is to be opened and widened from the western section of the city to San Pedro street, where it will connect with Ninth street, which, in turn, will be widened and improved to the east city limits.

The construction of a 100-foot through traffic artery through the city will invite additional through traffic, which necessitates the grade separation. Lemon street is between Alameda street and the new Ninth-street bridge.

COST TO BE SPLIT

Under agreement, the city will pay 20 per cent and the railroad 80 per cent of the cost of separation. The City Attorney is now drawing up the contract.

Difficulty in serving complaints on Tenth-street property owners living outside of the State has caused a short delay in the setting of the condemnation suit for trial, but this work is practically completed and the court work should be under way within a short time.

The condemnation suit was under the direction of Robert Stahl, deputy City Attorney, but due to his resignation to enter the employ of a bonding house the work was assigned to Deputy City Attorney Don Keith.

The Tenth-street project is included in the Major Traffic Street Plan, as sponsored by the Traffic Commission. It is of particular importance, as it is the only project now under way which calls for the widening of a 100-foot street all the way through the central business district.

HEAVY TRAFFIC DUE

Consequently, it is stated, Tenth street may be expected to carry a heavy traffic load, acting as a distributor street for the center of the retail and office district. This will have the effect of increasing property values, experts say, within the territory which it serves. The directly benefited district should run several blocks to each side for the street's entire length, and general advantages will extend over practically the entire city.

SOUTHWEST SALES HIGH IN AUGUST

Deals Totaling More Than $500,000 Reported in Month by Realty Branch

More than $500,000 in realty transactions was reported during August by twenty-six members of the Los Angeles Realty Board, southwest branch, according to an announcement made by A. F. Schuler, chairman of the multiple listing committee. This was a gratifying increase in sales as compared to July, he said. Of the total, he said, $170,295 represented co-operative sales made by others than the listing offices, or 73 per cent.

Forty-one members, he said, participated in the commissions as either the selling offices or the listing offices.

REALTY TAX INVENTORIES RESTRICTED

Periodic Form Taboo Says Federal Appeal Board in Recent Opinion

Individuals or a firm engaged in the business of real estate may not use the periodic inventory in reporting income for Federal tax purposes, according to an opinion handed down by the Board of Tax Appeals in a case brought by the Atlantic Coast Realty Company, a report of which has been received from the National Association of Real Estate Boards by Frank H. Brooks, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board.

The decision supports a present general practice of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and is of importance to real estate brokers in that it emphasizes the inequality of present provisions of the Federal Revenue Act in regard to the taxation of income from real estate sales.

Inequality of Premiums to Be Attacked

By appointment of Hal G. Hotchkiss, president of the California Real Estate Association, a committee consisting of Jack Beaumont, Monterey; Fred T. Wood, Oakland; Norman E. McFadden, San Francisco; and Association Attorney Herbert L. Breed of Oakland, will make an attempt to work out the matter of the inequality in premiums paid for real estate salesmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

This matter has long been a subject of study by the real estate organization, and Mr. Beaumont, chairman, announces that an early meeting of the committee will be held to determine a plan of action.

ORANGE SHOWS STEADY GROWTH

Major Building Projects Create Prosperity

Many Fine Structures in Year's Program

Cable Plant's Expansion Industrial Leader

ORANGE, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Major construction activities in Orange in the last year have done much to build up the city, and to assure its industrial and commercial prosperity.

Among the more important structures completed was the First National Bank Building, on the Plaza, where $80,000 was expended to provide the last word in banking facilities.

The American Legion Hall, although representing an outlay of but $20,000, has filled an important niche in community life and is serving as a center for World War veterans and also for public gatherings.

INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Chief among the industrial expansions was the California Wire and Cable Company's announcement of an $85,000 addition to its plant. This addition will be used to manufacture lead cable, a departure in the concern's electrical wire manufacturing.

The Western Cordage Company also completed a building with the installation of necessary machinery for the manufacture of rope of more than two and a half inches in diameter.

Church building activities have been centered on a $30,000 addition to the First Presbyterian Church, which will be used for Sunday-school classes.

HIGH SCHOOL UNIT

The Orange Union High School's investment has been increased to $750,000 with the fine arts and cafeteria building, the seventh unit in the group of school structures, the cost of this latest unit to be $40,000.

Construction is going ahead on the $500,000 hospital being built by the Sisters of Joseph and which will house 100 beds.

Company Picks Insurance Head

H. V. R. Malcolm, owner of the Finance Brokerage Company, yesterday announced the opening of an insurance department under the management of M. S. Bobo.

Mr. Bobo has been in the insurance business for the last ten years, having started with the Aetna Life Insurance Company at Hartford, Ct., and was stationed at Philadelphia, Boston and Hartford, the last two years covering the southern territory of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida. Mr. Bobo came to California in March of 1924, and since that time has been actively engaged in insurance, having organized the insurance department for Wolfson Brothers, and for the last three years has been assistant manager for the Nettleship Company of Los Angeles.

SCHOOL WORK STARTED

HUNTINGTON PARK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Construction work has started on the addition to the Irvington-avenue intermediate school, which will contain ten rooms. The structure is to be of brick and will be two stories. The contractors, Bell & Justice, have taken out a building permit for $43,099 for the addition.

LANDMARK TO BE ERAS

Klump Homestead in Toluca Lake Park Remodeled Into Modern Subdivision

The last landmark of pioneer days in the Toluca luctantly surrendered to the inevitable advance this week, when a crew of workmen was detailed the famous Klump homestead as a part of the 000 development program which is now under way
cording to Lloyd L. St. John of Heffron-McCray-St. John.

This picturesque frame ranch-house, situated on Forman street, just north of Riverside Drive, in Toluca Lake Park, was built in 1902 by one of North Hollywood's pioneers, William Klump, and long remained the only dwelling on the original forty-five-acre tract which is now covered with fruit and walnut trees, and is adjacent to the exclusive residential district which has been developed around Toluca Lake. Today the Klump family, which has been made independently wealthy by the huge increase in the value of its original forty-five acres, has developed a beautiful modern estate in another section of Toluca Lake Park, that is a decided contrast to the aged and paint-scaled structure, which, a score of years ago was known as the residence for miles around.

Heffron-McCray-St. John, owners and subdividers of Toluca Lake Park, are responsible for the conversion of this former homestead, and are completely remodeling the homestead into a modern building to be used for social and business events for residents of this district and as headquarters for the extensive development program which are now under way, said St. John.

It is declared that when the development program has been completed in this new section it will equal in beauty other sections of Toluca Lake, where more than $1,000,000 has been invested in residential and other improvements.

SUBDIVISION CAMPAIGN

Los Feliz Hills Owners to Push Sales of Residence Sites in Tract During Fall Months

Preparations have been made for an active fall sales campaign in Los Feliz Hills, it was announced yesterday by Ralph O.
Laack & Williams, co-owners with Edwards & Wildey Company subdivision, bordering Griffith Park. This campaign, of an evident new demand for close-in scenic homesites, immediately.

Los Feliz Hills was first put on the market in January, 1926, and since that time 80 per cent of the tract has been sold. The remaining 20 per cent will be sold at original subdivision prices Williams said.

"Homes now under construction in Los Feliz Hills will cost a total of $157,000," said Williams. "This cost is for the buildings alone, and does not include the prices paid for their sites. In addition to these, plans have been reported for residences to approximate 000, work on them to start within the next sixty days. There are now forty-six homes in the subdivision.

"Recently the ornamental lighting system in the tract was completed and the lights turned on. All other improvements, concrete streets and sidewalks, sewers and underground conduits for light and telephone wires have previously been completed."

WOMEN TO AID REALTY MEN'S TREK

Feminine Contingent Named by Chairman of Caravan to Sacramento

Grand Marshal Cliff W. Clegg of the caravan and attendance committee for the State convention of the California Real Estate Association, has created a woman's division to assist him.

Mrs. Hazel M. Grant, Pasadena, chairman of the woman's division, southern area, and Miss Geneve A. Shaffer, San Francisco, northern division chairman, head the group. Among their captains and lieutenants in the south are:

Miss Josephine Then, Altadena, captain; Mrs. Harve Wilson, Monrovia; Mrs. Seaton, Pasadena; Mrs. Edna Buhler, Arcadia; Mrs. Albert Janssen, Monterey Park; Mrs. A. H. Blakely, South Pasadena, and Mrs. Thomas Hudson, Wilmar, lieutenants.

Mrs. Jennie Mosher, San Bernardino, captain; Mrs. W. M. Baldwin, Pomona; Mrs. Ross Garbutt, Ontario; Mrs. S. A. Householder, Riverside; Mrs. Etha D. Fowler, Redlands, lieutenants.

Other captains in the southern area are, Mrs. Jeanny E. Fitz-Gerald, Los Angeles; Mrs. Helen A. Derby, Ventura; Mrs. Hattie A. Allen, Buena Park; Mrs. N. Elizabeth McCann, North Hollywood; Mrs. Minnie M. Baum, Inglewood; Mrs. Belle Smith, Royce, Long Beach; Mrs. Lottie Crawford, San Diego, and Mrs. Valentine Lewis, Beverly Hills.

Among those accepting captaincies in the northern area are Mrs. May M. Pettengill, Eureka; Mrs. W. H. Sanford, Richmond; Mrs. Edna Conway, Stockton, and Mrs. L. Linquist, Bakersfield.

WIDENING BRINGS ACTIVITY

Ventura Boulevard Plans Draw Visitors to Studio City With Many Lot Sales Reported

Plans to convert Ventura Boulevard into a 100-foot highway with seventy feet of paving and the installation of electroliers from Hollywood to Pacoima avenue have created unprecedented activity in the new film capital. Competing with the international air races, more than 2000 persons visited Studio City Sunday.

Indicating that the uniform and rapid increases in realty values which followed the construction of other major arteries will run true to form with regard to Ventura Boulevard, sales of property in Studio City during the last week have rivaled the early increases which characterized the history of the city's main great boulevards, it is said.

General Sales Manager E. R. Evans yesterday announced the following sales, which have established new records for frontage on streets leading into Ventura Boulevard:

For $25,000 Mrs. Marguerite Sims purchased a Radford-avenue lot just off Ventura Boulevard.

For $18,500 F. L. Hibbish bought the corner of Redford avenue and Guerin street.

For $17,000 R. D. Buckmon obtained a lot on Pacoima avenue next to Ventura Boulevard.

For $14,000 A. J. Grant bought the corner of Pacoima avenue and Riverside Drive.

For $11,500 Mrs. C. Gleecup obtained the corner of Valley Heart Drive and Radford avenue.

For $10,000 C. K. Millard acquired a Pacoima-avenue lot.

For $8500 Mrs. L. Palmer became the owner of a lot fronting on Pacoima avenue.

For $7000 Albert Reed obtained a lot fronting on Pacoima avenue.

For $9300 A. J. Grant purchased the corner of Valley Heart Drive and Gentry street with improvements.

For $7000 Wallace Whitcomb acquired a Pacoima-avenue lot.

RESIDENTIAL SALES HIT HIGH MARK

Huntington Palisades Has Fine Summer Campaign, Executive Says

Sales of residential property totaling $392,750 have been made by one salesman in Huntington Palisades since June 1.

"Robert G. Bundy has sold twenty-one lots to eleven different buyers since June 1," says L. A. Hardie, sales manager of the Huntington Palisades division of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company. "His sales have totaled $392,750, or an average of $35,000 per buyer, or $17,500 per lot.

"Never before have we experienced so much interest in exclusive residential property as has prevailed throughout the summer months, and this fall augurs to far outstrip the strides we have already made in Huntington Palisades."

RESEDA TRACT SOLD

RESEDA, Sept. 22.—The Wathen Hamilton sixty-five acres on Reseda avenue has been sold to J. H. Edwards of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. Hamilton bought the property seven years ago at $1000 an acre. A nice profit was made in the deal. Edwards will subdivide the tract for new homes.

DEVELOPER BUYS OUT ISLE TRACT

Crittenden Pays $250,000 to Become Sole Owner of Lido Company

Purchase by William Clark Crittenden, president of the Lido Isle Development Company, of the entire interest of John P. Elsbach in Lido Isle was announced last week. The consideration was said to be $250,000. This purchase gives Crittenden sole ownership of this novel island in Newport Harbor. He will continue as active head of the development organization which is now creating a distinctive seaside colony at Lido Isle.

WILLIAM C. CRITTENDEN

Crittenden also announced the acceptance of the map of the subdivision of Lido Isle by the City Council of Newport Beach. This will permit the immediate inauguration of an extensive building program, which will feature Mediterranean homes of unusual design, Crittenden explained.

Franz Herding and George Adams have been commissioned to design the first group of houses which will incorporate many European features and yet retain the practical modern American touches essential to the easy relaxed life of this delightful beach community, where the use of boats and still-water swimming have already attracted a community of yachtsmen and lovers of still-water sports.

An elaborate water-front home also designed by Herding and Adams will be built by Crittenden for his own use on the south shore of Lido Isle near the Lido Isle Yacht Club.

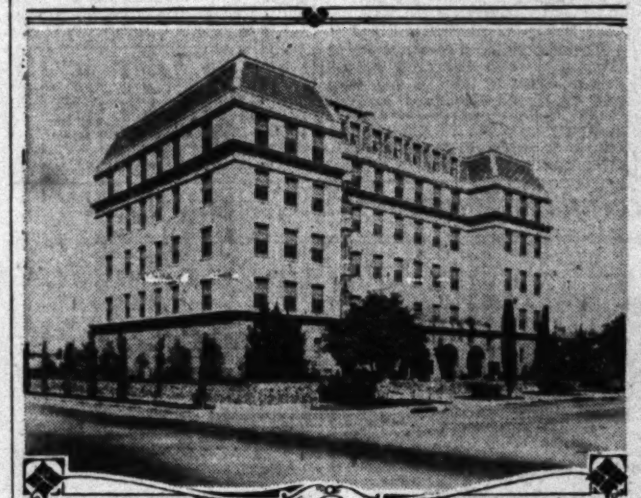
FALL CAMPAIGN PLANNED

Announcement has been made of the inauguration of the fall selling campaign of Prager Park by the Burns-Joiner Company, developers.

Prager Park is the last large tract of business property in the downtown section north of Washington Boulevard remaining undivided, according to W. J. Burns.

The expansion of Los Angeles in a southwesterly direction has left unimproved the tract on the north side of Washington Boulevard lying between Hill street and Grand avenue. The recent condemnation of Olive street through from Pico south to a connection with Hill at Twenty-fifth street gave the property frontage on four arteries, Washington, Hill, Olive and Grand. The widening proceedings on Washington Boulevard, which has been named as one of the four distributor streets by the Traffic Commission, will soon be under way.

Apartment Unit Completed



Building Up in Record Time

Apartments are now being occupied in the Chateau Chaumont, a $250,000 structure recently completed at the northwest corner of Ninth street and Serrano avenue. The unit is owned by Marie Jules Pellissier, and leasing arrangements are being handled by the Henry De Roulet Company, realtors. Constructed in record time by the Herbert M. Baruch Corporation, contractors, the Chateau Chaumont rises six stories in height and covers an area 110x68 feet.

Hundreds of prominent realtors can testify to the supremely successful, time-saving and money-saving

EMPLOYEES IN BUILDING LEAD LIST

More Than Three Million Persons Affiliated With Construction Work

Building construction provides work for more persons than any other line of industry in the United States, it is concluded from an examination of the latest employment data recently made by the research department of Greenebaum Sons Investment Company. A total of approximately 3,051,000 workers, the records show, look to the construction industry for the wages and salaries which provide support for their families and themselves.

The railroads are found to rank next to construction in the list of employers, giving occupation to 2,184,000 persons. The textile industry is third, with 1,110,000 operatives in the mills. Manufacturing of machinery provides jobs for 858,000 workers, and the coal industry for 148,000. The pay roll of the hotel industry totals 576,000 employees.

Approximately 474,000 wage earners supply the country with its lumber; 466,000 make its clothing; 438,000 fabricate its iron and steel; and 430,000 manufacture its automobiles.

Agriculture is the one occupation which gives work to more persons than building. More than 10,000,000 workers, the data reveal, find employment tilling the soil, or more than the total for the first ten industrial groups combined.

Formula for Whitewash on Brick Shown

Home builders who prefer Spanish or Mediterranean types but who insist on employing common brick or other permanent materials in their construction, will be interested in a bulletin on whitewashing which has just been issued by the Bureau of Standards of the United States Department of Commerce. The new bulletin gives a model formula for making whitewash for common brick and other masonry walls.

The standard formula calls for a shovel of lime putty, a bucket of water, a cupful of salt and three cupfuls of White Medusa, Atlas or Bear Brand natural cement. Walls coated with this mixture will remain white for years without repainting. A number of paint manufacturers also have brought out special paints for common brick or masonry walls.

Sheriff Will Speak Today at Barbecue

F. P. Newport, president of F. P. Newport Company, subdividers and community developers, has announced a barbecue and entertainment for all property owners and their friends at Verdugo Woodlands today beginning at 12 noon.

The main speaker on the program will be William (Bill) Traeger, Sheriff of Los Angeles county, who will speak on "The Early History of Southern California." Sheriff Traeger is an authority on this subject. Other speakers will be Earl R. Obern, sales manager of F. P. Newport Company, and G. Allison Phelps, radio philosopher.

Musical entertainment will be provided by Jose Arias and his Mexican orchestra. Celebrities who have been invited include Leo Carrillo, Raquel Torres, Anita Page and others.

ANGELENOS EGG CONSUMERS

Study of Local Market Discloses That Consumption Amounts to 120,000 Dozen Every Day

Consumption of eggs in Los Angeles city amounts to more than 120,000 dozen every day in the year, according to a study made public yesterday by Sam E. Tyrrell, secretary and general sales manager of Oro Blanco, Inc., which concern now is building a $200,000 scientific egg "factory" at Owensmouth.

Egg producers of San Fernando Valley alone have a daily output of approximately 30,000 dozen eggs, virtually all of which is shipped to the local market, and thousands of dozens are shipped here also from other parts of the Southland every day, the study disclosed. From Los Angeles, however, eggs by the thousands of dozens are shipped eastward, bound for New York City, Boston, Buffalo, Detroit and other cities always in need of eggs.

"That condition indicates that expansion in the egg-farming industry hereabouts is necessary and logical," said Tyrrell, in commenting on the study. "San Fernando Valley should produce sufficient eggs to supply the Los Angeles market requirements and enough eggs over that amount to enable this city to progress still further as an egg-distributing center of the country."

The official pointed out that the nation-wide trend is toward expansion of the egg-producing industry owing to the fact that the United States at all times is confronted with a shortage of eggs. He said that while this country is self-supporting in the majority of food products consumed, it is dependent to a considerable extent on foreign lands for a large percentage of the eggs used annually. This situation is being remedied gradually, but will be corrected only through the adoption of mass production and large volume distribution, in which field Oro Blanco, Inc., is one of the forerunners, according to Tyrrell.

The huge poultry plant of the corporation is going up at Fallbrook avenue and Van Owen street, Owensmouth, and will shortly be on a production basis, he added.

Roofs Will Be Beautified for Air Travelers

Ideas embodying radical changes in roof construction, fostered by the phenomenal development of air travel, will result in the city of the future presenting as varied a picture of beauty viewed from the illimitable reaches of the sky as is now obtained by the foot passenger in the mundane arteries of traffic below.

Whereas, a few years ago, a roof was something merely to keep out the elements, in future it is to be a thing of beauty and a guide to the air traveler forever, according to J. H. Plunkett, general manager of the Pioneer Paper Company, Los Angeles, one of the largest exclusive manufacturers of roofings in the West, who, in support of his statement, declared that recent news dispatches from Germany reveal that steps are already being taken to redesign cities to keep abreast of development of aviation.

Santa Monica Market Going Ahead Rapidly

Mission-type arches, typical of early-day California structures, have been featured in the Mission Drive-in Market, now nearing completion at the corner of Ninth and Wilshire, in Santa Monica.

The Mathis Construction Company is in charge of the construction, the plans having been drawn by Paul R. Williams. The owners are James L. Miller and V. L. McCarthy.

A grocery store, meat market, bakery and vegetable market are included in the group of stores, which have been leased through Wright & Becker, Wilshire Boulevard.

DEMAND POLICY INDORSED

Building and Loan Man Says Apartments Should be Built Only as Rentals Justify

Strong indorsement of the policy that has come into effect during the past three years to build apartment houses only as the rental demands for this type of dwelling warrant, was voiced yesterday by Gilbert H. Beesemyer, secretary-manager of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association, Hollywood, in a report on building trends for 1928.

From 1919 to July 31, 1928, 4657 apartment-houses had been built in Los Angeles, but whereas 803 of them went up in 1923, and 887 in 1924, these figures suddenly dwindled until only 495 were completed in 1926. By 1927, however, it had climbed back to 774, and for the first seven months of the current year had reached the 565 mark.

Apartment-house construction is not now undertaken on the hit-or-miss basis that was once in vogue, Beesemyer declared, a thorough investigation now being made into all factors that might affect the contemplated building before ever a stone is turned or a contract signed. Disregard of that fact by some builders in the past resulted in a temporary overbuilding of apartments, the detrimental effects of which are only now wearing off.

If all the apartments erected since 1919, a total of 93,140, reckoning an average of twenty flats to an apartment block, were occupied, approximately 186,280 people would at present be occupying this type of home accommodation, not counting those in structures built prior to 1919. The latter figure, compiled from statistics prepared by H. W. Ventress, secretary of the Apartment House Association of Los Angeles, Inc., is based upon an average of two persons to a flat.

But, from 1924 to 1927, the average of vacancies was 27.2 per cent, according to the same authority, and for this reason the association is against any boom building of apartment-houses. The vacancy average is not unduly high, considering the size of the city and the fluctuations in population increase, Beesemyer declared, but it indicates the need for caution in this class of building venture, the investment being under the necessity of grossing 18 per cent in order to earn a net of 7 per cent yearly. Eleven per cent of the gross, it was pointed out, goes for taxes, improvement bonds, repairs, special assessments and depreciation.

Experts Will Give Talks at Realty Meet

J. Arthur Younger, broker and vice-president of the Seattle Title Trust Company and nationally known authority on financing, will address the convention of the California Real Estate Association at Sacramento next month. He will speak before the brokers' division Wednesday afternoon, October 12. His topic will be "New Developments in Real Estate Financing."

Speaking on "Industry," G. L. Fox, industrial engineer of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, will address the general session Wednesday morning. J. M. Green, secretary-treasurer of W. H. Daum and Staff of Los Angeles, will address the brokers' division Tuesday afternoon, speaking on "Things Every Broker Should Know About the Industrial Development of His City." W. H. Daum is State chairman of the industrial division of the association.

CONTRACT LET TO PAVE VALLEY ROAD

VAN NUYS, Sept. 22.—G. W. Ellis has been awarded the contract at $52,709, for the paving of Oxnard street between Cahuenga avenue and Lankershim Boulevard, in the North Hollywood district east of here. The distance is one and a quarter miles. The street already is paved from North Hollywood to Van Nuys and is an important east-and-west highway in San Fernando Valley. The new paving will be eight-inch concrete, twenty feet wide.

HOME BUREAU SERVICE AIDED

Drawings Acquired Through Builders' Exchange

Wide Choice Now Available for Owner Group

This Week's Sketch Shows Norman Cottage

In recognition of the small-home plan bureau's efforts to give the modest home builder more effective service, the Builders' Exchange Association has turned its small house plans over to the bureau. These plans will considerably add to the bureau's collection and offer the builder a wider choice in the selection of plans for a home.

In addition to these the bureau has received several other new plans this week. One, a Norman cottage, is illustrated above. Costing approximately $5000 to build, it can be placed on a forty-five-foot lot if desired.

PLASTER CEMENT WALLS

The plaster is bull-nosed around the casement windows on the exterior. The walls are of smooth, white plaster cement. Shingles cover the long roof, which would be interesting but slightly more expensive if made of slate or shakes.

This roof is one of the most important features of the design of the house. From a side elevation, there are in reality, three roofs, although only two are to be seen in the illustration. While this increases the building cost, it gives the distinction and beauty to the exterior that make this house unusual.

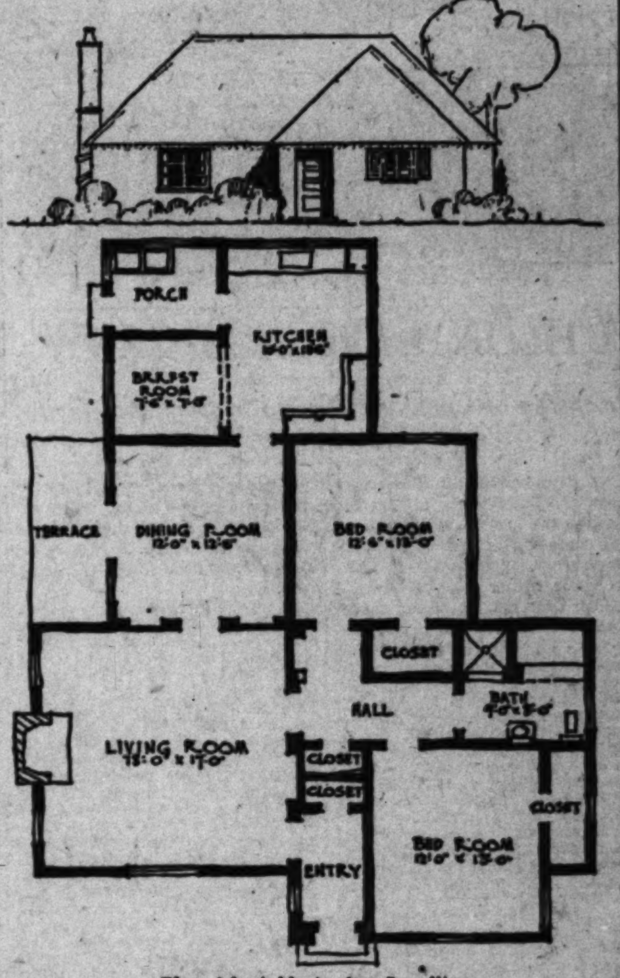
Although as the interior floor plan stands, the partition at the back of the entry hall allows space for two closets, one on either side of the partition, a passage way straight through from the entrance to the back bedroom might be more convenient. This would make it possible to reach the bath and the back bedroom without going through the living room. However, from some aspects, it might be more desirable to separate the back portion from the entrance, as in the illustration.

PLEASANT TERRACE

The terrace off of the dining room is very pleasant, offering the possibility of a peaceful garden, sheltered from the street by the projecting wall of the living room. If the terrace were to be extended to the end of the house, the breakfast room might very pleasantly open on to it with French doors.

As a rather charming garden sort of house, this Norman cottage offers the small home builder a conservative choice. The house would be in perfect taste in any surrounding; and while it is unpretentious, it indicates its building cost.

Conservative Norman Cottage



Plan Adaptable to Any Locality
This Norman cottage, designed by Edward Hofstetter, offers the builder a conservative and charming choice. Working drawings for it have been acquired by the Small Home Plan Bureau, under the supervision of the Los Angeles Architectural Club, ground floor, Architects' Building, Fifth and Figueroa streets.

NEW GROUP CONTROLS RESEDA MILL PLANT

RESEDA, Sept. 22.—The Marian Milling Company interests of Wallace & Bryant, one of the oldest industries here, have been taken over by a new group of capitalists, with Peter J. Deaux, a local man, as manager. The plant has a capacity for 60,000 bags of beans and is reputed to have the best bean-cleaning equipment and storage facilities in San Fernando Valley.

TWO STEEL BRIDGES TO BE CONSTRUCTED

Plans have been completed by the Pacific Electric for steel bridges over the Los Angeles River and Tujunga wash at Vineland avenue in the Studio City area. The bridges will be single-track structures with the automatic block signal system. Officials of the Pacific Electric state that the bridges will be completed before the rainy season and will be of one span so that debris will not be caught, blocking the waterway.

CONSTRUCTION COSTS CLIMB

Prices for Building Twice as High as in 1913

Material Price Increases Underlying Cause

Wages Unchanged Through Last Two Years

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—Construction costs are higher than at any time since last December, according to statistics just compiled by the Associated General Contractors of America. A substantial increase last month brought about this condition and served to place the present cost average on a plane exactly twice as high as the one it occupied in 1913.

The recently noted rise is attributed to an increase in the average of prices paid by contractors for the basic construction materials. This average, it is stated, was particularly influenced by prices which concrete aggregates and lumber commanded.

WAGES UNCHANGED

The average of wages paid in the construction industry remained unchanged during August, holding the position it assumed in June when it registered a slight decline. The wage average has shown marked stability, having changed its plane only three times since October, 1926. These changes, consisting of one rise and two declines, have been small. The average of wages, in fact, has held virtually a single level for two years.

The average of the combined costs of construction materials and wages during August reached a position slightly lower than that which it held one year ago, although materially above the plane occupied during August, 1926.

INDEX TABULATIONS

A scale which places the 1913 average of combined construction costs at 100 as its basis shows the following index numbers for the months of this year: January, 199; February, 199; March, 197; April, 197; May, 197; June, 198; July, [illegible], and August, 200.

TO LEASE BUILDING

VISALIA, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Biswell & Mahoney, Ford agents, have announced plans for leasing of the building on the corner of Center and Garden streets, now under construction for H. [illegible], Japanese merchant. This building will cost about $80,000, and will be one of the finest automobile service and garage buildings in Tulare county.

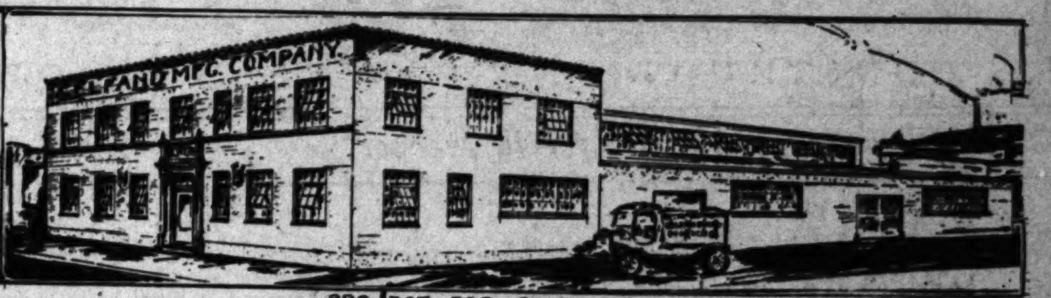
EXPANSION FOR CALIFORNIA FRUIT AUCTION



PROJECT FOR GELFAND MANUFACTURING COMPANY

PLANS LAID FOR THREE PLANTS

Gelfand to Build in Central Manufacturing District

Fruit Auction Will Double Capacity of Unit

Shoe Corporation to Erect Santa Monica Factory

The addition of one plant and an expansion of another in the Central Manufacturing District, and announcement of a shoe factory to be constructed at Santa Monica featured the industrial field during the last week.

Another member has been added to the Los Angeles industrial family in the Gelfand Manufacturing Company, according to C. J. Doherty, vice-president and industrial manager of the Central Manufacturing District, who announced this week that he had concluded negotiations with Simon Gelfand, founder and president of the famous firm of mayonnaise and relish makers, for a site adjoining that of the Calavo Growers' Association on Everett avenue.

The new plant, which is to be erected by the William P. Neil Company, will be ready for occupancy in sixty days, it was stated. It is to be a modern two-story brick and steel building with an adjoining warehouse and will have its own spur of the Los Angeles Junction Railway. The factory will have an annual output of mayonnaise and relishes approximating $2,000,000 in value.

The decision comes as the result of two years of surveys conducted by Leroy D. Owen of the Central Manufacturing District and S. C. Anderson of the J. W. Lewis Company.

FRUIT AUCTION PROGRAM

Fundamentally sound economic conditions are foreseen for both growers and distributors of fruit and produce by George A. Charters, president of the California Fruit Auction, who announced this week that the auction had progressed with such rapid strides that, after four months, they had found it necessary to double the size of their quarters.

The new construction entailed in the enlargement of the auctions facilities will include an addition to the building equal in size to the original structure, 80 feet wide and 200 feet long, to be of reinforced concrete with steel interior framing and steel sash. An additional 400 feet of ten-foot loading platform, and a second-story office space 40 feet by 80 feet will be provided. At the same time switch track and display track will be increased to accommodate the display of 100 cars of fruit. The total display floor space will be increased to 40,000 square feet or sufficient to show sixty cars of fruit.

SHOE PLANT PROJECT

W. H. FITCHMILLER.

A shoe factory, capitalized at $100,000, which will bring an annual pay roll of $500,000 to the Bay District, is to be erected on a site to be selected in the Santa Monica industrial district, according to an announcement made by W. H. Fitchmiller, fiscal agent for the Harding-McMinn Shoe Corporation. The industry is expected to bring into this city $1,500,000 annually.

The new organization, the announcement reveals, plans to move to Santa Monica the factory equipment of the Harding Shoe Company of Haverhill, Mass. Experts from the eastern plant will be sent here as a nucleus for the organization. Plans are nearing completion.

Charles S. Harding is president and general manager of the new Santa Monica factory. The new plant is to be of modern architecture, designed by E. J. Baume, architect. In full operation the plant will employ between 200 and 250 men. The average daily output is estimated at 1000 pairs of shoes, to be distributed throughout the West. Each pair will bear the label, 'Made in Santa Monica," Fitchmiller stated. P. M. McMinn is sales manager and secretary of the corporation.

Park Program Announced by City Official

Members of the Los Angeles park board, accompanied by Park Superintendent Frank Shearer, made a tour of inspection of North Hollywood Park yesterday and announced the new park map of development to be carried out in the Studio City area.

Plans call for an extensive park system. The North Hollywood library will occupy a prominent place at Magnolia and Tujunga streets. Great grass plots will stretch south of Magnolia. A Kiwanis grove of trees will be put out along Tujunga wash. Opposite Otsego street a pergola will lead to a fountain surrounded by rose gardens. A pavilion, band stand and rest rooms will be built.

Tujunga wash south of Magnolia will be dredged, straightened and made into a lake for boating and other amusements.

Rentals Augur Prosperous Era

That Los Angeles is headed for another cycle of unusual business prosperity is anticipated by H. B. Zeigler, manager of the Western Pacific Building, who draws this conclusion from the number of new business organizations who have recently been inquiring for suitable office space.

Many old established firms located in this building, Zeigler points out, are also enlarging their present office force and space to take care of present and expected additional business during 1929.

UTILITY EARNINGS GROW

Prosperity of Country Reflected in Continued Gains, Vernon Manufacturer Declares

Various barometers of a nation's prosperity are always at hand for those who know where to find them, but perhaps one of the safest indexes to the growth in average earnings of the "man on the street" is that contained in reports on public utility earnings, according to Julius Brombacher, president of the Superbo Manufacturing Company, gas water heater manufacturers, Vernon.

Much cause for optimism on the score of continued American prosperity is found in a United States Department of Commerce report issued the 10th inst. and dealing with public utility earnings for the first seven months of this year, the executive stated. This report reveals the fact that these earnings have shown a consistently higher volume by several millions of dollars in both net and gross for each of the years, 1925, 1926, 1927 and 1928.

For the first seven months of 1925, ninety-five public utility enterprises throughout the country operating gas, electric light, heat, power, traction and water services, had gross earnings of $1,043,648,364, with net revenue of $357,326,027.

Gross earnings, Brombacher explained, are generally taken to consist of gross operating revenues, while net earnings usually represent the gross, less operating expenses and taxes, or the nearest comparable figures.

In 1926, for seven months, these totals, respectively, had grown to $1,147,827,594 and $408,630,848; in 1927 to $1,226,315,873 and $445,317,271, and in 1928 to $1,283,949,276 and $489,766,962. Although total annual figures are not available for the current year, those for 1925, 1926 and 1927 are, and these show a gain of nearly 16 per cent in gross earnings over the three-year period and of 22½ per cent in the net, indicating that the spread between operating costs and revenue is getting wider in favor of net earnings as the years go on, resulting in larger dividends to the great mass of the public, which owns, and, in turn, supports these public utility organizations.

Dyas Declares Widening Will Aid Large Area

Asserting that the "five-finger plan," which provides for the widening of Cahuenga, Ivar, Yucca, Cole and Wilcox streets, is a development city-wide in its importance and effect, Bernal H. Dyas yesterday emphasized the necessity for early construction of the $3,100,000 Hollywood project.

Dyas pointed out that while the widening plan centered in Hollywood, the Beverly Hills, Wilshire, Vermont, Santa Monica and other sections, including the valley and ocean areas, which, under the development, will be provided with streets of adequate carrying capacity to and from Hollywood, will be materially benefited by the improvement.

"The people of Hollywood should think of Hollywood as a unit. Any good movement in any part of Hollywood is reflected in other areas. I am interested in Hollywood as a whole, not as a part. The "five-finger plan" will distribute the consistent growth in realty values over Hollywood as a whole rather than concentrate it on any particular artery," Dyas said.

Nine Estates Sold in Week

Sales in Brentwood Green, the residential subdivision controlled by the Frank Meline Company during the last week, amounted to $27,500, consisting of nine residential estates, according to Mel Anderson, general sales manager of the Meline organization. The price of these sites ranged from $2200 to $4700.

Nearly 2,000,000 pounds of coffee are being raised in Panama this season.

Ebony Glass Innovation in Bottle Mart

A new bottle of ebony hue, invented recently by the laboratory staff of the Southern Glass Company, East Twenty-sixth street, has created a sensation on the market, according to company officials.

The bottle, made of a jet-black glass that defies sun rays, is particularly in demand where goods must be protected against light and the subtle rays, which, although invisible to the human eye, nevertheless exist, exerting often a disintegrating influence upon liquids.

According to Faye G. Bennison, general manager, the ebony bottle renders sun rays of all kind impenetrable. Experiments to that effect were made recently.

The new bottle which was introduced only a week ago, has already swept the market of the Pacific Coast. One company alone, dealing in soft drinks, ordered 7,000,000 bottles.

Title Official in Address to Realty Board

James C. Ferris of the Title Insurance and Trust Company, and an authority on the subject of property restrictions, spoke before a record attendance of members of the Southwest Branch, Los Angeles Realty Board Monday evening.

Ferris pointed out to the brokers the many ways in which conflicts may arise between deed restrictions and zoning ordinances. He traced the growth of restrictions in deeds from the earliest time to the present, explaining to the property owners how best to protect their interests when planning such restrictions.

Skyscraper Unit Near Completion

Structure to Be Finished October 1

Completion of the $1,250,000 Foreman & Clark Building under construction on the southwest corner of Seventh and Hill streets is scheduled for October 1, it was announced yesterday. The J. V. McNeil Company, contractors, have made rapid progress on this building which will be one of the most outstanding structures in Southern California. Although a thirteen-story building, a three-story pent-house makes the unit appear to be a sixteen-story structure.

DEDICATION FOR BRIDGE NOVEMBER 11

Armistice Day Occasion for Opening Glendale Three-Way Span

Armistice Day in Los Angeles this year will receive unusual commemoration, the dedication of the new Glendale-Hyperion viaduct over the Los Angeles River having been tentatively set for November 11, according to advices received yesterday by the Guarantee Building and Loan Association of Hollywood.

Combining in one massive structure what amounts to three bridges and an outstanding memorial to those who died in the great war, every effort is being made by the contractors, Lange and Bergstrom, to have the project completed and ready for traffic on the morning of Armistice Day, it is stated. The work is now more than 90 per cent complete.

In connection with the formal dedication, plans are now being made for a monster citizens' celebration and veterans' gathering, which will be representative of every section of Southern California.

M'ARDLE HEADS TITLE MEN

Security Company Executive Chosen President at Convention Held at Coronado Hotel

The California Land Title Association will be headed during the coming year by E. M. McCardle, vice-president and superintendent of the San Joaquin Valley district for the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company. McCardle, who served during the last year as first vice-president of the association, was elected to the office of president at the twenty-second annual convention, which was held last week at the Coronado Hotel. He is a charter member of the association and has been active in its affairs since it was organized in 1906.

Other officers elected for the coming year include Waverly P. Waggoner of the California Title Insurance Company, first vice-president; C. J. Strubble, vice-president of the Oakland Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, second vice-president, and Earl Lee Kelly, president of the Red Bluff Abstract Company of Red Bluff, third vice-president. Frank P. Doherty was re-elected executive secretary and treasurer, and Harvey Humphrey, publicity and advertising manager for the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, was made assistant secretary.

The three-day convention was given over to discussion of matters of interest to title men. Walter B. Kibbey, attorney for the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, addressed the convention on the subject of recent decisions affecting the title business, and William S. Porter of the local company, gave an address on advertising and selling title insurance. McCardle has already assumed his duties as executive head of the association and is now preparing his report of the results of the convention just closed.

NEW OFFICE BUILDING FOR SHERMAN OAKS

CAHUENGA PARK, Sept. 23.—Harold Cross, Los Angeles architect, has completed plans for an old English type tract office for Bundy & Albright on their property at Sherman Oaks avenue and Ventura Boulevard. The building will have a fifty-foot tower and will cost about $5000.

MIDWEST PAPER UNIT OPENS HERE

Omaha Company Leases Building to Compete for Southland Trade

The Carpenter Paper Company of Omaha, Neb., is opening a warehouse and branch at 6500 Stanford avenue.

A building has been erected by Earl V. Abbott with offices at 650 South Spring street. This building has been leased to the company through S. C. Anderson of the J. W. Lewis Company.

The stock of the Carpenter Paper Company and the property which it occupies represents an investment of $250,000. The concern was established in Omaha in 1887 with present assets of approximately $3,000,000. It has branches and controlling interest in other companies at Sioux City, Iowa; Des Moines, Iowa; Kansas City, Mo.; Denver, Colo.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Chicago, Ill., Lincoln, Neb.; Billings, Mont., and the present location in Los Angeles.

The manager of the Los Angeles branch is P. C. Holland.

NEW NOTE SENT TO COLOMBIANS

State Department Acts in Oil Grant Cancellation

Surprise Expressed Over Stand in Controversy

Refusal to Answer Question Prompts Official Move

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—The United States government has sent a note to the Colombian government regarding the latter's failure to answer a question on the controversy being waged between Colombia and American nationals over the 5,000,000-acre oil exploitation grant known as the Barco concession, which the Colombian government has canceled.

In a communication delivered about the 13th inst., the Washington government declared that the Colombian government had attempted to deny this government the right to make inquiry in the interest of its nationals and informed the South American republic that it would continue to follow with interest the further progress of the controversy.

The concessionaires had requested the American Legation to ask Colombia if they would be permitted to file a memorial in answer to a cancellation decree. The government then presented the question to the Colombian government, which replied that it regretted that it could not admit interference by this government in a controversy of administrative character between its government and a private corporation organized solely to make use of the resources of the country under Colombian laws.

The State Department dispatched a note manifesting surprise that Colombia declined to answer the question and had attempted to deny the right of this government to make inquiry in the interest of its nationals.

COURT HERE IGNORED BY PRISON HEAD

Warden Holohan Refuses to Allow Condemned Man be Taken to Los Angeles

SAN RAFAEL, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Warden Holohan of San Quentin prison today declined to recognize a court order signed by Superior Judge Wilson of Los Angeles to permit the removal of George Costello and William (Red) O'Brien to the southern city to testify in the trial of two men charged with a pay-roll robbery.

Costello and O'Brien are under sentence to hang for the murder of William McFarlin, Oakland bank teller. On the ground that the two men are desperate characters and rumors have been current that friends of the pair will attempt to effect their escape, Holohan refused to comply with the court order. He also pointed out that the order is not in proper form; that it is directed to him, whereas it should be addressed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles with instructions to bring the two men into court.

Attorney Joseph Ryan and Dep. Dist.-Atty. Jordan of Los Angeles, who presented the order, after receiving Holohan's explanation, accepted it and agreed to take the depositions of Costello and O'Brien.

The two prisoners in their statements declare they and James De Fillipo, now dead, committed the pay-roll robbery for which Vincent Meile and William Dyer are being tried. They declared further that Meile and Dyer had nothing to do with the robbery, were not present and had not shared in the proceeds.

UNITED STATES TARGET IN EUROPE'S POLITICAL SHIFT

Late Line-up of England and France Planned to Check Germany and Cancel War Debts

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—When the cryptic announcement was made that Great Britain and France had entered upon an agreement for "naval disarmament" it was said in the French press and echoed in the British newspapers that there also were clauses relating to united policy of the continent of Europe.

Specifically it was asserted that in return for French agreement to permit British supremacy on European seas there was British agreement that France was to have her way on the continent. Denials have been made that there were any such secret clauses and attempts were made to convince the world that the extent of the new entente was a tentative settlement of the differences of the two nations over naval ratios which was intended to pave the way for an accord with America on this subject.

But the statesmen of Europe have met at Geneva and the great continental problems have come in for one of the frankest discussions ever held by such folk. And out of these discussions has come the proof that Britain and France have adopted a parallel policy on these problems; that this policy has practically been dictated by France, so far as continental affairs are concerned, and that Germany is once more faced with a real entente and a strong entente which intends either to break up the German-Russian entente or take measures to check its power.

WITH BRITAIN'S BACKING

As usual with such affairs many words and interpretations and explanations have come out of Geneva with regard to what happened. It has been necessary to soothe public opinion in the countries concerned and the world in general, so stark facts have been covered over with verbal bouquets. But the fact is that France presented an even stronger program than she had dared to advance before in the last eight years and it was seconded by the British.

The chief item in this program is close supervision in the future of the Rhineland "demilitarized zone"—a strip east of the Rhine and all the German territory west of the Rhine. This supervision is to be by a commission of the Locarno powers—which would permit not only France, Britain and Belgium to have their say about keeping this zone neutral but would give a voice to Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. The Rhineland would become a "buffer state" for the western powers which might be subject to a German attack.

OLD FEAR RISES

The second item in importance is that Germany shall give guarantees not to attempt to change her eastern frontiers, that is not to try to get back territories given to Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. It is broadly intimated that such guarantees would involve another neutral zone in the east of Germany.

Thirdly, Germany must give up all plans of extension into Central Europe through the absorption of Austria.

And, finally, there must be a reparations settlement which will fix the sum the former Allies are to get and make certain that Germany will pay it without further opposition. Part of this demand is a clause which would couple reparations and war debts and put Germany into a "united European front" to bring pressure on America for the partial cancellation of some of those debts.

There was an added condition, implied in the speech of Premier Briand, that Germany should break her entente with Russia and so assure the other western powers that she has no designs against their safety—or the safety of their allies in Central Europe.

All this has been put forward with such an effort at casualness that one does not realize the reasons for the German eruptions of feeling until the program is put against the background of previous ones and it is realized what a complete change of position has been achieved by the British in their swing to the support of the French.

For the last eight or nine years the British have pursued a definite policy in the Rhineland. It has had as its chief object the freedom of the territory from French control and the full restoration of it to Germany as a means of breaking down the war psychology and also as a means of keeping Germany from seeking an alliance with Russia.

It was British influence which made the French give up Allied supervision of German armaments and put that duty on the League of Nations. Now, however, the British not only are assenting to such close supervision in the Rhine region by a commission which will be controlled by France but is allowing the task to be taken away from the League.

ABANDONS POSITION

Even more decidedly Britain has taken a position in the last few years against any entanglement with French policy to the east of Germany. Time and again it has been stated openly and through organs of publicity that the London government could and would not commit itself in any way on the quarrel between Germany and Poland. In fact, there have been times when Poland has bitterly complained the British influence was being exerted to make her come to terms with Germans on the quarrels over Upper Silesia and the Danzig corridor.

And now we find Lord Cushendun solemnly seconding the French demand that solid guarantees be given to Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. It is a cardinal change in the direction of London statesmanship.

NURSED SERPENT

What a change this means can be seen more plainly if we go further into the background. It is well to remember that it was the British who chiefly helped to build up the Hohenzollern power and modern Germany. At first it was with the object of offsetting the Catholic imperial power. After that it was designed to provide a danger for Russia in the west so she would never feel free to operate against the British Empire in the east or against the Balkans and Turkey. British money and diplomatic assitance often turned the tide for the Hohenzollerns—until they attempted to challenge British sea power.

After the World War the British foreign policy quickly turned toward revival of Germany and close harmony with her and there was no British opposition to the constant demands of Germany for return of the Rhineland and recovery of the Danzig corridor and Upper Silesia.

When the Berlin government definitely turned to Russia as an associate and friend as a means to prevent British domination of its activities and to hold France in check, the London government was not alienated but tried for years to break up this combination. The chief measures taken to prove British friendship for Germany consisted of efforts to get concessions for her from France and Poland.

But time after time when the showdown came it was found that Germany was acting in accord with Russia and preferred that association to British friendship

Failure along these lines gave opportunity for a party in Britain which had been pressing long for a change in the nation's attitude on the continent. In this party were included many of the highest statesmen of Britain and also some of its best generals.

The generals took this position: that it has been the policy of Britain always to have "buffers" between herself and the powers of Central Europe. Under this policy she has seen to it that Denmark, Holland and Belgium remained free under her protection, particularly Belgium. Their protection had meant that the Central Powers could not establish naval bases which could trouble British control of the North Sea and the English Channel.

CONDITIONS CHANGE

But the World War showed that Belgium could easily be overrun by the Germans and that from Belgium and Northern France it was possible to send air raiders, as well as submarine raiders, against Britain.

Hence it was necessary to widen the "buffer" and make sure of its defense. The best way, according to these generals, was to put the line of defense at the Rhine and have that stream so demilitarized that the Germans could not hope to start an attack across it without being stopped by France and Belgium. It has been stated by European military experts that plans for the defense of the Rhine line are in the archives of the British General Staff.

This view was backed up by certain statesmen in high position, including Sir Austen Chamberlain, who held that Britain and France, as the great empires, had parallel interests which could best be served by co-operation. They held it would be better to follow the policy of King Edward, who had found means of compromising all disputes between London and Paris and had formed the old entente.

WEAKEST LINK

These statesmen had to face a powerful argument against their plans because they did not provide a "counterweight" in the west against Russia. It was felt that Poland, even with French assistance, would be too weak to withstand Russian and German pressure and there was no desire in Britain to get into an entanglement which might compel the dispatch of British troops to the defense of Poland.

But now the situation has tapered down to the point where Britain must choose to go with France—for the time being, at least—or be left practically isolated and faced with a combination of Russia and Germany, which might at any time act in Central Europe and the Near East in a way to upset vital imperial interests. It is quite certain—again for the time being—that a choice has been made and that an understanding exists not only on naval matters but on continental matters and on the American debt.

SIR AUSTEN TO BE HERE NEXT WEEK

British Foreign Secretary Coming to California in Search of Health

Sir Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Secretary, is due here next Sunday on the Dollar liner President Adams, according to advices received yesterday.

SIR AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN

The visit of the distinguished Britisher will be brief and devoid of public ceremony, as Sir Austen is in ill health and is coming to California to recuperate. He is accompanied by Lady Chamberlain, daughter, son, a governess, valet, detective, and Miss Anne Scratchley.

After a day or so in Los Angeles, his first American port, as he proceeded from Liverpool to the Bermudas and West Indies, the Foreign Secretary will go to San Francisco for an extended visit at the Crocker home.

Sir Austin entered Parliament in 1892, and has served in almost every Cabinet office. He was Civil Lord of the Admiralty, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Postmaster-General, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Chairman of Indian Financial Affairs, Secretary of State for India, Minister of War; and Foreign Secretary, a post he now holds.

KELLEY NOW NO. 45983 AT PRISON

Condemned Man Boasts He Will be Back Here in Ninety Days for Trial

SAN QUENTIN, Sept. 22. (AP)—Boasting that he will "be back in Los Angeles in ninety days," Leo (Pat) Kelley, butcher, sentenced to hang for the killing of Mrs. Myrtle Mellus, Los Angeles society woman, entered condemned-men's row in San Quentin prison here today and became No. 45983.

Chatting freely with newspaper men on the ferry, Kelley said that the trial judge's instructions had been in error and that his petition for a mistrial will be granted. "The next trial will be different," he asserted.

Although he assumed a jaunty air as he posed for photographers, Kelley was plainly "scared" as he saw the walls of the prison draw near.

ORATOR OF ARGENTINA SETS SAIL

South American Winner on Way to Washington to Enter Contest Finals

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Jose de Tomaso, the winner of the Argentine National Oratorical Contest, which was sponsored by La Nacion, Buenos Aires, to select an Argentine representative for the Third International Oratorical Contest, to be held in Washington in October, has just completed his eighteenth year, having been born August 29, 1910, in the city of Buenos Aires.

Young De Tomaso is the son of immigrants who came to Argentina from Italy forty-three years ago. He passed first through the Buenos Aires public schools and is now completing his high school course at the Mariano Moreno College, with a view to entering the law school of the University of Buenos Aires next year. During his five years at the high school Jose obtained such excellent gradings that he will be graduated without taking the customary final examinations, a procedure which, in view of De Tomaso's trip to Washington, has received the hearty approval of the Minister of Public Instruction.

De Tomaso's brother, Antonio, is a lawyer of note and a member of the House of Deputies. During the recent Presidential campaign young Jose made his first appearance as a public speaker, addressing audiences on behalf of his brother, who was re-elected.

He will sail from Buenos Aires today, landing in New York October 10, and proceeding straight to Washington.

Tomaso's subject is "The Reborn and Free Civilization of the Argentine Republic." The runner-up in the contest was a student of the Teachers' Normal School, Miss Antonina Oyela, who lost only by a slender margin.

English Woman Held by Chinese

PEKING, Sept. 22. (AP)—Bandits in the mountainous area near Chinping have captured a Miss Tobin, a member of the English Church Missionary Society, and are holding her presumably for ransom.

A Miss Watkins, who was traveling with Miss Tobin to Canton also was captured, but was released.

The British authorities are taking steps to obtain Miss Tobin's release.

SKIPPERS GET CASH

Sea Captains Given $3000 Each for Federal Action in 1886

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (AP)—Two sea captains, arrested by naval authorities in 1886 when the United States closed Bering Sea to seal hunters, have just received compensation from the United States District Court here.

The court awarded $3000 each to Capt. H. B. Jones of the schooner Challenge, and Capt. Charles A. Raynor of the schooner San Diego, basing the decision on a ruling by The Hague tribunal declaring illegal the government's closing of the Bering Sea, and on an act of Congress allowing persons injured by the closing to sue for damages.

ROADS SEEKING FREIGHT BOOST

Western Carriers Ask Permit to File Demands

Charge Earnings Have Long Been Inadequate

Strike Threat of Trainmen Linked to Move

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (AP)—The first step toward instituting a general upward revision of freight rates in western territory has been instituted before the Interstate Commerce Commission by representatives of western trunk line railroads.

Agents of the western roads asked the commission for permission to file immediate applications looking to increases on a wide range of commodities over most of the western territory and asserted that the increases are necessary because their earning "for some years have been and now are conspicuously inadequate."

WANT LARGER EARNINGS

"It has become imperative that these lines without delay bring to the commission constructive proposals looking toward increases in existing rates and revenues," the application said. "In these circumstances it seems necessary that the commission vacate or amend certain outstanding orders in such a manner as to prevent their operation to interfere with the carriers lawfully publishing increases in existing rates.

The commission can, under its power of suspension and investigation, require justification of the increased rates before they become effective.

"There is urgent need that the commission permit the proposal of the lines to be presented in the form of blanket supplements to existing tariffs. The increased rates should take effect as early as conditions may warrant."

EXTENT NOT DISCLOSED

Western railroads have contended during recent years that their earnings were considerably below those of carriers in the eastern and southern districts. It was further declared that trainmen and conductors in the western territory have pending demands for wage increases which have been pushed to the point of a strike threat. While no mention was made of the impending increase in western railroad labor costs it was assumed that the two matters have at least an indirect connection.

The nature and extent of the increases contemplated by the western lines was not disclosed by the preliminary approach to the commission. It is expected that the commission will indicate some aspects of its views as to the proposal soon. The preliminary proposal looked merely to the removal of technical obstructions which prevent the roads from immediately publishing their rate increase proposals as tentative schedules.

Railroads concerned in the contemplated demand for increases were not named in the petition filed with the commission, the signers to the document being the rate agents acting as a committee for western trunk lines. It is expected that practically all western carriers will be included in the schedules if the commission grants permission to file the tariffs incorporating the increase.

Rammed Ship Due at Harbor

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—The American-Hawaiian freighter Kentuckian, carrying a crew of forty-five without passengers was expected back in port tonight after being rammed by the General Petroleum oil tanker Los Alamos in a butter-thick fog this morning off Point Sur, 100 miles south of the Golden Gate.

Her port bilge plates were stove in and water got into No. 2 hold but radio reports said the inrush had been controlled and the Kentuckian would make port under her own power.

She left here last night. The fog was so thick the vessels could not recognize each other when the crash came and had to radio to each other to establish identity.

ONE DEAD, ONE HURT IN TEXAS MAN HUNT

WOODVILLE (Tex.) Sept. 22. (AP) Deputy Sheriff L. A. Walker was killed and Deputy Sheriff N. V. Walker wounded today when five officers attempted to arrest J. Jackson, an asserted escaped convict, on a farm ten miles from here. Jackson escaped and a posse with bloodhounds is searching for him.

PLANS FOR COLLEGE READY

Architect Submits First Draft of New Structure to House Immaculate Heart Students

The initial draft of building plans for the new Immaculate Heart College was submitted yesterday by Architect A. C. Martin. These plans call for five halls, the first of which is to be erected at once. This building, modeled upon the Wheeler Hall of the University of California, at Berkeley, will be situated on the high promontory at the western end of Los Feliz Boulevard—a site that commands a view of the residential district lying south of the Los Feliz Foothills. The college site is a twenty-minute ride from Beverly Hills, Pasadena, Glendale and Los Angeles.

The central part of the building will be occupied by an auditorium chapel, surrounded by wide corridors. To the east of these corridors on the main floor will be located the rotunda and reception rooms; to the north and south the classrooms and lecture-halls. The library and the offices will be on the second floor. Plans call for the Morisco-Romanesque style of architecture, with Spanish gardens surrounding the structure.

The recent growth of both the Immaculate Heart College and its preparatory departments has rendered the present buildings inadequate and made the erection of new buildings imperative.

The action of the University of California during the past year in accepting the bachelor's degree conferred by the Immaculate Heart College and of granting candidacy for the master degree to graduates thereof has militated toward attracting to the college a large number of representative young women.

The excellence of the college curricula under the direction of professors from Loyola College and the University of California and the system of ethical and religious training are rapidly placing the Immaculate Heart College among the foremost women's educational institutions in the Southwest.

MAKES STAINED WINDOWS

France has a master woman glass worker who believes that the medieval artisans had the right idea, writes a correspondent from Paris. She is Miss Marguerite Hure, a French woman in her early thirties and a protegee of Queen Elizabeth of Belgium.

Miss Hure's working plan is simple. First she gets the idea, then executes it with her own hands.

In making the stained-glass windows she has placed in French churches, both old and modern, Miss Hure has not hesitated in applying her theories. Dressed in overalls and flannel shirt, she personally gets right on her job. Sometimes it is a dizzy one atop the scaffolding in a church where there are precious windows hundreds of years old to be repaired. At other times it is designing on a huge scale, or glass cutting, or leading in a studio full of grimy iron devices that look too heavy for woman to handle.

The stained-glass windows of Chartres, which she loved as a child, supplied the key to Miss Hure's life. She talks little about herself or about anything else, preferring action to talk.

She thinks that what modern art needs is less industrialism and a bigger architectural conception. Not bigger in the sense of higher or wider, but more sublime and less influenced by the past.

The modern church of Elizabeth-sur-Seine, in which Miss Hure executed some of the windows, is a step along this road. It was built under the patronage of Elizabeth, Queen of the Belgians, whose name it bears. The Belgian ruler has expressed enthusiasm about the design and coloring of the Hure windows in the church.—[Kansas City Star.

Weather Man's Days Anxious Ones When [illegible] Runs Amuck by Land and Sea

BY REX COLLIER

[Copyright, 1928, by North American [illegible]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Keeping [illegible] hurricane as it lashes its inexorable way over sea and [illegible] most fascinating and withal most important duties [illegible] well-known weather man. Unmindful of the fact that [illegible] emergency he becomes one who is looked up to even [illegible] and that the anxious eyes of a nation are focused upon his handiwork—the fateful storm warnings—he sits quietly in a [illegible] high-ceilinged room of the Weather Bureau and charts [illegible] course of the death-dealing winds.

From far-flung points he receives by radio and cable the reports which tell of the progress of the storm and with colored pencil in hand he constructs the ominous little concentric circles which enable him to trace on the map the probable path of the "disturbance."

Consider the task of the forecaster in the present tropical hurricane, now on the rampage up the coast from stricken Porto Rico. The average newspaper reader first heard of this storm when press reports began to trickle in of catastrophic damage done in the islands far off the southeastern coast of the United States.

TROUBLE LOOMS

Forecaster Mitchell, the tall, smiling senior forecaster at the Weather Bureau, received an inkling of what was to come as long ago as the 10th inst. On that day there came to him from a merchant vessel in mid-ocean, northeast of South America and about 600 miles east of the West Antilles, a radio report of a "disturbance" developing in that far remote ship lane.

The report merely said that a storm of some intensity seemed brewing. There were no details on which to base a forecast of its direction, force or extent. It was just an inkling. Not long afterward, however, there came from a second ship in the same vicinity a corroborative report that started the forecaster and his associates thinking.

On the maps of the 11th inst., there appeared a tiny circle in blue pencil in the position indicated by the ships. It marked the birthplace of one of the worst hurricanes in the history of the bureau, as it turned out later.

HURRICANES' HABITS

Hurricanes have certain peculiarities that are helpful to the weather man in plotting his maps. They always consist of vast areas of air whirling with great velocity about a center. The movement invariably is counter-clockwise and the speed of the winds at the northernmost arc of the area is more terrific than those to the south of the center. The center moves comparatively slowly along a more or less definite course. Once the center is determined, it is a relatively simple matter to take a pencil and draw a line of possible advance.

Forecaster Mitchell did just this as more reports began to come in about the far-away storm. He soon realized that the "little disturbance" noted by the master of the vessel was really a developing tropical hurricane of serious proportions. The storm was heading toward the islands of the Porto Rico group and to them he dispatched without delay definite warnings of the impending storm.

OFF THE TRACK

Hurricanes are fickle things for forecasters to deal with. They have a habit of swerving now and then from the course upon which they have set out and which the forecaster so carefully has charted on his maps. That is why he must proceed with the greatest of caution in issuing advance warnings to any particular locality. A false alarm creates unwarranted distress and havoc.

In the present instance the hurricane took an almost direct path across the West Indies to Florida, then suddenly veered northward along the Atlantic Coast line. Warnings at first were issued to Gulf Coast ports in Alabama and Mississippi which lay in the original path as extended, but these soon were withdrawn as interrupted lines of communication told of the abrupt swing away from the Gulf and north into Georgia and North Carolina.

In the midst of the increasing turmoil created in the forecast room by the flood of messages and reports and inquiries, Forecaster Mitchell must sit in studied concentration on the immediate and pressing work before him.

BLOW UP WORK

Hurricanes mean extra work for everyone. In addition to the regular daily forecasts that must be got out on scheduled time, special hurricane warnings must be formulated and broadcast to affected points. The forecaster cannot allow distractions to turn his attention away from the curious lines and circles and marks which are before him. Human life and valuable property depend on the accuracy with which he promulgates his warnings.

The almost continuous succession of telephone calls for information regarding the progress of the storm must be taken care of by assistants. There is one phone call daily that he manages to answer personally. It comes from Secretary Saunders at the White House, who requests the latest news of the hurricane for President Coolidge.

Mr. Mitchell can hear the voice of the President prompting Secretary Saunders in his questions. [illegible] tunately for all concerned, [illegible] idge times his calls [illegible] arrive at the Bureau [illegible] sure of the morning [illegible] ened. Otherwise [illegible] dent might have to [illegible] self with data supplied [illegible] ordinate of the forecast [illegible]

Forecasting hours [illegible] cause storms [illegible] nor persons. Mr. Mitchell [illegible] associate forecaster [illegible] Wightman, are at their [illegible] at 7:30 o'clock in the [illegible] they do not close their [illegible] nearly midnight.

Even when the forecaster [illegible] his home his brain [illegible] with thoughts of [illegible] pressure, areas [illegible] and such. He has upon [illegible] ders the load [illegible] knowledge that [illegible] thousands of [illegible] hang upon the [illegible] cast.

FORECASTER'S [illegible]

Should he have [illegible] center a little [illegible] moved that storm [illegible] northward? These [illegible] other thoughts [illegible] mind as other [illegible] slumber.

In spite of his [illegible] ries at such a time [illegible] caster succeeds [illegible] wardly, at least, a [illegible] confidence among his [illegible] maintains a morale [illegible] co-operation and [illegible] ficiency.

It is an intriguing [illegible] Mitchell and Mr. W[illegible] their colleagues play [illegible] their own lives depend [illegible] come.

BEATING TEN BOYS CONFESSED

Man Posing as Stock Broker Asserted to Have L[illegible] Youths to Office and Then to Have Tied Them Up; Two-and-Half-Year Jail Term Imposed

Pleading guilty to charges of battery committed on ten boys, Robert Scott, 26 years of age, 670 North Normandie avenue, yesterday was given a total sentence of two and one-half years in jail by Municipal Judge Valentine. Judge Valentine imposed a sentence of six months in jail on each count, but allowed five of the jail terms to run concurrently and five consecutively.

According to Detective Lieutenant Max Berenzweig, who made the arrest, Scott, who had offices in the Hass Building, Broadway and Seventh street, posed as a stock broker and advertised for boys under 19 years of age to learn the stock and bond business. He promised each applicant a salary of $25 monthly and made other promises, it is [illegible] Scott confessed, according [illegible] ensuing, that he gave each [illegible] cant an examination on the [illegible] market, following which he [illegible] boy to a table and gave him a [illegible] ing "for his mistakes," [illegible] a three-foot club or with a [illegible] iron rod. [illegible] years ago a group of men got into an airplane at Curtiss [illegible] Long Island to fly to Washington, in the hope of estab[illegible] an air line. It was not a long flight, nor a difficult one, [illegible] made frequently now even in bad weather. But air trans[illegible] then and cross-country flying was largely a matter [illegible]

[illegible] of the best pilots in the coun[illegible] at the controls. Airplane [illegible] were rare in those days, [illegible] instruments now in com[illegible] had not been invented. "[illegible] the Capitol," he said. "[illegible] are a lot of other build[illegible] that look like some in Washing[illegible] where's the Potomac?"

[illegible] was some doubt about it [illegible] Washington, but the plane [illegible] running out of gas and the pilot decided to land. There was not any landing field, but he finally managed to come down safely on an empty, smooth place in a cemetery. The city turned out to be Harrisburg, Pa.

That was the history of much of the early cross-country flying in embryo transport lines. Most of them died in infancy. The records of many early routes are followed by the word "discontinued."

There were several reasons for these early failures. Airplanes were not safe enough. People did not want to fly. The art of cross-country flying had not been learned at all.

LOS ANGELES AIDS IN BUILDING HIGH ROAD

Highway Eventually Will Cross High Sierras to Porterville; Route Pierces Scenic Land

BY JOHN L. VON BLON

Rising to such thrilling heights as to conquer the Sierra Nevada and commanding a seemingly infinite sweep of mountain, canyon and valley, the road into the Cottonwood Lakes basin projected by this city, Inyo county and the United States Forest Service will be one of the most spectacular in America and a revelation and an inspiration to motorists. The heart of a glorious fastness almost at our doors will be opened.

Construction was begun last Thursday. A temporary delay was caused by the St. Francis Dam disaster, which necessitated the diversion of all available Department of Water and Power funds in that direction; but an Inyo appropriation of $4000 was used to start the big work on the lofty route, already staked out all the way. City steam shovels and other equipment are employed.

WILSHIRE TO BE FINISHED

The contract for the last link of Wilshire Boulevard remaining unpaved between Westlake Park to the beach at Santa Monica, is soon to be awarded. The George R. Curtis Paving Company are low bidders on this major project which involves the construction of 333,767 square feet of asphalt pavement, six inches thick, with curbs, walks, gutters, storm drain, and an ornamental lighting system.

This improvement extends from Federal to Veteran avenue and will be of the same type of construction as used on Wilshire from Westlake to Fairfax.

PUZZLE TOO MUCH FOR SHERIFF

Harry Wright Wants Answer to Question, "Why Lock the Door When Garage is Empty Then Leave Car Unlocked for Thief to Take Away?"

Why a man will lock his home and carefully bolt the windows when the value of his movable effects may not total $200, and will at the same time leave a $2000 automobile standing unlocked at the curb, a temptation to every thief; why the same man will rush frantically to the police station to report burglars who have broken into his home and stolen goods and trinkets not to exceed $17 in value, and will in the most casual manner notify the officers that a $2000 car has been stolen, is a mystery that the Sheriff's office and insurance officers would like to have solved, according to Harry Wright, chief deputy of the criminal department of Sheriff Traeger's office.

Its solution, he asserts, may assist in solving the problem of how to curtail automobile thefts.

"Admittedly many a boy," he said, "has been started to the penitentiary because of the ease with which he could steal a car to go joyriding. Admittedly many lives have been crushed out by stolen cars driven at a high rate of speed throughout cities by thieves, burglars and bandits in their getaways. Admittedly, therefore, every person who leaves an unlocked car in the streets is a potential accessory before the fact to theft, robbery and murder. And yet nine out of ten owners of automobiles will not take the few seconds of

GASOLINE NOW MORE VOLATILE

Smmer Grade Fuel Better Than During 1927

Standardization Trend of Manufacturers

San Francisco Used for Tests on Coast

WASHINGTON (D. C.) Sept. 22. (Exclusive) — The motor gasoline marketed in the United States this summer is slightly more volatile than that sold a year ago, according to the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of Commerce, which recently completed its eighteenth semiannual motor-gasoline survey. The increase in volatility is shown by a lowering of the distillation temperatures, ranging from 2 degrees F. at the average initial boiling point to 4 deg. F. at the average end point.

In the past there has usually been a distinct difference between "summer" and "winter" gasoline, that marketed during the summer being less volatile than that sold during the winter. During several years this difference was very small and was confined to the lower end of the distillation range. This summer the average figures indicate a decided return to the sale of a less volatile summer-grade gasoline, the change being especially evident in the samples from New York, Washington, Chicago, New Orleans and St. Louis. This difference is most noticeable in the initial and 20 per cent points. A study of the individual analyses, however, shows a general tendency toward the marketing of a standardized product, as individual variations from the average are small.

JANUARY BETTER

Although the gasoline marketed this summer is more volatile than that sold during the summer of 1927, it is less volatile than that marketed in January, 1928. There is a decided tendency toward better fractionation in the manufacture of gasoline.

During the past nine years the Bureau of Mines has made semiannual surveys of the gasoline marketed in the United States. The cities in which samples were collected have been chosen as representative of the more important marketing territories, as it is obviously impracticable to obtain a sample of every gasoline sold in the entire country.

BAY CITY ON COAST

The cities in which the eighteenth semiannual motor-gasoline survey was conducted are Boston, New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago, New Orleans, St. Louis, Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, Bartlesville, Okla., and Laramie, Wyo. Detailed information in regard to the results of the survey are given in Serial 2887, by E. C. Lane, D. B. Taliaferro, Jr., and J. A. Mann, copies of which may be obtained from the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

time necessary to lock the machine—why?"

With traffic in stolen cars mounting into millions, with insurance rates increasing annually as a result and crime becoming more complex daily, some means must be found to make the American public lock its automobiles, Chief Wright declared.

Solution of this problem will be the next great step in the fight to prevent crime, he stated.

OILING WORK DONE ON ARROWHEAD TRAIL

The Arrowhead Trail from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City is being oiled from the town of Jean to a point ten miles beyond Las Vegas. During the work the old country road will be used in places, states the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

RIGHT and WRONG LUBRICATING

Right automobile lubricating is systematic, periodic, recorded lubricating with the right type of lubricant for each part. It is not confined to occasional shots of grease in the obvious grease cups, but includes regular cleaning and repacking of such parts as the wheels, differential, transmission, universals, etc.

Right lubricating does more than eliminate squeaks. It makes motoring safer and more economical. It insures against rapid depreciation, frequent repairs and accidents.

There is only one way to get right lubricating. And that's to go to one company regularly—a responsible place where conscientious work is done.

Those who don't believe in haphazard grease shooting should investigate the McBryde 12,000-mile lubricating and tightening service. McBryde keeps accurate records on each car, insuring against oversight and neglect.

In its effort to improve roadside stands, complete plans and specifications of any of the prize-winning Stands Competitions, care of the tary of the Wayside Refreshment Stands Competitions, Care of the Art Center, 65 East Fifty-sixth street, New York. In future contests stands must conform with the prize winning design, must be in harmony with the surrounding landscape, and must show good taste and restraint in the use of advertising matter.

It is pointed out by the Automobile Club of Southern California that not only from an artistic viewpoint but from the standpoint of business, attractive wayside stands are the only ones that will survive in the keen competition now prevailing for the trade of motorists. The time has passed when tourists will stop at a dilapidated, sign-infested, and ill-appearing roadside stand because they know that a little further along a more desirable place to eat or trade will be found. Aside from being a blemish on the landscape, the poorly fitted, bedraggled, sign-clustered shack is foredoomed to be a business failure for the very logical reason that motorists are no longer compelled to patronize the first wayside stand in sight.

NON-SKID PAVING WORK TO BE DONE

The announcement comes from the Highway Department, District No. 8, of which E. I. Sullivan is engineer, that the department will receive bids for the improvement of a section of State highway, between 0.7 miles south of Kane Springs and Arroyo Salado Wash, about 13.5 miles. The improvement to be constructed will involve grading and resurfacing with asphalt pavement of the new nonskid type, as recently developed by the Highway Department.

in the sense that they are "here today and gone tomorrow."

It is true that hundreds of the autos with out-of-State licenses stop here for the night, their passengers accepting the shelter of the camps, but it has been found that many of the "campers" stay even for months and that many of the cabins are occupied by the families of mechanics with jobs of lasting sort. It is the rare mechanic nowadays who has no auto and a large number of the machines parked beside the cabins are not of inexpensive sort.

The courts are just what are wanted by the itinerant workers in the lettuce, cantaloupe and fruit-growing industries, in which are well-paid experts who shuttle between the California and Arizona fields, packing plants and box factories. It is notable that the present-day traveler along Southern Arizona highways sees few tents set up along the way, while relatively little custom is enjoyed by those who offer parking space and tent room. Shelter, cooking arrangements and sanitation are demanded by all but the poorest tourists and travelers. Arizona now is making rigid inspection of all auto camps, with respect to the quality of water furnished and the sanitary facilities.

Haiti now asserts a population of 2,500,000.

FINANCE PLAN READY

DETROIT, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—An interesting announcement was made this week at the Ford executive offices to the effect that the authorized Ford finance plan of time payments was now completed and ready.

The new Universal Credit Company has been created to act as the specialized financial institution to provide an authorized time payment plan throughout the United States. The new company is Ford-controlled and financed. Two branches, one in Detroit and the other in Kansas City are now open for business. As rapidly as possible a total of thirty-five branches will be established.

Branches at New York, Boston, Chicago and Atlanta are organized and will commence business activity within the next few weeks.

The Universal Credit Company plans purchase of Ford cars at lowest possible financing costs.

Car Expected to Surpass Predecessors

Popularity of the new Peerless 6-81 model which appeared about a month ago is such that it is expected to be the greatest success of any model produced by Peerless in the twenty-seven years of that company's existence, states Harry A. Lord, president of the Lord Motor Car Company, Southern California distributor.

It is the first complete effort of the new Peerless management which went into power last April, he stated, and it is especially interesting to the automobile trade at large as well as the owners all over the country.

"The Peerless 6-81 has been pronounced one of the outstanding achievements of the year both in body design and chassis construction," explained Mr. Lord. "It was built with a special appeal to women owners and drivers. Leon R. German, president of the Peerless Motor Car Company, declared the company prides itself on the fact that it has produced an automobile inspired by modern ideas of comfort, good looks and performance.

"The designers tried to give the car that elusive thing called style and achieved their purpose admirably. The car was built to serve the owner satisfactorily over a period of years. It is marked by its advanced engineering and is a car that will not be out of date in a season.

Satisfaction Given Owners of Small Cars

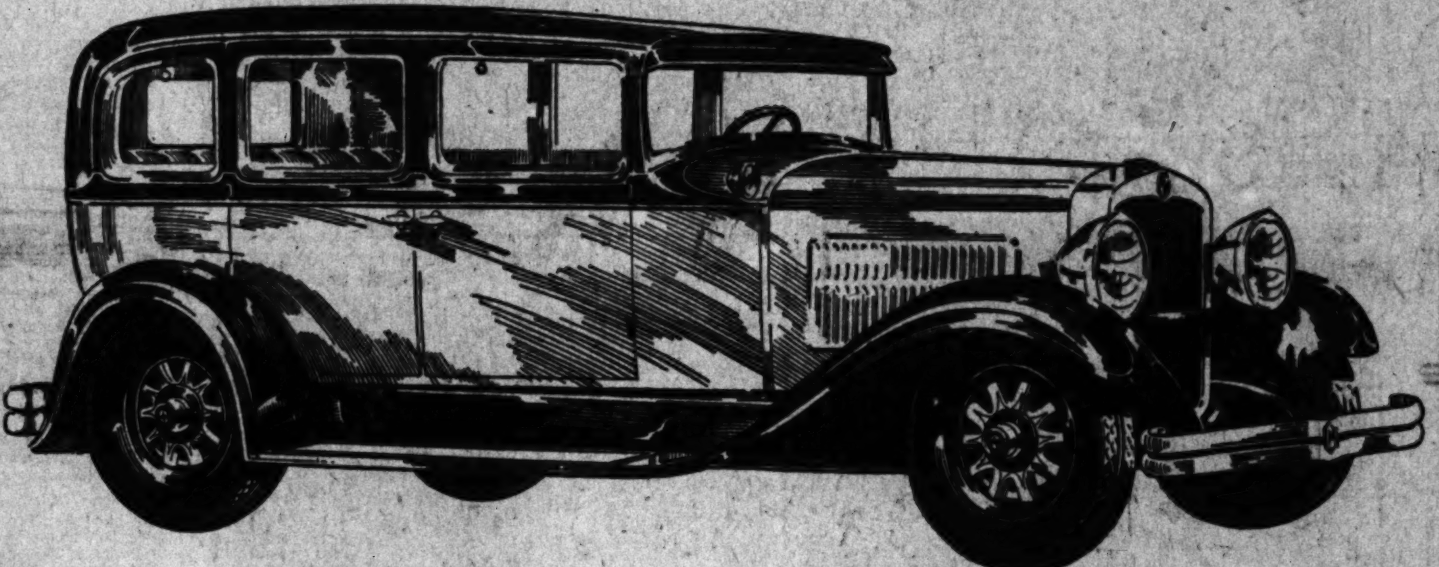
When an automobile gives real driving satisfaction it endears itself to its owner, no matter what price he paid for it. After all that is what a person wants in a car, declares Harry A. Lord, president of the Lord Motor Car Company, distributor of the Falcon-Knight six.

Mr. Lord points to the Falcon-Knight as a car that gives driving satisfaction in full measure and calls attention to the small number that reach the used-car market. The owners are satisfied and keep them, he declared.

"This sleeve-valve motored six-cylinder automobile gives amazing performance," asserted Mr. Lord. "Its forty-five horse-power engine whisks it along silently and smoothly at all speeds and always appears to have something in reserve for an emergency. It rolls along without making any fuss and no sign of strain is felt even at high speeds. It fairly swarms up steep hills in high gear.

"Those who have driven the Falcon-Knight in the mountains in the summer over long, stiff grades know something of the real joy in mountain driving. When other cars are laid up along the road with radiators boiling the Falcon-Knight passes merrily along with the engine at just the right temperature for efficient driving. That is because of its sleeve-valve construction which gives a larger cooling area than is possible in engines of the poppet-valve type.

THE WORLD HAS A NEW NASH AND FINER MOTOR CAR



* Art Goebel won the Dole Race from San Francisco to Hawaii, then he hung up a new record for a Coast to Coast continuous flight, with a twin ignition, high compression, valve-in-head motor. And then he bought a new Nash "400," to get the same kind of performance from his motor car that carried Lindbergh over the Atlantic, Goebel* over the Pacific, Byrd over the Pole!

In history-making flights Lindbergh, Byrd, Goebel* and a host of others have established dramatically and conclusively the superiority and reliability of twin ignition, high compression, valve-in-head motor performance.

These three great principles of motor construction provided extra reliability, superpower and extreme economy of gasoline consumption in the motors which powered their ships.

And all three principles are combined in the great new Nash Twin Ignition Motor which powers all Nash "400" Special and Advanced Six models.

The Nash Twin Ignition Motor, with two ignition coils instead of one, two spark plugs (airplane type) to each cylinder instead of one, 360 sparks a second instead of 180, at top speed, burns the highly compressed gases more thoroughly and economically.

The result is more power from less gasoline, and ordinary gasoline at that. No special, high priced fuels are required for the Twin Ignition Motor.

Nash Twin Ignition performance is noticeably different and far finer than anything you ever have experienced.

Once you drive the great new Nash "400," you are certain never to be contented with the performance of older types of motors.

CARBURETOR FACTORY TO ADD BUILDINGS

Jack Jeffers, local distributor of Schebler carburetors, has just been advised by the Schebler factory that plans have been approved and contracts let for additional buildings and equipment to be added to the present plant at Indianapolis, Ind.

When the new units are completed, which it is expected will be not later than January, 1929, the Schebler plant will be the largest carburetor-manufacturing establishment in the United States, according to Jeffers.

Roadster Gets High Praise of Local Dealer

What is declared to be the ultimate in roadster luxury is the new Stearns-Knight eight-cylinder roadster, announces L. V. Starr, vice-president and general manager of J. W. Leavitt & Co., Stearns-Knight distributor. One of these has been placed on display on the Leavitt showroom floor.

"This car, which is one of marvelous performance ability, has a body finish of a very rich shade of green, relieved with thin white stripes," said Mr. Starr. "The fenders and dust aprons are jet black while the wire wheels are of a light orange shade. The spare tires are carried in front fender wells and each is encased in black tire covers. This combination is very beautiful and effective.

"There is a dash of brightness lent the car by the highly polished nickel-plated windshield frame, also by a wide nickel strip running across the front of the cowl and holding the full nickeled cowl lamps. There also are large new type full nickeled head lamps and a wide nickeled radiator.

"The interior is finished in green to match the exterior and the seat is upholstered with fine mulberry green grain leather. This seat is very deep and wide enough for three persons although it is intended for but two. The controls are easy to reach and the car can be steered with one finger, despite its long wheelbase. It has an unusually short turning radius for a car of its size.

"The top is of tan Burbank cloth finely tailored and mounted on polished wood and steel bows. The rear window is removable and curtains make the front section very snug in inclement weather. There is large rumble seat which opens automatically when a lever is moved

Association of Sales Managers Elects Officers

At the annual election of officers held at a meeting at the Commercial Club, the Sales Managers' Association of the Los Angeles Motor Car Dealers' Association, elected J. W. A. B. Hull, sales manager for the Nash-Breyer Motor Company, was elected vice-president, and Morton Bowman, La Salle sales manager for Don Lee, was elected secretary-treasurer.

After the election, F. E. Guinney, Cadillac sales manager for Don Lee, who served as president of the association during the past year, turned the gavel over to Mr. Brigance, who was vice-president last year.

Just as style creators have rejected unnecessary bulk and conspicuous curves, so has Studebaker designed the new President Eight with an ingenious sweep of line to accent the slender, low, graceful fleetness of the car.

The President is styled in all the favored colors of Autumn—the colors approved by fashion experts, for smartness and good taste.

Men and women alike find satisfaction in the President's ability to travel 30,000 miles in less than 27,000 minutes. This amazing demonstration means unfailing power, under perfect control, to make every kind of driving easier—safer—a greater joy.

The New Club Brougham by PIERCE-ARROW at

America's finest motor car— at the lowest price in its history!

A very special value in fine motor cars is this new model which luxuriously accommodates five passengers. With two-door beauty and four-door accessibility. With every last fine detail carried out in the same degree of perfection that made this car an outstanding one in recent salon showings.

At a much higher price, the new Club Brougham was regarded as the most generous offer of the fine car market.

At today's figure, it is without precedent.

An appealing choice of color combinations is afforded in this featured model. The upholstery and fittings are of Pierce-Arrow quality and design. The equipment is complete beyond the most liberal of today's standards.

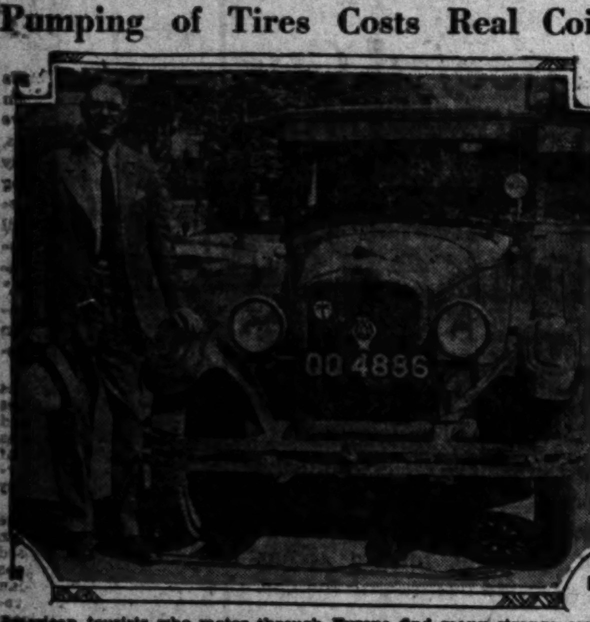
EUROPEAN TOUR SURPRISES

Pumping of Tires Costs Real Coin



American tourists who motor through Europe find many strange conditions, according to H. Clegg Butt, of Beverly Hills, who has just returned home after a motor trip abroad. Butt is shown here with his sturdy little Pontiac six sedan which took him over 35,000 miles in England, Scotland, France and Germany. Notice the substantial license plate secured in England.

IMAGINE driving in traffic and having to wait for myriads of horse-drawn vehicles and bicycles to take their time. Imagine driving into a garage to have your tires pumped up, and then have to pay 36 cents for that particular bit of mechanical attention. Imagine other things of a similar nature, and you have a conception of the strange situations encountered by an automobile tourist in Europe.

W. Clegg Butt of Beverly Hills, who has just returned from a ten months' tour in Europe, reports a number of interesting observations. Butt left Los Angeles last November in his 1926 model Pontiac sedan, accompanied by his sister, and drove to New York City, where the car was put on the liner Olympic for the trip to Europe.

The car was landed at Southhampton, and Butt's motor trip started. According to the customs officials, the Pontiac was the first of its make ever in England. After touring England, Butts shipped the car across the English Channel to the continent.

NO SPEED LIMIT

"In touring through France and Germany, I found that the motorists there are not bothered with any speed limit. You can drive the cars as fast as the road conditions will permit. I made the 1167 kilometers from Paris to Monte Carlo in two days, or at the rate of over 300 miles per day," Butt told officials of Reeve Gartzmann, Inc., Oakland-Pontiac distributors.

"The American touring Europe by motor has little trouble with customs regulations at the various international boundaries, and receives good treatment from the officials, as well as from the natives. After three months of driving on the continent, I shipped the car back to England, and toured through Scotland and Wales.

"I had to get a license at once, at the rate of $5 for each horsepower of the Pontiac's engine. This method of taxation explains why small cars of only eight or nine horsepower are so popular. All foreign cars get the QQ International license plate, and the number remains the same for the life of the car.

ONE BIG GARDEN

"As a tourist, I was impressed that Europe is just one big garden, but missed the open spaces we are accustomed to here in America. In England and on the continent, gasoline, or petrol, costs about 45 cents per imperial gallon, which contains five quarts. This is because of the heavy governmental tax imposed, and in one place in France, I had to pay at the rate of $1.25 per gallon.

"I was quite surprised at one English garage," Butt continued, "when I had to pay 1 and 4 pence, or about 35 cents in American money, to have a tire pumped up. Even at that the pumping was done with an old-style hand pump. There is no free air in Europe, and the type of service we are used to at American gasoline stations and tire shops is unknown.

FILL OWN TANK

"Roadside gas stations in Europe are conspicuous by their absence, and sometimes you get the petrol by the can and put it in the tank yourself.

"When I took my Pontiac to Europe, it had already gone about 70,000 miles. I traveled 34,000 more abroad, and when I took the car off the boat at Wilmington, after shipping it from Chelsee, Wales, the speedometer read 104,000 miles. My driving was made pleasant by the splendid performance of the car, as it had no mechanical trouble whatover."

While in England, Butts, who is an ardent tennis fan, was one of the official referee at the Wimbledon lawn tennis meet in July. Butts officiated at a number of the matches participated in by Helen Wills, "Bill" Tilden, and the famous European stars.

AUGUST CAR SALES HERE SET HIGH MARK IN CASH TOTAL

Unmistakeable evidence of a sharp rise in the barometer of Southern California prosperity was given last week in the release by Motor-Fax of the August totals of new car registrations in Southern California. A total of 12,098 new cars were purchased during the month in Southern California, the largest month's business for almost three years, and a figure that has been seldom reached in the entire history of the motor industry here.

Though not the largest month in total of motor deliveries, August business is believed to have set a new high record for dollar volume in the entire history of the motor-car trade in Southern California.

In the few previous monthly periods which have overtopped it in sales, Ford was at the very peak of his greatest production, and contributing in some instances over 5000 cars per month. Though increasing steadily each month, this year, nothing like the old production figures have yet been attained by Ford. The Ford contribution to the figures of last month was 2060 sales, giving them second place in the totals under Chevrolet, who registered 2419 cars for the month. This, incidentally, was the highest single month's registration in Chevrolet history, excelling even their best performance in the banner year of 1923, which until last month held the high place in the history of the California motor industry. The August sales record, with a much higher proportion of medium and high-priced sales, unquestionably represents the greatest dollar volume ever known in the industry here.

Records of the past five years disclose that August is not normally one of the peak months in motor-car sales. The increase this August over that of August, 1927, is 3331 cars, a figure decisive enough to bring great satisfaction to the trade here.

The sharp rise in motor-car sales is interpreted by Burt Roberts, secretary of the Motor Car Dealers' Association of Los Angeles, as a prosperity in other lines of trade.

"The upward swing of the motor-car sales curve in 1923 marked a year of great prosperity in every line," said Roberts yesterday. "It forecast a notably heavy building campaign and an active real-estate market. People buy motor cars steadily the year round because they are a vital necessity for personal transportation, but when money becomes plentiful, they buy them, of course, much more freely. For August to pass the 12,000-car mark, with Ford still far from peak production, is evidence that there was more money to spend for motor cars available last month than ever before in Southern California.

"Certainly it ought to give the last touch necessary to dispose of the old Presidential year business bugaboo. The motor-buying public—which means everybody—is certainly not particularly worried over the outcome of the November election.

"This year opened rather slowly in motor-car sales. The early months were all below the corresponding months of 1927, but late spring and summer overcame last year's lead, and with the addition of August totals, the year to date is slightly ahead of 1927.

"Many people still believe that the motor-car industry continues to grow by leaps and bounds, but this is far from being true. It has reached a stage of very steady production, as far as totals are concerned. Public favor swings from one car to another, and individual sales totals vary, but the general average remains surprisingly even. A comparison of totals is interesting. Comparing the first eight months' registrations for the past six years in Southern California you have the following figures:

1924	67,724
1925	69,593
1926	76,808
1927	73,837
1928	73,981

"Barring the peak year of 1923, which may not be equalled for a long while to come, the figures do not show a great variation. Such a decisive advance in a single month as that which August developed is therefore unusually interesting and in my opinion is indicative of a marked betterment in all lines of business in Southern California."

Demonstration of Economy in Car Made

To substantiate economy claims made for the Hudson with the introduction of the F-head motor last year, the factory has conducted a nation-wide economy demonstration campaign extending over the past three months. The results of these tests have been compiled by the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company, Hudson and Essex distributors for Southern California and are presented as an amazing proof of the economy that can be engineered into a motor of 288 cubic-inch displacement. These tests showed an average over the nation of 17.2 miles to the gallon of gasoline.

"It is an admitted fact that gasoline mileage is affected by both weather and road conditions even if the motor is perfectly tuned," explained George Danielson, general superintendent of the Murphy Company. Cold hills, rough roads, sand, all tend to cut down mileage. So the factory called for tests from all over the country and under all road and weather conditions. These tests were made under the supervision of newspaper men, private owners and, where available, officers of automobile clubs."

"The results were indeed gratifying. They range from 16.2 miles on a trip through the Dakota bad lands to considerably over eighteen here in California. Seattle, with all its hills, averaged an even seventeen as a composite average of all its tests.

Plane Service Given by Truck

"Among the thousands of visitors in attendance at the National Air races and aeronautical exposition at Mines Field last week there were probably few, indeed, who had any realization of the immense amount of labor involved in servicing the hundreds of planes taking part in the daily maneuvers," says L. H. Clawson, sales manager of Motor Tires, Inc., distributors of Goodyear passenger car, truck and airplane tires.

"Airplanes, like all other mechanical contrivances, must be constantly serviced," says Mr. Clawson, "in order that they may function properly, and this service applies to numerous other parts of the planes in addition to the motors themselves.

"Air and water are just as necessary to the proper functioning of the planes as gasoline and oil," says Clawson, "and in order to take proper care of this important phase of the service at Mines Field, Motor Tires, Inc., maintained one of their airplane service trucks and a corps of expert mechanics in continual operation day and night during the entire time of the show."

According to Mr. Clawson, the numerous army and navy planes taking part in the daily maneuvers made it necessary for the Motor Tires crew to work far into the night in order that these planes might be in efficient working order for the day's operations. In addition to servicing the planes with air and water, a complete stock of Goodyear airplane tires was kept in the service truck so that at no time was it necessary for the pilots to go outside Mines Field for this type of service.

Motor-Wise Buyer Looks Under Hood

Los Angeles is essentially a motor-wise city.

With more automobiles registered in Los Angeles and vicinity than there are families, motorists have learned the value of thorough acquaintance with their cars.

Beauty is no longer the only criterion by which a new car is judged, states J. M. Sterling, of the Graham-Paige Company of Southern California.

"While motorists are highly interested in fine lines and flashing colors," Sterling says, "they now look under the hood, and ask pertinent and highly intelligent questions as to the motor, chassis, and other mechanical features.

The four-speed transmission on Graham-Paige cars is a source of interest to motorists. Years of driving experience have shown them the necessity for this new gear shift.

"While they admit the value of the four-speed gearshift, most persons inquire into the construction and operation of that feature.

STARR IN NEW POST

There is a long list of men who have directed the growth of the automobile industry in Southern California who later have been drafted by large manufacturing firms in the East for executive positions. Hardly a distributing organization here but what has graduated one or more of these executives. One of the most recent to leave the Coast is L. V. Starr, vice-president of J. W. Leavitt & Co., who has assumed the new duties of general manager of the United Chromium, Inc., in New York.

WHY SHOULDN'T IT BE the finest of Low-Priced Sixes?

—a Successful Six now winning Even Greater Success

Everywhere you go, you hear Pontiac referred to as the finest of low-priced sixes . . . and never was any car more clearly entitled to a position of accepted leadership in quality and value!

In its basic design, today's Pontiac Six is the product of two great engineering staffs—General Motors' and Oakland's. Its ruggedness, dependability and stamina are the result of months and years of testing at the General Motors Proving Ground. Its modish appearance and luxurious comfort reflect the supremacies of bodies by Fisher. Its many mechanical advancements and its exceptional features of equipment and detail are made possible by the economies of General Motors' combined purchasing power. And it is built in America's most modern automobile plant—a vast daylight factory less than two years old and containing every advancement that modern manufacturing science can bring to the production of automobiles.

These are five great fundamental advantages enjoyed by no other builder of low-priced sixes. So why shouldn't today's Pontiac Six be everywhere regarded as the outstanding car of its field? Why shouldn't it offer definite superiorities in performance and appearance . . . definite assurance of greater owner satisfaction? Come in today and drive the car whose success continues to be the marvel of the automotive world. One ride will tell you all!

An outstanding example of Pontiac's many quality features is the coincidental lock pioneered by Oakland. One turn of the key locks both transmission and ignition.

PRODUCT OF GENERAL MOTORS

New Dodge Senior Six Displayed Today

NEW DODGE SENIOR HERE

Style in motor-car design that reflects tomorrow's fashion is represented in the new senior six models announced by Dodge Brothers Corporation in six body types now on display in the salesroom of Thompson-De Jarnette Company, local dealer. Body lines and interior appointments have been harmonized in a new style creation.

Exceptional riding comfort made possible by the fact that springs extend nearly 80 per cent of the car's wheel base, longer and roomier bodies together with ruggedness and dependability, which have gained Dodge Brothers products a world-wide reputation, are featured in the car.

Driven by a six-cylinder "L" head motor, exhaustive tests have proven the new car to have lightning acceleration to high speeds, and capable of economically sustaining those speeds for hours with the minimum of vibration and driving effort. New standards of performance are claimed in its operation. Controlling this speed and power are Lockheed hydraulic internal expanding four-wheel brakes, operated by the lightest touch of the foot pedal. The hand brake operates on the propeller shaft, and the lever is located at the left of the driver.

CHROMIUM PLATING USED

Exterior hardware of the new senior, including radiator shell, head lamps, bumpers, hub caps, door handles, cowl lamps and molding and spare-tire brackets are chrome plated, attractively setting off the body lacquers and color combinations in which the car is available. The rakish body, representing new achievements in design, affords maximum vision and comfort for every passenger. Insulation of rubber and felt eliminate all vibration between the body sills and frame. Doors are of the wide rugged type with heavy hinges and buffers to provide quiet closing and positive lock.

Four Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers control the spring action, and balloon tires (31x6) properly complete the senior's roadability. Wooden wheels are used on the standard models with six wire wheels on the sport models and the landau sedan. The two spare wire wheels are carried in welled front fenders. The six body types are landau sedan, sedan, sport sedan, Victoria brougham, coupe and sport coupe.

Interior appointments of the new senior represent luxury and quality found in only the high-priced cars. The door handles of individual pattern, dome lights and ash trays are in butler silver finish, lending unusual richness and beauty. Upholstery of all models is in broadcloth or mohair over deeply padded form-fitting seats, tilted at the proper angles for riding comfort. Doors open wide, to permit easy entrance and exit. Trunk racks are provided in the rear of sport models and landau sedan. Heavy front and rear bumpers are standard equipment on all types.

INSTRUMENTS GROUPED

Grouped under a frosted silver finished panel, are the speedometer, engine temperature indicator, fuel gauge, ammeter and oil gauge. Carburetor adjuster and manifold heat control are at the driver's right, and ignition switch with theft lock is in the left panel. The windshield is the one-piece type. Automatic wiper, rear view mirror and cowl ventilator are provided. A cigar lighter is in the steering post bracket. Light-control levers and spark and gasoline throttles are mounted on top of the steering wheel by the horn button. Automatic thermostatically controlled radiator shutters afford the greatest year-around engine economy and efficiency. Head lamps are of Tiltray type.

The engine crankshaft is completely machined, dynamically and statically balanced and is supported by seven bearings having a total area of 28.36 square inches. Lubrication is high-pressure force feed through oil passages drilled in the block to the main bearings, and drilled through the crankshaft to the connecting rod bearings. Camshaft bearings are lubricated by drilled ducts, and a special passage discharges oil into the generator drive sprocket bearing under pressure and through the sprocket to the inside surface of the timing chain. A large capacity oil pump is of the gear type.

STANDARD GEAR SHIFT

Chrome vanadium steel, heat treated and hardened, the most durable material possible to obtain, is used in transmission gears, rear-axle gears, steering knuckles and arms and all spring leaves. Transmission is standard shift, selective sliding gear type, three speeds forward and one reverse.

The rear axle is spiral bevel gear type with four bevel gear differentials. Steering is of the worm and sector type, affording the greatest driving ease. Ball and socket type ends on both tie rod and drag link permit automatic adjustment for wear.

Increase Made in Tire Sales

The General Tire and Rubber Company announced a sales increase of 16 per cent for the first nine months of the fiscal year ending September 1, over the same period last year, according to A. H. Rude, head of A. H. Rude & Co., General tire distributors here.

"The General Tire and Rubber Company enjoyed the most successful year in its history," Rude says. "All departments are operating at full capacity. Business now on the books for the next three months is sufficient, even if no further orders were to come in, to show an increase for the final quarter over the final three months a year ago.

William O'Neil, president of the General Tire and Rubber Company, announced that more tires were manufactured, more sales made, and greater cash receipts registered than last year, when the company made the greatest percentage of gains in the rubber industry.

"O'Neil stated that the increase for the entire year 1928 over 1927 will be limited only by the ability of the production department to keep step wit hthe demand.

"The introduction of the new dual balloon has acted as a stimulant to sales. Interests in the new perfected balloon tire rivals that displayed when the first balloons were put on the market several years ago."

EMERGENCY SERVICE USED

Emergency road service was sent to 3517 members stalled on the highways during August by the Automobile Club of Southern California road service department, and 1545 of these cars were started by the mechanics on the road.

BRAKES ON NEW MODEL IMPROVED

Easily Applied Mechanical Type Appliance Praised by Makers

An engineering triumph equal in importance to many of its most important engine developments has been accomplished by the engineering division of the Cadillac Motor Car Company in producing its new system of brakes, in the opinion of Ernest W. Seaholm, Cadillac-La Salle chief engineer, expressed to J. E. Brown, Southern California manager for Don Lee, California distributor of Cadillac and La Salle motor cars.

"In the new Cadillac-La Salle braking system," Mr. Seaholm states, "the parking and service brakes are entirely independent in every detail of their construction. The service brakes are so easy to operate that the company has called them 'effortless.' The required brake pedal pressure is extremely light and the distance which the brake pedal must travel is short. The brakes are particularly long-lived and effective, are unaffected by weather conditions and retain all of their efficiency no matter how severe the usage, as in traveling mountainous countries.

"For many years the automobile industry has gone ahead improving engines. Today's high speeds and traffic congestion require brakes just as good as the engines."

"A similar situation," he continues, "arose years ago in regard to braking for railroad trains. It was discovered then that the speed of a train is governed not by the engine but by the efficiency of its brakes. The speed of powerful engines was useless until there were brakes with which to stop the train quickly.

"In the new Cadillac and La Salle cars, the new four-wheel braking systems are exactly the same in design. They differ only in size. They have been tested in thousands of miles of General Motors proving ground driving; and last spring in a trial trip from Detroit to California and return, they were given the severest possible use on every mountain grade.

"The new system can be described as duplex, mechanical, internal, 'effortless,' and of the shoe type.

"It is 'duplex because there are two entirely independent sets of brake shoes which are applied in the foot, or service brakes, and in the parking, or hand brake.

"Four pairs of massive, aluminum alloy shoes, one pair acting on each of the four wheels, are applied through the service brake pedal. Two additional shoes, one on each of the rear wheels and entirely independent of the service brakes, are applied through the hand lever for parking purposes or in an emergency. This gives double insurance of safe stopping at all times.

"The new braking system is called 'internal,' because the brakes are entirely inclosed and completely protected from water, mud and dust.

"In former braking systems, a large per cent of the pressure applied to the brake pedal was lost in friction. To overcome this, sixteen roller bearings, installed on all brake-operating shafts, have cut friction in half. Added to this, newly devised leverages are applied in the brake mechanism; and the two devices have made pedal pressure practically effortless."

First of New Models Delivered to Livery Head

The first of the new series Cadillacs delivered in Los Angeles was taken by C. C. Tanner, owner of the Tanner Motor Livery of Los Angeles. The car is a seven-passenger sedan.

Auto Augments Transportation of Sea Hawks

The crowds thrilled, and the thrills turned to chills—they shouted, then moaned! Dizzily sideslipping above them into turns, banks, dives, rolls, cavorting upside down, then madly chasing one another into a dazzling series of loops. Then, almost together, six wheels and three tail skids touched the ground in a pin-point landing, and the internationally famous "Three Sea Hawks," pride of the navy flyers, taxied easily over to ride in their chosen "land ship," a new Century Hupmobile eight-cylinder sedan.

During their stay in Los Angeles for the national air races at Mines Field, Lieuts. Tomlinson, Davis and Storres had their pick of two modes of transportation, including three of the best planes the Naval Air Service could muster, and whatever they pleased for land travel.

A. R. Reedall, manager of the Greer-Robbins Company, California Hupmobile distributor, expressed great pleasure when the famous flyers chose the new Century sedan for their land excursions, and received enthusiastic comments from the Sea Hawks on the performance of the latest series Hupmobile.

No comment on their aerial performances is needed for air-minded Angelenos, who followed their every move with eager interest and who hailed them as "making the show" during the nine-day exhibition closed last week. It was reported at the close of the meeting that because of orders calling Lieut. Tomlinson, leader of the trio, to the Atlantic seaboard, the local performance was to be their last together.

LETTER HAS PRAISE FOR NEW AUTO

Trip to Taft Made by Car Owner Reveals High Fuel Mileage

The following is a copy of a letter received last week by Mr. Seaton, a salesman connected with the W. P. Herbert Company, local Chandler representatives, which shows what the owners of the new Chandlers think of their investment.

Mr. Seaton,
Care of W. P. Herbert Company,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Mr. Seaton:

Realizing that your best information in regard to new models comes from owner drivers I want to give you this Road Log of my first 500 miles.

As you know, I took delivery of my Chandler "65" sedan on September 1. On the following Monday night I left for Taft, Cal., over the Ridge Route and had only driven forty-eight miles up to that time. Made the trip entirely at night and kept within twenty to twenty-five miles per hour for the entire distance.

Filled the gas tank at San Fernando to running over and when I reached Taft I had gone 134 miles. Placed the car in a garage and let it run for about five hours, then drove it till it showed 154 miles for the trip. Filled the tank with seven gallons which showed a mileage of more than twenty miles to the gallon in addition to the time it ran while in the garage.

On the return trip I again filled the tank to running over and when I reached San Fernando the speedometer again showed 134 miles and it took just seven gallons to fill it.

The return trip was made during the middle of the day with the thermometer over 100 deg. when I left Taft. This trip mileage showed nineteen plus miles per gallon, and the return trip was made at a speed of about twenty-eight to thirty miles per hour.

In addition to this, what I consider, remarkable mileage for a new car I want to say that I am more than delighted with its wonderful power. It does not seem to recognize hills at all. I drove up a hill in Santa Monica, in high gear, that some big cars, that sell for twice as much will not climb. The hill is at the foot of Ocean avenue where the road runs down to the beaches. Try it some time, it is a stiff pull.

And perhaps the source of my greatest satisfaction is the wonderful comfort in driving, the freedom from road shock. You know I had a pretty good car that I traded to you but the roads that I travel over daily to and from my work seem to have acquired a new smoothness.

Wishing you the best of success and hoping to be able to say a good word for you and the Chandler where it will count, I am,

Yours truly,
[Signed]
GEORGE E. NEWLAND.

According to officials of the W. P. Herbert Company, such letters as the above have been coming in more frequently since the new Chandler was announced than at any other time in Chandler's history.

LAW-ENFORCING AIM MAY CHANGE

Remodeling the law-enforcement policy so that those who cause motoring accidents will be arrested more than those guilty of so-called speeding has been the subject of many conferences during the past month, of Los Angeles city and county police departments, police judges, city prosecutor and other authorities with officials of the legal and public-safety departments of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

HUNTING, FISHING IN NORTH BEING CHECKED

Hunting, fishing and outing possibilities in the northern part of the State are being checked at the present time by Ceph B. Salisbury, manager of the Automobile Club of Southern California outing bureau, and his assistant, C. B. Harrison, who will gather outing information in all sections so that outing maps may be corrected.

FACTORY EXPANSION PLANNED

"Manufacturing facilities in the four great Wisconsin plants of the Nash Motors Company will be increased by $2,000,000 in new buildings and equipment as a result of the overwhelming public demand for the new '400' series cars," says Robert S. Breyer, president and general manager of the Nash-Breyer Motor Company, Nash distributors.

This extensive expansion program, which will be pushed as rapidly as possible through the fall and winter, is designed not only to increase quality motor-car production in the various Nash plants, but also to more nearly balance output in the four manufacturing divisions, according to company officials. The improvements are equally divided between the special six and Seaman Body Corporation plants in Milwaukee, the standard six plant in Racine, and the advanced six plant in Kenosha.

"Since the introduction of the Nash '400' series models in June," C. H. Bliss, sales manager, said today in commenting on company plans, "all four manufacturing divisions have been operating at capacity in an endeavor to meet the flood of new-car orders which has far exceeded all expectations. Night shifts have been employed, and the maximum production has been achieved from the famous Nash production lines, which were augmented last spring by an investment of approximately $2,500,000 in new machinery, jigs and dies. This careful speeding up has increased Nash production by nearly 30 per cent and has set new high records week by week for Nash shipments, but it has still fallen far short of meeting the '400' demand in the United States and abroad.

"August was the biggest production month in the annals of the Nash Motors Company, and September, although affording less working time, is expected to equal the August daily record.

"With the completion of this expansion program, we will be in a position to more clearly meet our heavy sales demands and at the same time maintain the high standards of precision work which have been factors of vital importance in the success of the new cars."

RUSTING ELIMINATED

All exterior bolts, nut screws and washers on the Oldsmobile six are cadmium plated, which eliminates the possibility of rust formation.

New Body Type Available on Eight Chassis

Strikingly new in design and finish, a new series Jordan Air Line eight landau brougham has just been introduced here, announces Harry A. Lord, president of the Lord Motor Car Company, Southern California distributor.

This body by Murray, he stated, is produced for those independent people who like to do their own driving. It has a capacity of five passengers to ride in real comfort.

"The landau brougham has large individual tufted seats in front and a single wide seat in the rear that will accommodate three persons," said Mr. Lord. "One sinks into these deep seats at a comfortable angle and there is no need to brace yourself against sliding forward or sideways. The front seats are of the chair type, but are unusually wide, deep and comfortable.

"The first of the type received has an exterior finish of slate gray on the lower body and a darker gray on the upper structure, with slate gray window reveals. The roof and rear quarter are of black leather, while the wide, new-type fenders are also done in black. The body gray is set off with narrow orange striping and the wire wheels are finished in orange. Spare wheels are carried in front fender wells and have black covers on the tires. The combination of colors is very handsome and appealing.

"The interior is lined with gray broadcloth. Seats and back rests are covered with broadcloth of the same body color, but it bears a neat dark figure. The interior trim and instrument board are done in gray and the hardware is of silver finish. Pretty gray leather vanity and smoking sets are found in the rear compartment and there are arm rests at either side of the rear seat.

"This landau brougham is powered with the improved new series Air Line eight engine, developing eighty-five brake horse power.

Month Mark Set by August Car Shipments

A statement by Lawrence P. Fisher, president of Cadillac Motor Car Company, says:

"Combined shipments of Cadillacs and LaSalles for the month of August totaled 5142 cars. This is 616 units higher than our biggest previous month and establishes a new record for all time in the high-price field for the automobile industry. Current shipments are equally divided between Cadillacs and LaSalles.

"With the introduction of the new cars we embarked upon our heaviest production schedule, averaging 5200 cars a month with all plants running at full capacity. Retail sales are heavier than at any previous time following the introduction of a new car.

"Country-wide demand has required further upward revision of September and October schedules. Revolutionary safety features, including security-plate glass, new shoe-type brakes, new syncro-mesh transmission and other exclusive features have been accorded enthusiastic reception. This record business in fine cars coming from all sections clearly indicates the sound prosperity of the country generally," he informed J. E. Brown, Southern California manager for Don Lee, California distributor of Cadillac and LaSalle motor cars.

ACCIDENTS HEAVY, CLUB REPORT SHOWS

August was "badly wrecked" month for the insurance-claims department of the Automobile Club of Southern California. A large number of collision claims were settled on a total loss basis rather than by repairing cars. The garage at headquarters of the big motoring organization contained a long row of wrecked cars during the entire month. A total of 8811 claims were handled by the club during August, about 2 per cent more than were filed in July.

NEW TODAY! AN OUTSTANDING LEADERSHIP IN MOTOR-CAR ADVANCEMENT IS REAFFIRMED BY A BRILLIANT NEW STUTZ SERIES, NOW READY FOR YOUR INSPECTION

You will want to see the new flexible front seat, heretofore used only in Weymann custom-built bodies, the most comfortable motor seat ever built, and easily adjustable.

You will want to see how the front seat folds backward, converting interior of car into a commodious resting place.

You will want to see how the outward appearance of the car has been improved with novel head and tail lights, smart bumpers, folding trunk rack, new running-board moulding, etc.

You will want to see the luxurious interior trim, richly harmonized with onyx embellishments.

You will want to see the disappearing arm rests, the adjustable steering wheel, the safety glass windows, the bumper running boards.

You will want to see the new spring suspension which gives the car greater riding comfort.

You will want to see the larger valve system which gives the powerful engine still more power, the responsive thermostat, the rugged water pump, the new muffler by-pass, all motor refinements.

But most of all you will want to see how Stutz obtains its lowest center of gravity, thereby giving superlative comfort, beauty, safety.

THREE IMPORTANT TRIUMPHS scored by the
AIR-COOLED MOTOR

HERE, in three road triumphs, is conclusive and emphatic proof of the supremacy of air-cooling and the new Airman Limited.

The Airman Limited is far ahead in everything the motorists demand in a quality car. Power, speed, stamina and comfort are proved best on the open road. Under actual driving conditions Franklin dramatically backs up its claims.

Franklin established an amazing new record by traveling from Los Angeles to New York and return in 6¾ days—6692 miles, 1000 miles a day!

A Franklin Special, built upon the same advanced principles as the standard Airman Limited, climbed to the summit of Pike's Peak—12.4 miles—in the annual Labor Day Classic in 19 minutes, 25½ seconds. Here Franklin scored an individual triumph—the only car with no special extra provisions for cooling the engine.

An Airman Limited flashed up Lookout Mountain, which is 46% steeper than Pike's Peak in new record time. Each triumph was a gruelling road test!

Advanced in appearance and design

To the performance which makes the Airman Limited the master of the road, Franklin has added beautiful, modern exterior appearance and incomparable, sumptuous interiors. Leadership in performance and style has been the reason for the immediate and large success of the Airman Limited. If you have not experienced the thrill of an Airman Limited drive, do so today. We will gladly furnish the car.

ROAD NUMBERS REPLACE SIGNS

Uniform Numerical Naming Stops Confusion

Transcontinental Routes Easy to Follow Now

Government Highway Marker Spots Main Roads

BY WILLIAM ULLMAN

The passing of the named highway is more and more noticeable as one tours about the country. In its place have come the numerical systems both State and national, which make it possible to follow not only the main roads, but all highways which are of any importance in the vast network which stretches throughout the nation.

Where formerly one followed the Washington Highway in one direction and then met another road also bearing a name, today one may chart his touring according to numbers which cover a far greater field than the old naming system.

Of outstanding importance in the matter of highway designation is the United States system of highways which brought into existence a scheme of giving numerical identification to 80,000 miles of highways connecting every section of the country lying between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and the Canadian and Mexican borders.

TRAVELING EASIER

This nation-wide system, which was the result of recommendations by road officials of all the States and was approved by the American Association of State Highway officials, has brought an orderly arrangement out of what was a virtual state of confusion. With its guidance, the citizen of New York State may travel to the Pacific Coast with as much ease as he would travel from Albany to Rochester. No conflicting signs, no names to look for in a hodgepodge of road signs. The motorist need seek only the uniform United States shield on a uniform standard beside the roadside and follow its implicit directions.

What was the situation before the United States system came into begin? Almost an ymotorist can supply the answer and it will be that touring was a test for the eyesight rather than an enjoyable cross-country jaunt unhampered by constant conflict of road signs. Among the mass of road markers one had to find the name of the highway which he was to follow and continue the journey only after an annoying pause.

CONFUSION GOES

The situation has changed completely in those States which have erected the United States numbers along their highways. The named highway sign is rapidly disappearing and leaving behind it only the numbers by which the motorist may infallibly guide his travels. There is no longer any need to stop and peer closely at a group of road markers. The numbers are legible before one reaches them and even at night are clearly illumined by the rays of a car's headlights soon enough to obviate the necessity for even slowing, much less stopping.

Even at a crossroads there is no longer any confusion where the United States system holds sway. Instead of getting out of one's car to determine if a turn must be made, one now needs only to look for the number. If the letter R appears below it, the turn is to the right; if the letter L is appended, a left turn must be made. If no letter appears below the sign, one may drive straight ahead across the intersecting roadways with no fear of taking the wrong direction.

HELPFUL AT NIGHT

Motorists who follow the United States numbers find them particularly helpful at night. Formerly it was necessary to stop either in such a way that the car's headlights illuminated the road sign or one had to take out a flashlight and take the time to read its legend.

The experience of one motorist illustrates the helpfulness of the nation-wide numbered system. He was driving through the East over roads which were totally unfamiliar. As nightfall came he stopped to make certain of his directions. He asked if he was on the right road and, expecting to be told to continue on to a certain town, he was surprised when his informer gave him the number of one of the United States highways and told him to follow it through to his destination some sixty miles away.

The traveler was agreeably relieved of anxiety concerning his course, but his satisfaction was even greater as he followed the numbered highway through a blinding storm over roads which he was traveling for the first time. There was no need to get out of the car. The number was there about every two miles and when a turn had to be made the guiding letter appeared beneath it. This motorist returned from his trip thoroughly "sold" on the United States system.

EVEN PLANNING EASIER

The numerical system is markedly helpful in planning a tour. Instead of making a list of towns through which he must pass, the motorist need only select the road numbers and he has a connected route which may be followed with the utmost ease. Responsible map publishers are issuing maps marked with the United States system. Motor clubs also have placed these designations on their maps, and with one of these the tourist readily can find the various routes in his proposed itinerary and plan his trip in simple numerical terms rather than in a confused assembly of highway names or colored bands or symbols.

The greatest factor in the confusion of the old named system was the constant overlapping of highway designations. On some stretches of road as many as six or seven different highways were indicated so that it was up to the tourist to find the desired one and attempt to follow it.

Uniformity is the keynote of the new system which has been built around a well-planned grid of through roads running north and south combined with others following east-and-west directions. To the main transcontinental routes have been given numbers ranging in multiples of ten. The routes east and west have been given numbers from 10 to 90, while the north-and-south routes bear the odd numbers 1, 21, 31, etc.

PROGRESS RAPID

There are a certain number of interpolated routes carrying such numbers as 2, 4, 6, 22, which come in between the larger trunk lines according to their economic values to the localities through which they pass.

A further feature of the numerical system are the many connections and crossover routes introduced to connect centers of population with less important or more remote points. These are designated to make their relation to the trunk road readily apparent. Thus No. 11 is the main route extending from Rouses Point, N. Y., by way of Syracuse and the Shenandoah Valley to New Orleans. No. 311 supplies the crossover from Roanoke, Va., to Route No. 1 at Aberdeen, N. C.

Marking of the United States system is making rapid progress. At the end of last year nearly half the States had erected the United States shield and the standard road markers which indicate various obstacles or hazards such as stops, schools, railroads, and the like. During 1928, many more States have undertaken the task of erecting the signs so that within another year virtually all the States will have their main highways marked according to the national system.

Top Down, but the Wind Never Bothers

Miss Rose Friedman enjoys riding in this Auburn 115 phaeton-sedan with the top down because the raised glass windows act as wind shields.

LANSING CAR FACTORY TO OPEN NEXT MONTH

By the latter part of October the new factory of the Durant Motor Corporation in Lansing, Mich., will be turning out cars, according to Norman De Vaux, general manager of the Durant Motor Company in California.

Construction work is nearly completed, with the exception of the power plant. The $750,000 factory will be available as soon as the powerhouse is finished.

W. C. Durant, is expected to return from Europe in time to attend the opening ceremonies at the Lansing plant.

Phaeton-Sedan Popular for Dual Body Type

There are many people who love smartness in an automobile but who likewise want the car to be comfortable. Women, especially, like to ride in open cars yet they know what fall breezes do to the complexion when mixed with sunshine, states O. R. Fuller, president of the White Auto Company, distributor of the Auburn line in Southern California.

That is one reason why the Auburn phaeton-sedan has proved to be so popular, he said. It is a convertible car and the only one of its type in stock production is found on the Auburn chassis, it was stated.

"During the fall months and early winter when the sun is not so strong, many love to drive with the top down," said Mr. Fuller. "The cool breeze is not always comfortable in an open car but the Auburn phaeton-sedan is so constructed that occupants are given protection against the wind.

"In this car the top can be folded down and encased in a boot, just like that of the conventional touring car. However, the phaeton-sedan has glass windows that drop down into the doors when not in use. These windows can be raised when the top is down, and they form windshields for the passengers. They are bound with heavy nickel strips making them very strong. With the top and windows up this car becomes a comfortable enclosed model.

"You will find many of them on the road just now with the top down and windows up for many owners love the sunshine but do not care so much for the wind. This model has extremely smart lines and beautiful finish, both of which appeal to smart people.

"The Auburn has amazing speed, comfort and real safety—features demanded by those who own sport type cars. The phaeton-sedan has the advantage of being both a sport type and sedan combined."

Fender Repair Business Good

When some motorists dent a baked enamel fender, they little realize that it is not always necessary to throw it away and get a new one, according to Bob Carter of the Carter Auto Works.

Fenders are not very costly, as a rule, but they are the most exposed part of an automobile and most likely to be damaged. For this reason Carter has built up a fine business in his paint department and body works by straightening fenders and re-enameling them.

Special tools make it possible to pound out or roll out a fender so that the damage can rarely be detected. Since most automobile fenders are finished in baked-on enamel, it is after they are straightened that the electrical baking ovens of the Carter Auto Works come into play.

The fender first receives a coat of enamel by dipping it in a huge vat. It is then sent through the electrical oven where it is baked at an even temperature of the exact number of degrees and for the exact number of minutes necessary to produce a perfect job.

After the first baking, the fender is given two, three or more coats and bakings until it comes out a perfect match for the original factory job.

Orders Gaining for New Truck

Orders have been pouring into the Pierce-Arrow factory ever since the new Model H-B heavy duty truck was announced some time ago. It is being put into production as rapidly as possible, according to information received here by William E. Bush, Inc., distributor.

The new model heavy duty vehicle, under the Pierce-Arrow plan of rating, has a 20,000-pound vehicle gross weight which allows it to carry a load of approximately five tons and still comply with the State highway laws, it is stated.

"One of the notable features of the Model H-B is its multi-speed transmission," explained Mr. Bush. "It has seven speeds ahead and two in reverse which solves the major problems of truck operators, namely, hauling maximum loads over difficult roads and speed and economical operation while running on more favorable highways.

"This truck is powered with a four-cylinder dual-valve engine that develops forty-eight horsepower. It has force feed lubrication, an automatically regulated carburetor and an oil purifier. Other features of the truck which are outstanding are its husky frame, full floating worm-drive rear axle, automatic gasoline pump, two separate brake systems, and cast-steel wheels."

ORANGE COUNTY GETS BIDS ON PAVEMENT

Bids will be received on Tuesday by the County Board of Supervisors of Orange county for the widening and repaving of Santiago Boulevard from Chapman avenue to Station No. 96, plus 86, a distance of about two miles in the Fourth Road district.

The plans for this project call for the salvage of the present street of cement concrete and resurfacing with an asphaltic material. The widening is to be of the same type of pavement as the resurface.

Name Obvious Choice for Car

That the selection of the name "Airman" for the new series Franklin air-cooled automobiles was merely conforming to the obvious is the assertion of H. H. Franklin, president of the Franklin Automobile Company.

This statement was made in a letter received here by Ralph Hamlin, president of Franklin Motors, Inc., distributor of the Franklin Airman six line.

"For a quarter of a century Franklin led in the adaptation of the air-cooling principle to automobile engines," stated Mr. Franklin. "We know it to be satisfactory in every way. When Byrd, Acosta, Lindbergh, Chamberlin, Goebel and a host of other airmen made history-making flights behind air-cooled power plants we naturally were pleased, for we had pioneered the air-cooling principle that made their flights successful. But this was not enough to justify the name of Airman for the new cars.

"Many airmen had owned and enthusiastically indorsed Franklin cars, and Lindbergh had chosen the Franklin for his personal car, but this was not enough, in our opinion, to justify tying up our car with aviation.

"We had been impressed for years with the riding comfort of an airplane—its graceful lines and its reliability, of course, on motive power. To us the American airman is the epitome of dash and daring, gracefulness and courage, loving life with a zip to it. When he opens the throttle in starting a journey it remains wide open.

"Therefore, when we found the new car could be driven at a mile-a-minute speed hour after hour without slowing down for bumps and without fatigue to the driver—when we found that riding the rough roads was like riding the gentle swells in the upper air in an airplane and when we found the car had all the dash and grace of the typical airman, the name Airman seemed to be the only one properly describing the car."

M'CRACKEN GOES EAST

L. J. McCRACKEN

L. J. McCracken, who for a number of years was prominent in the motor-car business on the Pacific Coast, has departed for the East to take charge of sales for the Chrysler Corporation in the eastern division, which extends from Canada to Florida along the coast. He made this announcement at a farewell dinner given to newspaper men at the Biltmore on the eve of his departure.

Mr. McCracken for six years was manager of the factory branch here for the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company and for a number of years prior to that time had been in similar executive positions for Willys-Overland. He has an unusually wide circle of friends on the Coast, both in and out of the automobile business.

Mr. McCracken expressed his sorrow at leaving Southern California, which he declared is the loveliest place in America to live, but said that he must answer the call of business, which takes him to the opposite side of the country.

He expressed his appreciation of the co-operation of the newspaper men during his years of association with them here.

Moriarty Sent East to Sales Post at Plant

George H. Moriarty, who for more than a year has been stationed in Los Angeles, has been appointed assistant general sales manager for the Locomobile Company of America, Inc. He has just departed for Bridgeport, Ct., to assume his new duties.

Mr. Moriarty has been with Locomobile for some years. For more than a year he had charge of the company's business here and spent some time at San Francisco, looking after affairs at the branch there. He has at various times been manager of Locomobile branches at Chicago, New York and Philadelphia. In fact he has been sent to various places in the country to look after the company's interests, it was stated.

Correct Oiling Saves Gasoline

Although the majority of motorists may not appreciate the fact, correct choice and application of lubricants have valuable results besides the usually emphasized ones of maintaining smooth operation and extending the life of the car.

D. R. McBryde of the McBryde Lubricating Service points out that the kind of lubrication a car receives even makes a big difference in its gasoline consumption.

"It is easily possible," says McBryde, "to get as much as from two to six more miles to the gallon of gas by correcting the lubrication. This improvement in economy is especially noticeable where the car has been in service for some time."

Riverside Drive is under construction from Los Feliz Boulevard to a point 720 feet south and is 10 per cent completed, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

WHEN YOUR DEALER SUGGESTS AN UP-CYL-OILER

He is suggesting something vital to Your Car

EVERY automobile needs two oiling systems. One involves the oil that goes in your crankcase. The other is Up-Cyl Oil, distributed by the Up-Cyl Oiler, for lubrication of the upper cylinder parts. Crankcase oil does not lubricate these parts because it deteriorates after contact with gasoline. Up-Cyl Oil, unaffected by gasoline, forms a constant film of protection in the upper cylinder walls. Have an Up-Cyl Oiler installed today and be definitely free from sticky valves, hard carbon and destructive upper cylinder wear. Price, $8.00 and $10.00. Installation extra. Accept no substitutes.

TO THE MAN ..WITH ABOUT $1500.00 TO SPEND

MARMON has something new to show you in the way of value.

There has been so much talk about value . . . But you really have value when people say, "Is that all it costs? I thought it was far more."

That's exactly what they are saying about the New "68."

This new "68" car, we firmly believe, is the most abundant package of transportation which has ever been offered at anywhere near the same money.

The man with around $1,500 to spend used to think he necessarily must compromise—he couldn't possibly get the automobile he really wanted for this money. He was meeting a necessity rather than a desire.

This man wanted (and he's but the average of all of us) characterful appearance—smooth, alert performance and sound basic design.

This man can undoubtedly find other automobiles today that just about meet this requirement—but Marmon, we earnestly feel, can more completely fill the bill of this $1,500 investor than can any other manufacturer in the business.

New "68," $1465. Also New "78," $1965. Prices f.o.b. factory. Deluxe equipment extra.

First, this "68" is a wonderful looking car, with low, sweeping lines. It has individuality all its own and follows no previous design. Look carefully at the the next Marmon you see on the street.

Next, this "68", totally unlike most other cars at this price, is powered by a straight-eight motor, rather than a six . . . Marmon, in fact, is one of the first manufacturers to remove the premium price from the Eight and pass it into the moderate price field . . . Marmon does not charge one extra cent for two extra cylinders.

And last, this "68" [illegible] thing about it usually [illegible] ciated only with [illegible] transportation. [illegible] not ask you to ride one [illegible] comfortably for $1,5[illegible] for $3,000—this is the [illegible] riding car in the world.

TIRE FACTORY EXECUTIVE HERE

R. C. Tucker Touring Sales District

R. C. Tucker of Akron (at left,) trade sales manager of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, assistant to General Sales Manager L. R. Jackson, being welcomed to the new $7,000,000 western Firestone factory by General Manager R. J. Cope.

R. C. TUCKER of Akron, trade sales manager of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, who enjoys a wide reputation in the tire industry as a sales executive, arrived in Los Angeles last week and will be here for several days conferring with local Firestone executives and calling on Firestone dealers. This is Tucker's first visit to Southern California, and he expressed himself as highly impressed with the remarkable expansion taking place in this section.

Tucker, who is assistant to General Sales Manager L. R. Jackson, was met at Salt Lake City by R. J. Cope, general manager of the new $7,000,000 western Firestone factory now nearing completion in Los Angeles, and the two Firestone executives made a tour of the leading cities of the West before coming to Los Angeles. Firestone dealers everywhere, they said, reported exceptionally good business.

Tucker ascended to his present important post in the great Firestone organization after starting as a salesman in 1919 at the Firestone branch in Birmingham, Ala. The sales record he established commanded recognition and he received appointment as manager of the Firestone branch at Charlotte, N. C. Later he was returned to Birmingham as branch manager. His next advance was as eastern sales manager operating out of the home office at Akron. Still continuing his record of successful sales direction, he next won the post of trade sales manager which brings him in touch with more than 30,000 Firestone dealers throughout the United States.

Tucker lost no time after his arrival in Los Angeles in getting out to the new western Firestone factory, and he inspected the plant with great interest as it is hailed throughout the country as the world's most modern tire-manufacturing plant.

Coupe Newest Arrival Here of New Line

Among the newest cars to arrive in the Southland is the De Soto six Cupe de Lujo, a body type that will have special appeal to women and those who like smartness and comfort, states William E. Bush, Los Angeles dealer.

Its easy handling qualities and alert performance place it in the lead of low-priced sixes, he declares.

"The coupe is marked by the unusual amount of room in the front compartment," said Mr. Bush. "While this seat is intended for but two persons yet there is ample room for three of medium size. The leg room is ample, giving it unusual comfort.

"First of these cars received has a body finished in a beautiful shade of blue set off with black striping upon which are traced fine lines of white. There is a wide black panel around the windows and another on the cowl that comes to a point at the back part of the hood. The windshield frame is done in the blue body color while the smart cadet visor is in black. Also the car has black fenders and dust aprons while the wheels are blue.

"The top is of light-colored Burbank cloth smartly tailored and is given an added air of distinction by the black landau arms. The doors are very wide, permitting easy entrance.

"Upholstery of the front section is mohair while the interior woodwork is of walnut. There is a compartment back of the front seat suitable for small packages. The car also has a rumble seat upholstered in black Spanish leather.

"The six-cylinder engine is fitted with a 'Silver Dome' high-compression head that uses all grades of fuel with efficiency and economy. It develops fifty-five horsepower and operates with remarkable smoothness and silence."

AUSTRALIAN SETS MARKS

When the Paul G. Hoffman Company started an endurance test with a Studebaker car on the Culver City speedway some months ago and ran it for 5000 miles continuously to a new set of speed records they started a series of record events that have spread all over the world.

Now comes a story from Australia where an automobile editor, Norman Smith of the Sydney Times, goes out after a lot of hill-climbing records and has an official representative of the Royal Australia go along to sponsor the events.

Bulli Pass, a steep incline near Sydney, was the first playground of Smith and his Commander roadster. With one passenger, he drove a stock model Commander roadster over the summit in high gear without apparent effort or strain.

To further prove the climbing ability of the car it then approached Kurrajong Heights, another severe test hill outside of Sydney. Never before had a stock car under official observance made the climb in high. The Commander with one passenger in addition to the driver went over the top in high.

"Studebaker made Kurrajong and Bulli look trivial — it is indeed a thoroughbred," was the comment of Smith following the tests.

This make car now holds all Australian speed and endurance records for twenty-four hours. These records were established in July during a run on the dry bed of Lake Perkolilli when a stock model Commander ran 1700 miles at an average speed of more than seventy miles per hour.

Parts Balance Secures Smooth Running Engine

Absence of vibration in an automobile engine is largely the result of balancing the fast moving reciprocating parts. This balance not only results in a smooth running engine, but it greatly reduces bearing weight and wear, points out F. W. Clampett of Marshall & Clampett, distributors of the Safety Stutz in Southern California.

"To gain this desired smoothness of operation, for which the Stutz vertical eight engine is famous, the Stutz manufacturing division pays very close attention to the selection of conecting rods, pistons and piston pins," explained Mr. Clampett. "Of course, such parts must come within very minute limits of weight and measurement or they will be rejected by the receiving inspectors.

"Even then the selection for each car must be more exact to suit the builders. For example, pistons that are accepted for use must come within three-fourths of an ounce weight limit. Then these pistons are sorted into groups with weight limits within one-eighth of an ounce. This selection is made with the use of very sensitive and accurate scales.

"All of the eight pistons that are put into the same motor are taken from the same weight group, so that every piston in the engine weighs within one-eighth ounce of every other piston. The connecting rods are assorted in the same manner, so they have exactly the same weight.

"After the eight rods and eight pistons have been selected for a particular motor, the eight sets, including the pistons, piston pins and connecting rods, are made up and are tested for alignment with a light gauge which is the most accurate device of the kind ever made.

"It is this kind of manufacturing care that gives Stutz its perfect performance ability and log life."

Air Cooling of Motors Stirs Up Comment

That there is a universal awakening to the value of the air-cooling system for automobiles is indicated by editorial comment in many sections of the country, states Ralph Hamlin, president of Franklin Motors, Inc., distributor of the Franklin Airman six. Franklin, he pointed out, pioneered air-cooling and has perfected it. Its use for aircraft power plants has greatly stimulated interest among motorists, he stated.

Mr. Hamlin offers the following comment from newspapers:

The Moberly (Mo.) Monitor says: "The air-cooling principle will doubtless be adopted by various other engines because of the big saving in dead weight and inconvenience made possible by eliminating the water radiator. While this is being done for airplanes, how about automobiles? One or two motor cars are already using the air-cooling principle. The thing has proved feasible for automobile engines. It would be a blessing to millions of motorists if they were freed from the use of heavy radiators boiling over and freezing."

The Marietta (O.) Times, in speaking of air-cooled engines: states: "The performance of these engines, dispensing with the heavy and clumsy water-cooled contrivances, is remarkable. Engines are made lighter and more dependable."

The Sun-Star of Merced, Cal., in an editorial praising air-cooling said: "Aviators owe the developers (of air cooling) a big debt of gratitude. When will the same engineering principle be applied generally to automobile motors?"

Mr. Hamlin also said that recently Col. Charles Lindbergh asked a prominent automotive engineer: "When will cars generally be equipped with air-cooled motors?"

BATTERIES TO BE MADE BY REDLANDS CONCERN

REDLANDS, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Volney Kincaid, well-known banker here, is heading a company which will manufacture the Gill battery. Manufacture is under way now in the Parker Building on East State street, and Mr. Kincaid says that production will be on a large scale soon.

The Gill battery was manufactured in San Bernardino for some time, but the company there, of which M. R. Standish is president, suspended manufacture some time ago. The local men interested here have acquired from the company the right to build the battery.

Makers of History—Intolerant of Tradition

The Reo Flying Cloud has made motoring history. It proved that a car could be beautiful, enduring, swift, powerful, economical and comfortable. It made possible the purchase of all the desirable qualities of motoring in one car. It lived up to the idea behind it, "A Reo must do all things well."

The Reo Flying Cloud has made history because back of it stands a group of men intolerant of tradition, unhampered by the inheritance of mechanical features that must be preserved, given free rein to develop or to acquire whatever might be essential to making an ideal automobile for America.

From road to roof, from stem to stern, the Reo Flying Cloud is a skillful blending of all that is best in modern engineering practice and modern design.

For brakes, it has the best the world affords for motor cars. Its engine retains no obsolete practices. Its steering ease and safety are unsurpassed. So on throughout its construction in every part.

To the Flying Cloud's far-in-the-lead design, to the finer materials of which it is built, are added a carefulness and precision of workmanship usually considered unnecessary in its price class.

SIGNALS COST CITY $600,000

Traffic Regulations Yearly Bill $1,000,000

Police Salary Largest Item Shown in Audit

Total Expenditure Increased by Outside Groups

Considerably more than $1,000,000 a year is spent in Los Angeles to regulate traffic and promote safety to motorists and pedestrians, according to information obtained by the Traffic Commission.

This money is in addition to the many thousands spent toward the installation and maintenance of good roads. It includes such items as traffic police, traffic signals, safety zones, buttons, markers, painted zones and traffic signs.

The largest single expense, of course, is for traffic policemen. There are now 217 men in the police traffic bureau directly attached to traffic duty, and in addition, each police substation has assigned a number of policemen to traffic work, making a total of more than 300. As regular policemen are paid $200 a month, the cost of traffic cops runs approximately $750,000 a year.

SIGNALS EXPENSIVE

It costs approximately $80,000 a year to maintain the 421 traffic signals in Los Angeles. Besides this, the city is spending this year over $200,000 for more traffic signals. As each signalized intersection costs nearly $2000, the city has spent more than $600,000 for traffic signal installation.

A force of twenty-nine persons, under Ralph Dorsey, traffic signal engineer, maintains and times the city's signals. Dorsey said that it costs $16 a month to maintain each signal.

Then there is traffic line painting, which requires a force of twenty men, equipped with trucks. The painters use $3600 worth of paint a month. They maintain twenty-five miles of crosswalks, twelve miles of center and angle parking lines, 5415 intersection buttons, 768 safety zones, 2000 loading zones, twenty-six miles of no-parking zones and thirty-three miles of metal marker zones. The paint squad operates under the direction of Sergt. Badgett.

SO TRAFFIC CAN MOVE

There are approximately 82,000 traffic regulatory signs in Los Angeles, erected and maintained by the Automobile Club of Southern California.

In addition to these expenses the two street railways and large utility corporations spend thousands of dollars a year in the regulation of traffic.

It was pointed out by the traffic commission that without these expenditures for traffic regulation, it would be almost impossible to move the half million motor vehicles that use the streets of Los Angeles, and that accidents would be greatly increased.

LIGHTS ELIMINATED

Owing to the high straight lines of the cowl of the new Oldsmobile six, cowl lights have been eliminated; and off set bulb in the headlamps providing parking lights. The road light of the headlamps has a double-filaments bulb, throwing the light straight ahead or directing it to the ground, as wished. Light control with gas lever and horn button are mounted on the steering wheel.

Miss Jerry Jarrette, comedienne, wins argument by demonstrating her ability to raise her foot to the top of a Whippet six sedan, 5 feet 6 inches above the street.

Plant Output Reaches Total of 5,000,000

Production of the five millionth Chevrolet was announced last week by the Chevrolet Motor Company. The history-making car rolled off the line at the Flint assembly plant less than eight months after its four millionth brother had preceded it, on January 11, last. Production for the year promises to go well beyond the 1,000,000 mark and will show more than a 1000 per cent increase over 1927, when 77,565 cars were built.

The early arrival of the five millionth car was in response to a demand that has kept Chevrolet plants on a day-and-night basis ever since the first of the year and has resulted in the setting of new monthly production records every month this year.

It was pointed out that whereas it had required a little more than ten years for Chevrolet to build its first 1,000,000 cars, the last 4,000,000 were produced in a little more than five years, an indication of the spectacular march that the Chevrolet Motor Company has made in recent years to attain its present position as the world's largest automobile manufacturer. It was shown too, that only a little less than twenty months had been required to produce the last 2,000,000 cars.

During the first six months of this year, 50 per cent of all automobiles sold in Chevrolet's price class were Chevrolets. This was an increase over 1927, when 40 per cent of the sales in its price field were made by Chevrolet.

In commenting on the production of the five millionth car, W. S. Knudsen, president and general manager of the Chevrolet Motor Company, pointed out that precision manufacturing is the father of speed. He explained that to make such a record possible, it was necessary to adhere with utmost closeness to precision-manufacturing methods, and to make the limitations as exacting as possible.

DURANT IN BERLIN

W. C. Durant, who is now in Berlin will attend the opening of the Durant assembly plant in Germany. During his tour. Durant inspected the bustling plant in Paris where Durant cars are assembled for trade in France and Belgium.

Actress Tests Leg Reach on Roof of Auto

Miss Jerry Jarrette, comedienne, now rehearsing with a road show here, became involved in an argument with some of the other players about automobiles a few days ago. She insisted that the Whippet four and Whippet six inclosed cars have the lowest body lines, according to George F. Day, zone manager for the Willys-Overland Pacific Company, distributor of the Whippet line.

"Why, I can put one foot right up on top of a Whippet," she declared, although she said she laid no claim to being an acrobat. She is only 5ft. 3in. in height and some of the other players insisted that she couldn't do the trick.

"We furnished a car and a photographer and Miss Jarrette donned a bathing suit," said Mr. Day. "She took hold of her left foot and raised it right up until her heel rested on the top edge of the roof. She did this from several positions without apparent effort.

"A measuring stick was obtained and showed that the roof of the Whippet six is just five feet six inches above the street.

"In spite of this low roof line there is ample head room inside the Whippet, even for a tall person. The average man's or woman's head will clear the roof by six inches when sitting in the deep, comfortable seats. Likewise, there is ample leg room, for the Whippet body is very commodious for a car of its wheelbase. That is because the engineers used every available inch of interior space to the best advantage.

"The Whippet's very low lines bring its center of gravity close to the road, which has a great deal to do with its riding comfort and extreme road stability, which means the maximum of safety in driving. The Whippet was one of the leaders in low lines and practically every other manufacturer followed this trend."

Driving Time From Houston to El Paso Cut

Smashing all previous records for automobile travel between Houston and El Paso, Tex., a stock Reo Flying Cloud roadster recently flashed the 838 miles separating the two cities in sixteen hours and twenty-six minutes, according to a telegram received at Reo headquarters here by Joe Brigance, manager of the pleasure-car division of the Reo Motor Car Company of California.

This time is one hour and sixteen minutes faster than the distance has ever been driven before. The Flying Cloud averaged fifty-one miles an hour for the entire run, but maintained an average of fifty-five miles an hour for the first 410 miles.

Leaving Houston at 4:50 a.m. the record-breaking "cloud" traveled 231 miles to a point 9 miles beyond San Antonio in 235 minutes. Near Fort Stockton the car ran into a heavy rainstorm which made the going so hard and dangerous for the last 150 miles that considerable time was lost. Another rainstorm was encountered near El Paso. This made the going very slippery and cut down the speed on a road which could otherwise have been traveled at seventy or more miles per hour.

FOREIGN CAR SALES INCREASED

Countries in Central and South America Form Active Market for Autos

Returning from a two months' trip to Central and South America, Frank L. Hambly, export manager of the Marmon Motor Car Company, reports that Marmon dealers in the countries south of the equator, particularly in Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine, are enjoying the greatest sales volume on record, according to George S. Pelton, of Pelton Motor Company, Marmon distributors.

Although the new series Marmon 68 and 78 had not been introduced to South American motorists at the time of Hambly's visit, the dealers there were familiar with the improvements and expressed the belief that the new cars would be even more popular than were the previous models.

Marmon sales in South America, Hambly reported, have increased proportionately with the record gain that has been made in the United States so far this year—an increase that has established the Marmon Company as the largest producer of straight eights in the country. South American motorists, he said, are close followers of the new trend in American automotive design and almost without exception the makes of cars that are popular in this country are instantly accepted as the leaders in Latin-America.

Export records of the Marmon Company show that the total cars shipped to South America during the period ending August 31 of this year was 77 per cent greater than the total for all of last year. Orders for new series cars now on the books for immediate export shipment insure even greater percentages of gain as the autumn season progresses.

Simultaneously with Hambly's report of unusually favorable export shipments, G. M. Williams, Marmon president, issued a statement in which he pointed out that the company had completed the largest August in its history with sufficient orders on its books to insure peak season production far into the fall.

AUTOS MAKE TOWN

In 1907, when the Oakland Motor Car Company was organized, Pontiac, Mich., home of the company, was a sleepy village on an old Indian trail, with about 12,000 residents. The population has increased fivefold since then, and today strictly automotive products make up 97 per cent of the annual output of the town.

FACTORY TO ADD UNIT

To keep pace with the continued heavy demand for Hupmobile cars which has been causing an unbroken series of new monthly records for production and shipments ever since the Century sixes and eights were introduced last winter, the Hupp Motor Car Corporation has let contracts for a new unit of its Detroit plant, which, it is stated, will double the shipping capacity of the company, according to word sent A. R. Reedall, manager of the Greer-Robbins Company, distributor here.

Operations on the new building are to be pushed as rapidly as contractors can carry on the work, and it is predicted by company officials that the structure will be ready for occupancy by the first of the year. Ground has already been broken and excavation is well under way.

The additional unit, which is to be of concrete slab construction, is conveniently located on property recently acquired by the company just east of its main plant. Designs show liberal provision for storage of new cars while awaiting shipment after they come off the production line, as well as adequate space for the Hupmobile engineering division, which will be quartered in the new building.

The plans provide for an eight-story building approximately 200 by 150 feet. Seven of the eight floors will be devoted to car storage purposes, the top floor being given over to offices of the engineering department and the basement housing the engineering laboratory. Shipping docks and tracks are included in the project. An overhead bridge will provide means for transporting finished cars from the main plant to the new storage unit.

"The record-breaking demand which has led to the Hupmobile plant expansion now announced set in with the introduction of the new Century six last October," says Reedall.

Goldfish worth $250 each were shown at a recent exhibition in London.

Embarrassing Moments

When YOUR ENGINE STALLS and the horns honk behind you, get started and head for the nearest service station and order a STARTOMATIC installed. Your engine will never stall again.

With the STARTOMATIC Constant Starter Control incorporated in the electric starter system the engine automatically starts when the ignition is turned on. It restarts immediately every time it stalls or dies. The simple twist of the ignition switch starts the engine—no need of pushing a starter button or pedal.

STARTOMATIC makes driving safer in traffic, in the mountains and at railway crossings. It is a great help in starting a cold engine. It protects the fly-wheel gears from stripping and saves your battery.

Any dealer or service station can supply STARTOMATIC and install it or you can get service at the factory.

WHAT A CAR TO WIN SUCH PRAISE

Engineers! Critics! Owners! Everyone! From coast to coast, all join in enthusiastic praise for this new Oldsmobile.

—"We own one of these 'new and better' Oldsmobiles and think it a wonderful car."—Mrs. L. L. K., Davenport, Iowa.

—"I am particularly delighted with this new model. It certainly is a masterpiece."—O. P. L., Los Angeles, Calif.

—"I have driven other cars, most all higher priced, but I have never had the satisfaction out of any that I have had out of this car."—H. L. J., Kansas City, Mo.

—"There is no question in my mind that there is no car within five hundred dollars of the price that even approaches the Oldsmobile for appearance, performance, or riding qualities."—J. M. F., St. Louis, Mo.

—"Would like to tell you that for the past ten years I have driven Oldsmobile cars. This new Oldsmobile is the best ever."—S. V. D., Parsons, Kans.

—"I think the Oldsmobile is the most beautiful low-priced car on the market. For power and speed it can not be equalled."—G. D., Plevna, Mont.

—"Let me say—that Oldsmobile will never make another motor better than the one in my car. I shall be glad to give you a testimonial if you desire."—Miss G. H., Atlanta, Ga.

—"I am more than delighted with the car and consider it superior to any of the preceding models in all ways."—T. L. S., Southbridge, Mass.

—"We just got a new four-door sedan, Oldsmobile. It is a swell car for the money. I don't see how it can be made for such a low price. The pick-up has all cars beaten. I have tried it side by side in getting away at stop and go signs."—R. J., Buffalo, N. Y.

—"I own a 1928 De Luxe Sedan and I am very satisfied and a great booster for Oldsmobile, so I also want to sing the song."—O. G. M., Fall River, Mass.

—"I think your 'Oldsmobile Owner's Maintenance Policy' and 'Operating Manual' are a very new and valued proposition in automobile ownership.

"This is my fourth Olds. I have found the Oldsmobile a very satisfactory car. I think it the best buy on the market for the money."—J. A. L., Batavia, N. Y.

It succeeded [illegible]. Last year planes [illegible] pounds of mail [illegible] were turned over [illegible] they formed [illegible] air organizations in the world, and the pilots were our best.

There were great difficulties to overcome. There were few aids to navigation and much of the route was dangerous, particularly over the Pennsylvania mountains, where the fog is a serious obstacle to scheduled flying. Many a pilot lost his way in the early days, and many of them were killed. But equipment has improved, better and faster planes are being used, and they carry through a high percentage of scheduled flights. Some of these pilots are very well paid. Some who are particularly skilled in bad-weather navigation and take the mail through in almost any kind of weather make more than $10,000 a year—and earn it.

The governmental operation of the air mail did much to prove the value of air transportation. Then came the series of long-distance flights that showed the great possibilities of the airplane and made people realize that they had a remarkably efficient new instrument with which to link commercial centers. Private operation of the lines was helped also, and almost immediately revenue began to increase. There are ten or more lines now which are making money flying the mail and passengers, seemingly impossible a few years ago.

But the most interesting result of this new enthusiasm for aviation was the demand of the public to fly. In Europe, air passenger lines were established years ago and are popular, but this country lagged behind despite its unusual opportunities for passenger service. This is changing rapidly. This year, for the first time, large planes capable of holding ten or twelve passengers are being put in service. Several of them are now in operation on the Pacific Coast, others will soon go into operation along the transcontinental route.

Air transport has arrived in this country. It is on a sound healthy financial basis, and I believe we shall soon surpass Europe in passenger carrying as well as in other forms of commercial transportation.

FOOLHARDY AIR DAYS GONE

Don Brown Finds Flying School Classmates Lacking Thrill-Hunting Types

[This is the sixth of a series of articles written for The Times by Don Brown in which he traces the events of his training as an aviator.]

BY DON BROWN

[Copyright, 1928, by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

NEWARK-ELIZABETH AIRPORT, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—I remember that, not so many months back, the young man who wanted to fly was considered romantic and foolhardy.

There was a sort of hangover from the "Darius Green and his flying machine" state of mind.

When I told an old lady down in my home town in Texas that I wanted to learn to fly, she said:

"Well, I knew you wrote stories and drew pictures, but I didn't know you were that crazy."

Here in a modern flying school, I looked my classmates over carefully, searching for a romantic type, taking up flying for sport or fun. After I got better acquainted with them I began to ask questions.

When I asked if they were learning to fly for the thrill of the thing, they laughed.

Without exception, they are here for very practical reasons. They are all convinced that there is more money in aviation and promises of more for the future than in being an auto mechanic, a clerk, salesman, or small business man.

That there is plenty of excitement in flying is no deterrent to the ones in my class, I am sure. But excitement and thrills are secondary with most of them. I imagine they are the same types who, in the days of the '49 gold rush, would have headed west to face unknown dangers and suffering in search of uncertain gold. They had rather risk something to win high stakes than toil safely and dully through long hours with little reward in prospect.

I find in them all certain qualities that I like. They seem to have courage and optimism of a very genuine sort. And with it there is a sort of happy-go-lucky, generous attitude which seems to be associated with men who will dare new dangers and strange elements to win a worth-while reward.

Some of the outstanding types I have noticed in the class are:

A small, dark and intelligent young Italian mechanic, who comes to the class wearing a leather coat, and heavy shoes grease-stained from working at night as an auto mechanic. He says nothing but gives the closest attention to every word of instruction.

He carries a copy of Capt. Victor Page's "Modern Aircraft" with him at all times and it is becoming well worn. I never heard him say a word until after his first practice flight. When he climbed out of the plane he said, "Geeminy, 'dat was wonderful!"

The tall, well-dressed young man who sat at my left in the ground school class and who looked exactly like Lindbergh, laughed when I asked him if he was planning an ocean flight.

"Naw, not for me," he said, "I've already got a passenger plane ordered and when I get my commercial pilot's license I'm going to make some money carrying passengers."

One of the most interesting types is a young bank employee who hurries over every afternoon with a leather brief case.

(In his article next Sunday, Don Brown tells of airport diversions.)

Air Express Puts Bars Up on Live Stock

Almost everything from lingerie to 300-pound metal shipments; from food products to foreign bonds; from spare auto parts to orchids are being shipped daily over the air routes, but the air companies draw the line on live stock.

Cats, dogs, baby chicks, horned toads and even the circus performer's pet snake are among the bits of live stock offered to the air-mail companies, and all are turned down. A shipper of Texas horned toads recently beat the regulations by sending his pets air mail in small wooden boxes which bore the label "Jewelry." The shipment arrived O.K.

Air Offices Consolidate

CHICAGO, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—A consolidated central ticket office, depot and information headquarters for air passengers has just been opened in the heart of Chicago's loop, the first of its kind in this country.

The office maintained by the air-mail companies carrying passengers to and from Chicago is patterned after railroad offices, with schedules of all air lines in this country and Europe. Passengers are taken in chartered busses to and from the airport and there is a central station where passenger plane arrive and depart. Uniform baggage rules relieve the passenger of worry about luggage which is checked at hotels and delivered at the plane's destination.

STORMY FLIGHT TESTS SAFETY

Goebel's Hard Trip Blazes Trail

THE National Air Race flight of Art Goebel and Harry J. Tucker from New York to Los Angeles, in which they conquered some of the most difficult weather obstacles imaginable, demonstrates that an airplane can safely make a transcontinental flight within a day under the most adverse conditions, according to C. W. Christian, district sales manager of the Pennzoil Company in Los Angeles.

"Flying their Pennzoil-lubricated Yankee Doodle plane, in which they had previously made a nonstop record flight from Los Angeles to New York, Goebel and Tucker began their battle against strong head winds and electric storms almost immediately upon their take-off. But they kept up their flight and the sturdy Yankee Doodle was the only plane to reach Los Angeles on the day specified, while eight other contestants dropped out along the route," Mr. Christian said.

The two flyers who have now the record for both the fastest time eastward and westward between Los Angeles and New York were greeted at Mines Field by more than 80,000 persons who had gathered to witness the completion of this, the most sensational of the National Air Races.

That Goebel and Tucker have blazed a new trail which appears to point toward regular flights between the Pacific and Atlantic coasts in less than a day is the opinion of Mr. Christian.

Upon their arrival in Los Angeles, the flyers expressed their enthusiasm over the performance of the Yankee Doodle. They were particularly pleased with the functioning of their Pratt & Whitney Wasp motor and they declared that Pennzoil was in no small degree responsible for their success.

PLANES AID TO HARRIED LOVERS

Love vies with business in taking on new quirks since commercial air transport became a reality and the moral of plays and plots woven around recent exploits of airplanes will be that "The early bird catches the worm," the American Air Transport Association reports.

A Los Angeles swain learned on Monday that a back-home sweetheart in Cleveland planned marriage with his rival Wednesday. Tuesday morning found him in an eastbound mail plane and twenty-six hours after he left Los Angeles he was installing himself as groom instead of the home-towner.

A California bride in New York insisted on flowers from the Golden Gate and had them via air express thirty-two hours later.

SUNDAY AIR TRIPS AGAIN IN EFFECT

Regular Sunday flights over Los Angeles and adjacent territory conducted by Western Air Express from Vail Field will be resumed next Sunday, it is announced. They were discontinued the past two Sundays because of the National Air Races.

Business Uses Air Mail in Competition

Air transport is doing some funny tricks in business. A Chicago glass dealer learned he had been shut out of a $60,000 contract in Oklahoma because his firm was not incorporated in that State. Bids were to be opened the next day. Papers went forward Monday night and were filed Tuesday afternoon, beating the train thirty-six hours, to the dismay of the competitive firm.

Competition for a $50,000 tire order in California prompted a salesman to secure samples of a new tire by air mail, and he got the business.

A Denver florist looking for new markets for sweet peas found customers when he delivered the blooms to Chicago twenty hours after they were picked, while a Utica (N. Y.) firm got a contract for ice cream on a sample shipment sent air mail to Greensboro, S. C.

The water supply of a municipality in the California mountains was threatened by breakage of machinery which had to be duplicated from stocks in Cleveland. The spare part was put on the air-mail plane and thirty hours later, before the surplus water supply had been drained off, the plant was running again.

Alert buyers scour the New York markets for the latest fashions and try to beat competitors in style shows by using air mail and express.

CUT AIR MAIL RATE INCREASES VOLUME

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22. (Exclusive)—Nickel air-mail letter postage, effective August 1, last, resulted in a 95 per cent increase in volume of air mail over July and seven tons of letters, approximately 420,000 are being handled daily by the air-mail companies during their 28,000-mile a day flights over the country.

The sharp increase in volume following the new rate of 5 cents for the first ounce and 10 cents for each additional ounce exceeded the most sanguine expectations of postal officials.

PACKARD STANDARD EIGHT NOW ON DISPLAY LOCALLY

The new Packard standard eight car has made its official bow to the public. Today it appears in the showroom of Earle C. Anthony, California distributor, as an entirely new car with a powerful eight-in-line motor and with ten new body models.

Probably the most important feature of the latest Packard, from the standpoint of the car owner, is a co-ordinated series of improvements for absorbing all road shocks, called a Packard shock absorber system. The company makes the statement that it has stopped wheel "shimmy," wheel "tramp" and steering-wheel "whip" with a new discovery. It is a built-in part of the car.

The standard eight is built in two wheelbases, 126 and 133 inches. The motor has been made slightly shorter and has a bore of 3 3-16 inches and stroke of five inches. Packard's policy against depreciating cars in the hands of owners by radical changes in appearance has been maintained.

Addition of the standard eight with its ten different models gives Packard sixty-two different body types, including thirty-four individual custom bodies.

OLD PROBLEM

The entire motor-car industry has been at work on the problem of wheel shimmy and wheel tramp since the advent of balloon tires. Shocks from even the smoothest pavements on balloon tires, because of the resiliency of the tires, gave successive blows to the front wheels and set up a synchronized vibration known as "shimmy," which keeps building up much the same in effect as occurs when a child keeps adding a light shove to a swing in perfect time with the swing itself.

The easy riding qualities of the balloon tires had to be nullified by maintaining higher tire pressures to reduce shimmy and tramp. In addition it was necessary to stiffen the steering action and a further precaution had to be taken in keeping the wheels and tires perfectly balanced all the time. Even then shimmying may sometimes occur. A dangerous feature has always been that excessive shimmy effects were obtained at high speeds.

The Packard device for eliminating these disturbances was discovered by accident. Two engineers found a foreign-built car which had shimmied whenever tire pressures were lowered, suddenly ceased to give any shimmy effect, any wheel tramp or steering-wheel kick. None of these effects could be produced no matter what was done with tire pressures.

LEFT SPRING LOOSE

They discovered that the bracket fastening the rear end of the left front-end spring to the frame had become loosened. They tightened the bracket and immediately the car shimmied. With the bracket loosened again the shimmy again disappeared. They immediately began an intensive study from which eventually the new device was evolved. It consists of a bracket containing four heavy steel coil springs, which allow just enough movement of the left front spring to dampen out the road shocks transmitted through the tires to the front wheels.

Final results were obtained through the combination of the new spring bracket, the original Packard idea of placing the shackles at the front end of the springs, the underslung front axle and the new hydraulic shock absorbers. With road shocks eliminated from the steering mechanism, engineers were able to put ball bearings on each side of the steering sector, requiring less effort in steering, regardless of the speed of the car.

The hydraulic shock absorbers designed by Packard are built into the car itself. They control both the deflection and rebound of the springs, working through a ball joint on the frame. They permit of a softer spring action and persons who have ridden in the new car say that, with the new improved seat cuhions having scientifically designed contours, they give maximum riding comfort.

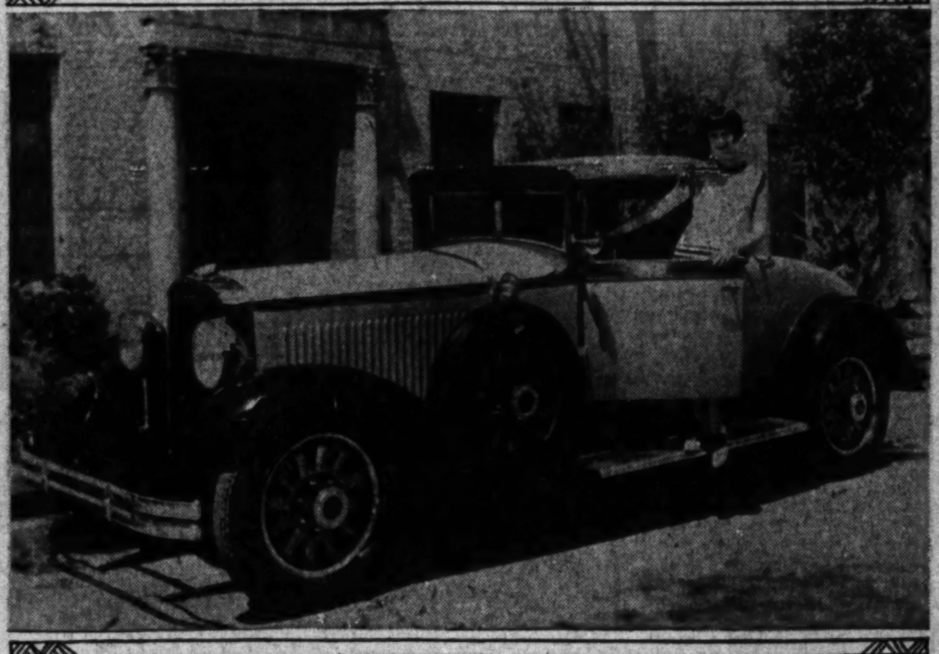
OAKLAND, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Time clocks, which automatically turn on the beacons, flood lights and boundary lights, have been installed at Oakland municipal airport.

Foreign Effect Attained in New Model Coupe



Beauty and luxury are reflected in the Graham-Paige 835 coupe. The Graham-Paige body employs long straight lines, with a foreign-car effect in the convex radiator.

Motor Inventor Visitor in City

Among the visitors here from the East at the air races last week, who remained over a few days to see Southern California was Charles Lawrence, inventor of the Wright Whirlwind engine and president of the Wright Aeronautical Corporation. Accompanying him was Joe Hartson, sales manager of the same concern.

While here they were entertained by W. E. (Tommy) Thomas, general manager of the Pacific Aeronautical Corporation, distributor of Wright Whirlwind products. Mr. Thomas was a very busy man during the races as he was on the program committee and at the head of a business at the same time.

Another guest of Mr. Thomas was Tom Z. Feagan of the Scintilla Aircraft Magneto Corporation, who flew here from the East and returned there by air. This company, it was stated, manufactures 98 per cent of the magnetos used on American planes. While here he gave the Pacific Aeronautical Corporation all the territory west of the Rocky Mountains for the distribution of Scintilla products, Mr. Thomas stated.

Visiting Beauty Furnished Auto by Dealer Here

When the judges of the Chrysler-Mission Beach personality contest at San Diego met to designate their choice of Miss San Diego, they chose one of the city's most winsome misses, Winifred Stevens, petite blond, for the honor. With her mother, they packed her securely in a Los Angeles-bound tri-motor Maddux air liner, and during the past ten days she has had many thrilling days of conquest during the closing days of the National Air Races at Mines Field, all the entertainment that Los Angeles itself offered, and the obedience of the world's film capitol into the bargain.

Chrysler's part in the contest and fulfilling of its requirements was in charge of H. J. Edwards, Inc., San Diego distributor, and the Greer-Robbins Company, Chrysler distributor here, helped carry out provisions of transportation for the pretty contest winner during her stay of several days here.

Arriving at Rogers Airport, she was met by officials of the local distributing company with a Chrysler "75" roadster, which served as her official transport during the Los Angeles visit.

Her trip to Los Angeles was the longest ride she had ever had in a plane, and she expressed herself as thoroughly pleased with the ride. Similarly pleased by her reception and the pleasurable days of visiting here, Miss Stevens and her mother left again by plane for San Diego, where additional honors were awaiting her return to the home city.

Let Her Own A Car, Too

There's one way to keep peace in the family—get another car. Did you know that fine looking roadsters, coupes, sedans and touring cars—driven only a few thousand miles—can be bought through the used car department of Times Want Ads at considerable reductions in prices?

STUTZ HAS NEW LINE

More powerful, more beautiful and marked by many refinements in engine, chassis and body, a new series Stutz motor car has just been introduced by Marshall & Clampett, distributor, according to F. W. Clampett.

This eight-cylinder Stutz, he declares, will have greater popularity than ever before because of its improved performance ability, beauty and riding comfort. In spite of the numerous improvements there has been no advancement in prices, he said.

"The motor improvements are noteworthy," said Mr. Clampett. "Larger and improved valves give the sturdy engine more power, which means better performance—a quality that has made Stutz famous. A new type intake manifold also has a part in the power increase.

"Among the other betterments is an improved thermostat insuring very accurate engine temperature and enabling the motor to warm up more quickly when starting. Another new feature is a rugged, two-bearing water pump. A silent link-belt blue streak chain with automatic take-up has been installed.

"Refinements in the body include the installation of adjustable European type front seats such as were formerly used in Weymann bodies. This change is now standard in all body types except the Victoria and two-passenger coupe which already have adjustable seats of another type. The new Stutz seats are deeply and luxuriously upholstered and have deep resilient springs that add greatly to the riding comfort. The seats are built a little higher than formerly and give improved road vision.

"A full new body trim that is characteristic of only high-priced custom-built motor cars has been made standard on the new Stutz. This is one of the major refinements of the new series.

"Although the Stutz has been recognized as one of the easiest riding automobiles ever built due to its low center of gravity, the engineers have given it even greater riding ease. They have installed springs of new design with the arch slightly increased. Snubber plates have been added to the front springs.

"The gear-shift lever has been made higher and within easier reach. The emergency brake has been redesigned and made more flexible. Steering-gear controls are of new design, with the horn button in the center. The steering wheel is now adjustable and can be made to fit any driver. Headlamps have been enlarged and have reflecting jewels in the sides to show whether the bulbs are functioning.

"A decorative bar bearing the figure 'S' in the center now connects the headlamps. The tail lamp and license bracket are mounted on the left rear fender while the right fender carries the backing light and stop light. New-style bumpers and bumperettes are furnished. One can obtain a new trunk rack finished to harmonize with the remainder of the car. There also is a new horn with a distinctive and stronger note.

"On the instrument board is a control operating the new-type muffler with by-pass. The running board moldings are smarter and more beautiful and an improved rear-view mirror is an additional feature.

"In the tonneau of certain inclosed models there is an arm rest in the center of the seat that may be folded up flush with the up-

OREGON BRIDGE FALL REQUIRES DETOUR USE

The Pacific highway in Oregon is now subject to a detour due to the collapse of the Luckiamute River bridge just south of Monmouth. The detour leaves the highway at Suver and is graveled to Independence, thence pavement to Monmouth, states the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

SIGNS DISAPPEARING

PHOENIX, Sept. 22. (Exclusive) Roadside signs are under rather general ban in Arizona and are decreasing in number. They are not permitted on the broad right of ways controlled by the State Highway Commission and are being frowned upon by a number of special road associations that are favoring use of certain thoroughfares.

AUTOS AID SUCCESS OF AIR RACES

Increased Power in Motor Car Striking in Comparison With Time of First Event

And now come the gentlemen with noses for statistics to announce that the national air meet at Mines Field attracted more motor cars than ever were collected before in Southern California in a similar area. Motorists who attempted to extricate their cars in a hurry after the final events probably agree.

That the motor car was a prime adjunct to the success of the meet was not shown only in the number of spectators that were carried to the field, but in serving officials. The official cars for the Junior Chamber of Commerce, under whose successful auspices the aerial meet was held, were two silver anniversary Buick touring cars. These cars piled up husky mileage in the week in doing their contributory bit.

"The spectators at the meet marveled at the power developed by the motors of today as compared to those of Los Angeles' first sky tournament in 1910," said Harold W. Tuttle, assistant general manager of the Howard Automobile Company of Los Angeles. "In those early days motors with thirty-five horsepower were about the limit. New motors hardly any larger in bulk develop more than ten times that power through the developments in engineering science.

"The valve-in-head principle has been basic in the increasing of power without the corresponding burdening of weight. The Buick Motor Company engineers for twenty-five years have built valve-in-head motors, and the result is that Buick today develops more engine power for its size than any other automobile motor. The larger motor of the silver anniversary Buick develops ninety-one horsepower and the smaller seventy-three. Yet the weight is no greater than in models of previous years. Refinement of the valve-in-head principle does the work."

The crowd was immensely interested in the didoes cut by Al Wilson in the 1910 plane and also the swallow-like maneuverings of the trio of Sea Hawks. The advancement made in aviation in the intervening years was strikingly illustrated, although Wilson made a tremendously spectacular showing because of his personal stunting skill.

"The motor car of today, contrasted with that of 1910, would seem just as odd," said Tuttle. "In fact, the motor car has advanced so rapidly that the model of today is distinctly different in appearance from thaf of yesterday. Buick has struck boldly out in the advancement of styles with body construction that permits of increased roominess and comfort. All styles change. Women's dress is undergoing one of the most radical changes in years."

Tuttle reporfed that Buick has broken all of its twenty-five years' production records by maintaining 1330 cars a day since the beginning of the month. And in the first month after the announcement of the new models more than 45,000 were shipped by the factory.

"These figures best tell the popularity of the new silver anniversary Buick," Tuttle says.

KERN COUNTY PAVES ROAD

Kern county asphalt pavement mileage will be increased to the extent of 8.9 miles due to the fact that the State Highway Department is calling for bids Wednesday, on 31,100 tons of asphalt paving material to be used in the construction of the highway from Famosa to 8.9 miles from Wasco. The contract will involve about 900,000 square feet of asphalt pavement.

PISTONS WEIGHED

Connecting rods and pistons of the new Dodge Brothers Senior six are assembled in groups of six, then are weighed separately to see that they all are within one-fourth ounce of each other, insuring smooth engine performance. Pistons are of the Bohnalite pattern, being of aluminum with inserted steel struts. The lightness of these pistons adds considerably to the performance and smoothness of the Senior engine.

FUEL HEAT REGULATED

The exhaus-heated intake manifold on the Dodge Brothers Senior six insures the delivery of equal amounts of properly prepared fuel to all cylinders. There is an adjustment on the dash for controlling the amount of heat supplied to the incoming charge so that the proper temperature may be reached regardless of weather conditions.

Chrysler has consistently been upsetting its previous greatest records for production and shipments. Nearly every week establishes a new high weekly mark. September output, while it cannot equal the orders recieved, the company reports, will be the largest month the company has ever known. From a high mark of 1321 cars a day the plant a few days later climbed to 1354 and then to 1370.

SHIPPING RECORD

August shipments of Nash cars from the Wisconsin plants totaled 22,525, a new high record and an increase over the corresponding month of 1927 of 4498 cars. Unfilled orders total about 25,000, all being for immediate delivery. Buick is working on schedule calling for an output of 1330 cars daily during September. Willys-Overland is continuing to turn out an average of 6000 cars per week and the Olds Motor works will contribute 10,000 to September's total.

Ford now has five foreign plants working—Berlin, and Sao Paulo, Brazil, getting under way this month. The Ford Cleveland plant reopened this week and production is expected to reach 200 cars daily during October. The plant had been closed since the first of the year and its resuming production will relieve the demand in the Cleveland section.

Enforcement of the compulsory automobile insurance law in Massachusetts has been carefully watched by everyone concerned during the past year and consensus of opinion is that the law has not been a success. The menace of the irresponsible driver still exists and something more than argument against compulsory insurance is needed. In actual practice compulsory insurance appears to carry with it more evils than it cures.

ALTERNATIVE CURE

Edson S. Lott, president of the United States Casualty Company, has suggested at least partial remedy in his suggestion that instead of compulsory insurance any man who has an unsatisfied judgment against him for automobile damages shall not be allowed to register or operate his automobile until the claim is paid.

"Times" Used-Car Week Did

Greer-Robbins used-car sales have been unusually active during the past week, according to Bill Hinds, manager. Mr. Hinds has been an active participant in The Times Used Car Week drive which closes today. Greer-Robbins along with other dealers have been concentrating, with the co-operation of The Times, in pushing the sale of used automobiles, all of them reporting success in the drive. Above views are of Greer-Robbins used car salesrooms.

Actor Seeks Strength in Varied Mounts

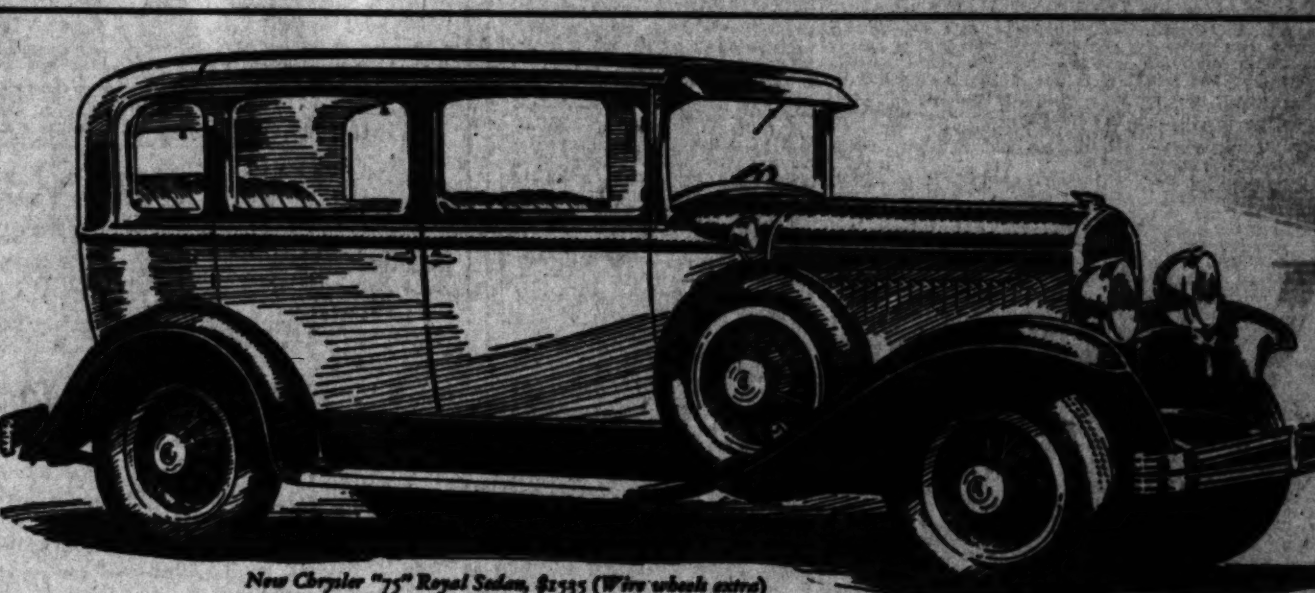
Ken Duncan, Universal western picture star, has a decided preference for dependability. This fact is evidenced by the sturdy horse he rides in his films and by his use of India tires on his automobile, according to Frank T. Price, president of Nelson & Price, Inc., world's largest distributors of India tires, guaranteed 20,000 miles.

Duncan's favorite role is that of the "wild westerner," and to get to and from the necessary location sites requires considerable rough driving. He claims to have driven over the wildest country in the West, many places where but few white men have ever visited before and not once have his India tires given him a bit of trouble. "To say that I am completely sold on the merit of India tires is putting it mildly," said Duncan. "Any tire that can stand the rough usage such as I put my tires to, must be good."

Nelson & Price, Inc., with four branches, is still reporting phenomenal sales on the new India tire. Indications suggest that this will be the greatest year in that firm's history.

PASS KEPT OPEN

Gravel surfacing of the San Marcos Pass construction project was begun on the 4th inst., and should be completed in 250 days. The contractor is required to keep the route open for traffic, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.



New Chrysler "75" Royal Sedan, $1535 (Wire wheels extra)

"Volume won through value" the story of CHRYSLER success

Why can Chrysler, in the new "75" and "65," give more than others can give?

Why do these cars vie, not with cars in their price group, but with cars costing many hundreds, yes, even a thousand dollars more?

Because—Chrysler begins with quality, wins volume through value, spreads the cost of quality and value over five great cars in five great markets, makes five great operations basically one, and by these savings is able to spend more for you in beautifying and enhancing the new "75" and "65."

The new Chrysler "75" and the Chrysler "65" are much more than two new cars, or even two new Chrysler cars.

With their new slender-profile radiator, arched-window silhouette, "air-wing" fenders, "Silver-Dome" high-compression engine using any gasoline, rubber shock insulators, internal-expanding hydraulic 4-wheel brakes, Lovejoy shock absorbers and scores of other new developments, exclusive to Chrysler, they represent a parting of the ways between the old and the new.

They represent a new significance in style, in performance and in value-giving, an increase in buying power which affects the entire structure of the industry, up to the highest in price.

New Chrysler "75" Prices—Royal Sedan, $1535; 2-passenger Coupe (with rumble seat), $1535; Roadster (with rumble seat), $1555; Town Sedan, $1655. (6-ply full-balloon tires.)

Resort Notes

Resort Notes

ALTHOUGH the summer season is over, Glenn Ranch Resort in the San Fernardino Mountains continues to entertain lovers of the woods and streams. Horseback riding and swimming are the major sports while hiking and fishing contribute many pleasures. Next month the leaves will begin to turn and a real old-fashioned back East autumn will prevail, the management states. Apples will be picked, cider will be made and corn will be popped around the fireplace of the resort in the evenings. A different kind of a good time from what Californians are accustomed to will be enjoyed by guests. The Southern Sierras Power Company and The Fontana Farms have just completed large and enthusiastic get-together gatherings at the ranch with the John A. Diehlman Corporation of this city planning to cluster there this week-end. Then will come the last and biggest party of the famous Sierra Club, on the 29th and 30th inst. This will close their summer season and promises to be a large affair. The "ranch" will remain open indefinitely, with not as much entertainment as is provided in the summer time but with plenty of good food and hospitable service. Housekeeping quarters for those who prefer to cook their own are available, with the opportunity of enjoying real ranch products from the gardens and fields of the resort.

THE following guests were recently registered in the Glen Ivy Mineral Hot Springs, situated in Temescal Canyon, on the main inland route to San Diego and eleven miles the other side of Corona: Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Jones, Dr. T. E. Regar, T. D. Easterly and party, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Washburn, P. Olsen, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Simmons, and J. O. Hartley and party, all of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. L. Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. McKeon, Lester J. Fountain, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Baker and Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Rosenberg, all of Long Beach; Dr. and Mrs. F. K. Ledyard and children, Mr. and Mrs. Will H. Davie, and Robert O. Foote, all of Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. A. G. McIntosh of Glendora; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Peterson, P. P. Parvin and mother and Mrs. U. R. Owens and Dolores Owens, all of San Diego; and Mr. and Mrs. Fred E. Patton and son of Redondo Beach.

MISS A. M. WOODFORD, proprietor of Oakglen Lodge, located in the mountains back of Redlands, at an elevation of 5000 feet, announces that the annual Halloween party at the lodge this year will be held over the week-end of November 3. This is done in order not to interfere with home parties on Halloween night.

Weather conditions at Oakglen in the fall are always ideal, and this year an exceptional apple harvest is anticipated.

"Trips through Spookland," a "Spooks' Banquet" and an old-fashioned Halloween dance are planned for the coming celebration there.

AMONG the guests from Los Angeles enjoying a visit at the Hotel Virginia, in Long Beach, last week, were: Susan B. Smock, Barbara Cunningham, L. R. Holmes, B. Conner, John L. Gurney, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Bowe, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Ellison, H. McComb and Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Ufer.

WORK STARTED ON NEW ROAD

way to Porterville, though not contingent upon the latter, and its beginning is at Carroll Creek, ten miles south of Lone Pine. After a winding climb on a 7 per cent grade along the base of the range to Slide Canyon, a series of curves and switchbacks carry it to the crest between that gash and the Little Cottonwood. Thence there is a practically flat course to the Little Cottonwood crossing, where begins another 7 per cent ascent to the ridge of the main Cottonwood.

VAST PANORAMA

These skyward horseshoe turns come out upon promontories that bring to the eye a far-flung landscape of indescribable contrasts and weird charm—green reaches of fertile vale, the bare but variegated White Mountains towering in the blue heavens, and the desert Panamints silhouetted far beyond, purple ghosts dominating a stark waste. Snowy peaks and withering heat waves barely avoid clashing.

In the level foreground a mile below and five or six off gleams the bed of vanishing Owens Lake, a dead soda sea that until recent years covered an expanse of more than 200 square miles with waters so caustic that not a trace of life, animal or vegetable, could exist in them. The thin sheets of brine that remain in places are sometimes almost blood-red viewed from the heights, and the frost-white shores, ever closing in, suggest a miles-wide edging of exquisite cluny lace. With the constantly changing light, cloud and color effects, from noonday brilliance to soft sunset glow, the whole comprises a wonderful kaleidoscopic panorama that probably cannot be duplicated on earth.

SCORNFUL SPHINX

Guarding Little Cottonwood Creek where the motors will roar by is a giant sphinx first noted by me and so impressive that I desired to linger long. This grim granite figure, buffeted, fractured and seared by the elements through countless centuries but still undaunted, stares scornfully and defiantly down the canyon upon the lower world. It presents clearly defined features and the fierce visage is approached with startling suddenness from either direction on the trail. Fifty feet tall, strikingly perfect in form, this rock prodigy is an arresting object indeed.

The mysterious and forbidding aspect of what may properly be likened to a huge gray death's-head is intensified by a grinning attendant imp carved by the storms of ages into a grotesque masterpiece of comic sculpture. The solemn, silent monster in a setting of wild grandeur is 10,000 feet above the sea and its vast range of vision embraces even Telescope Peak in Death Valley.

On the most advantageous promontory is to be graded a circular parkway designated Inyo Vista and serving as an observation apex for tourists, to whom a miracle will be unfolded.

CITY'S HIGH SPOT

From the sphinx the survey drops to main Cottonwood Creek and parallels it for two miles through a wooded belt in which are many beautiful camp sites, all on Los Angeles property, the municipality having acquired 1600 acres for power development purposes by outright purchase. Included are the north slope and summit of heavily timbered Mt. Van Norman, 10,785 feet the highest point of land owned by the city. It is safe to say that not more than one citizen out of 100,000 knows of this possession. At its base are the ruins of an early-day sawmill and there is to be located a hydroelectric generating plant. Near by stands the massive old logging wagon recently described in these columns. That is nine miles up the road.

At the upper end of the city's ground, in a shady mead of surpassing loveliness just below the junction of the south fork of Cottonwood Creek with the main stream, that rainbow run will be forded at 9900 feet altitude. Army Pass shows splendidly ahead and over it leads the easiest and most direct pack trail to Mt. Whitney, only seventeen miles from the road. Three miles up on the right are the five Cottonwood Lakes, true home of the golden trout, to which a branch auto drive undoubtedly will be functioning a few years hence.

OVER THE TOP

From the crossing the highway will extend up along Horseshoe and Round Meadows, where the Bureau of Power and Light has two immense natural reservoir sites, and to the point of beginning of the gentle climb to Mulkey Summit, the backbone of the Sierra Nevada, two miles farther on in a thick white pine forest 10,500 feet above Neptune's haunts and nineteen miles from the start at Carroll Creek.

The survey was made by Paul E. Ritch, Owens Valley field engineer of the Bureau of Waterworks and Supply, with a crew of five men and a pack train, and required thirty days' hard work. Aside from its picturesqueness perhaps the outstanding feature about the road is its easy gradient, a maximum of 7 per cent and an average of but slightly over 6, which would appear impossible at first glance. The first four miles are disintegrated granite, easy to handle with a grader. Then there is a long series of shattered granite reefs where little drilling will need to be done but plenty of power used. At the Little Cottonwood is a mile of patches of solid granite not so readily subdued, while after that the going will be quite ordinary.

Generally speaking the route traverses a rocky timbered terrain—pinon, pine and birch—all within Inyo county and the Inyo National Forest. On the opposite side of the range Porterville is seventy miles from Mulkey Summit via Springvale, with twenty miles of road already completed and the remaining fifty not difficult of construction and comparatively inexpensive.

COST NOT HEAVY

Widely discrepant estimates of the cost of the Cottonwood Lakes basin road have been made, some of the high-powered experts stepping it up to the enormous figure of $175,000. Originally the Bureau of Power and Light appropriated $30,000 and Inyo county $15,000, while the Water Bureau agreed to furnish the steam shovels and all other machinery. Chairman George W. Naylor of the Inyo Board of Supervisors, an experienced, practical road man who knows the mountains as he knows his own home, believes this is sufficient to put the job over in good shape. Foresty officials have lately been on the ground conferring as to the help that service is to contribute but no decision has been arrived at.

Carroll Creek, where the survey begins, is now accessible two ways, one from the State highway via Diaz Lake, below Lone Pine, and the other from that enterprising town direct up Tuttle Creek, through the fantastic and colossal rock formations of the brown Alabama Hills—a scenic and geological treat for anybody.

LOS ANGELES GAINS

The projected road will be an asset not only to the Owens Valley and Los Angeles but to all Southern California and a boon to anglers, campers, hunters and outdoor lovers in general, affording a virgin playground. It will be 552 feet higher than Tioga Pass and only 210 miles from this city.

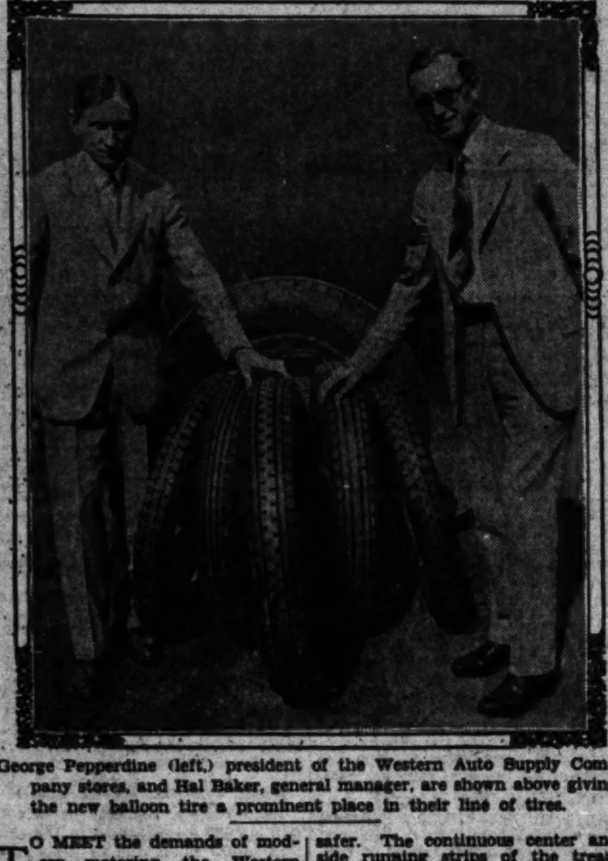
A large number of residents of Long Pine and neighboring communities held a picnic at Carroll Creek last Sunday in celebration of the important enterprise now to be carried out. Practically the entire county was represented. The preliminary survey was made a number of years ago by W. L. Skinner of Lone Pine and the data were worked out by his brother, the late Lloyd Skinner.

STEERING EASY

Factors which attain steering ease are ball-thrust steering knuckles, 13.8-to-1 steering gear, smooth shifting transmission and clutch and brakes of effortless action. These are to be found on the improved Pontiac six.

IMPROVED AUTO TIRE PRESENTED

Changed Conditions Bring New Type



George Pepperdine (left,) president of the Western Auto Supply Company stores, and Hal Baker, general manager, are shown above giving the new balloon tire a prominent place in their line of tires.

TO MEET the demands of modern motoring, the Western Auto Supply Company has this week announced through their general manager, Hal R. Baker, a new and improved Western Giant balloon tire.

"Four-wheel brakes, smooth pavements, sudden stops, quick starting and greater speed call for a new and different tire," said Mr. Baker in making the announcement. "Keeping step with modern motoring requirements, Western Auto meets this demand with the perfectly balanced, new, improved Western Giant balloon tire with center traction tread.

"We believe this new tire to be the crowning achievement of our many years in the retail tire business," said the Western Auto general manager, "and as a result of years of experience gained while providing motorists of the West with millions of long-wearing tires, we present this new Western Giant balloon.

"One of the chief features of this new tire which is now being shown in all of the more than 150 Western Auto stores, is the new, improved center traction tread, which increases mileage and makes driving safer. The continuous center and side running strips of the tread equalize road-surface contact, add thousands of miles to tread life and make steering easier. The scientifically designed slots and grooves increase traction and safety and tough bars of rubber extend over the sides of the tread as special protection against curb scrapes and curve speeding.

"Additional rubber has been used in the new, improved Western Giant balloon and the pure gum rubber is especially treated to make it more wear resisting. With superior design, balance, material and construction through and through, it is our sincere belief that in the new improved Western Giant balloon tire with the center traction tread, we offer the finest, most economical, most rugged, longest-lasting and safest tire that has ever carried the envied name of the Western Auto Supply Company.

"The same tremendous resources and the same iron-clad guarantee, the same 'Customer is always right' policy that has always assured the complete and lasting satisfaction of every 'Western Auto' customer with every purchase, stands behind every new, improved Western Giant balloon tire," concluded Mr. Baker.

The Bus Driver

Buses have to operate on schedule and we make sure of dependable service by using Champion Spark Plugs.

Champion is the better spark plug because it has an exclusive sillimanite insulator specially treated to withstand the much higher temperatures of the modern high-compression engine. Also a new patented solid copper gasket-seal that remains absolutely gas-tight under high compression. Special analysis electrodes which assure a fixed spark-gap under all driving conditions.

Tires Rebuilt in New Mold Reported Good

Although the McClaren Tire Company's rebuilding plant has been in operation four months, already the heavy mileage burners are reporting exceptional service from tires rebuilt the McClaren way, according to L. A. Irish, president of the McClaren Tire Company, distributors of McClaren tires for Southern California and Arizona.

"P. L. Wartenbe, trouble-shooter for the White Auto Company, has driven a set of these rebuilt tires on his Buick 21,218 miles, he reports, and they are still going strong," says Irish.

"This is conclusive proof of the economy of rebuilding tires which are guaranteed to give 85 per cent of the mileage of a new tire at less than half the cost. This has been made possible through the use of the new super mold rebuilder, which has effected three great improvements in rebuilding tires.

"The first is: One-fourth less heat is required to rebuild tires with this full circular mold. This permits rebuilding the same carcass two and three times. The second is: It enables use of the same process of applying the rubber and tread design as employed at the McClaren factory. The third is: Because the tire is cured all around at once instead of in many separate molds the tread is always perfect and no weak spots can develop."

Seventy-five-Inch Motor Did It

The Baby Bullet being fueled with Texaco gasoline. Its pilot won the small planes race at Mines Field.

FRESNO FAIR OPEN

Fresno District Fair will be held from Tuesday to next Sunday, inclusive, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

SAN DIMAS ROAD GOOD

Motorists driving up San Dimas Canyon will encounter good macadam for two miles with good dirt road to the control. Fair conditions then extend for approximately six miles beyond, although several stream crossings are necessary, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Fuel Wins in Two Air Races on Same Day

Texaco figured in a double victory during the National Air Races at Mines Field when, on the same day, the "Baby Bullet," smallest plane in the meet, won the light-plane race, and three big Douglas planes won first, second and third places in the National Guard race, using Texaco gasoline and golden motor oils.

The "Baby Bullet" weighs 250 pounds, and uses a two-cylinder Driscol-Cherub motor with only seventy-five cubic inches displacement. It has a wing spread of eighteen feet, occupies a surface of fifty square feet and will carry 300 pounds. It will take off within fifty feet of runway, and will land at sixty to seventy miles per hour. It has a speed of 145 miles per hour. In the race at Mines Field, the Bullet defeated other planes with motors displacing as high as 300 cubic inches.

Contrasting sharply with the diminutive "Baby Bullet," looking like a watch charm beside them, were the huge Douglas 02's, National Guard planes, largest ships in the races. They were equipped with twelve cylinder, 400-horsepower Liberty motors with 1650 cubic inches displacement.

"Western Auto" Announces

The New-Improved
WESTERN GIANT BALLOON
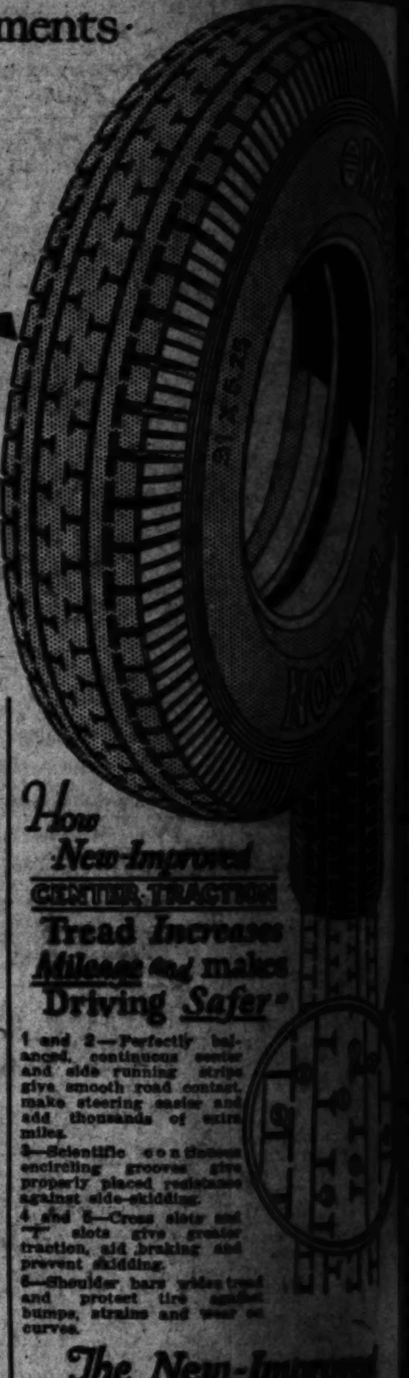
with CENTER TRACTION Tread
~at Our Regular Low Prices~



Quick starting—four-wheel brakes—smooth pavements—the urge for greater speed—and other demands of modern motoring, call for a new and different tire . . . "Western Auto" meets this requirement with the perfectly balanced New Improved Western Giant Balloon with CENTER TRACTION Tread.

This new improved tire is the crowning achievement of our many years in the retail tire business . . . the result of years of experience gained while providing motorists of the West with millions of long-wearing, economical tires.

The magnified sketch on the right shows instantly the superiorities of this new tread. The continuous center and side running-strips equalize road surface contact and add thousands of miles to tread life and make steering easier. Scientifically designed slots and grooves increase traction and safety. Tough bars extend over the sides as special protection against curb scrapes and curve speeding. More rubber is used. The 100% pure gum rubber used in tread is specially treated to make it more wear-resisting. In fact, superior design, balance, material and construction through and through make this the most economical tire you can use.

Every New Improved Western Giant Balloon with CENTER TRACTION Tread is backed by the same Iron-Clad Guarantee . . . the same tremendous resources . . . and by the same CUSTOMER IS ALWAYS RIGHT Policy that has always assured the complete and lasting satisfaction of every "Western Auto" customer, with every purchase.

So—remembering our reputation for honesty and fair dealing . . . and remembering the immense popularity earned and enjoyed by all other "Western Auto" tires . . . equip your car with these perfectly balanced New Improved Western Giant Balloons with CENTER TRACTION Treads, confident that you are installing the finest, the handsomest, the most rugged, the longest lasting, the safest, and the most economical balloon tires that have ever carried the envied name of the Western Auto Supply Company . . . the world's largest retailers of Automobile Supplies . . . !

How New-Improved CENTER TRACTION Tread Increases Mileage and makes Driving Safer

1 and 2—Perfectly balanced, continuous center and side running strips give smooth road contact, make steering easier and add thousands of extra miles.
3—Scientific continuous encircling grooves give properly placed resistance against side-skidding.
4 and 5—Cross slots and "T" slots give greater traction, aid braking and prevent skidding.
6—Shoulder bars widen tread and protect tire against bumps, strains and wear on curves.

Aviation Fashions

SPECIALLY POSED

BY PEGGY HAMILTON

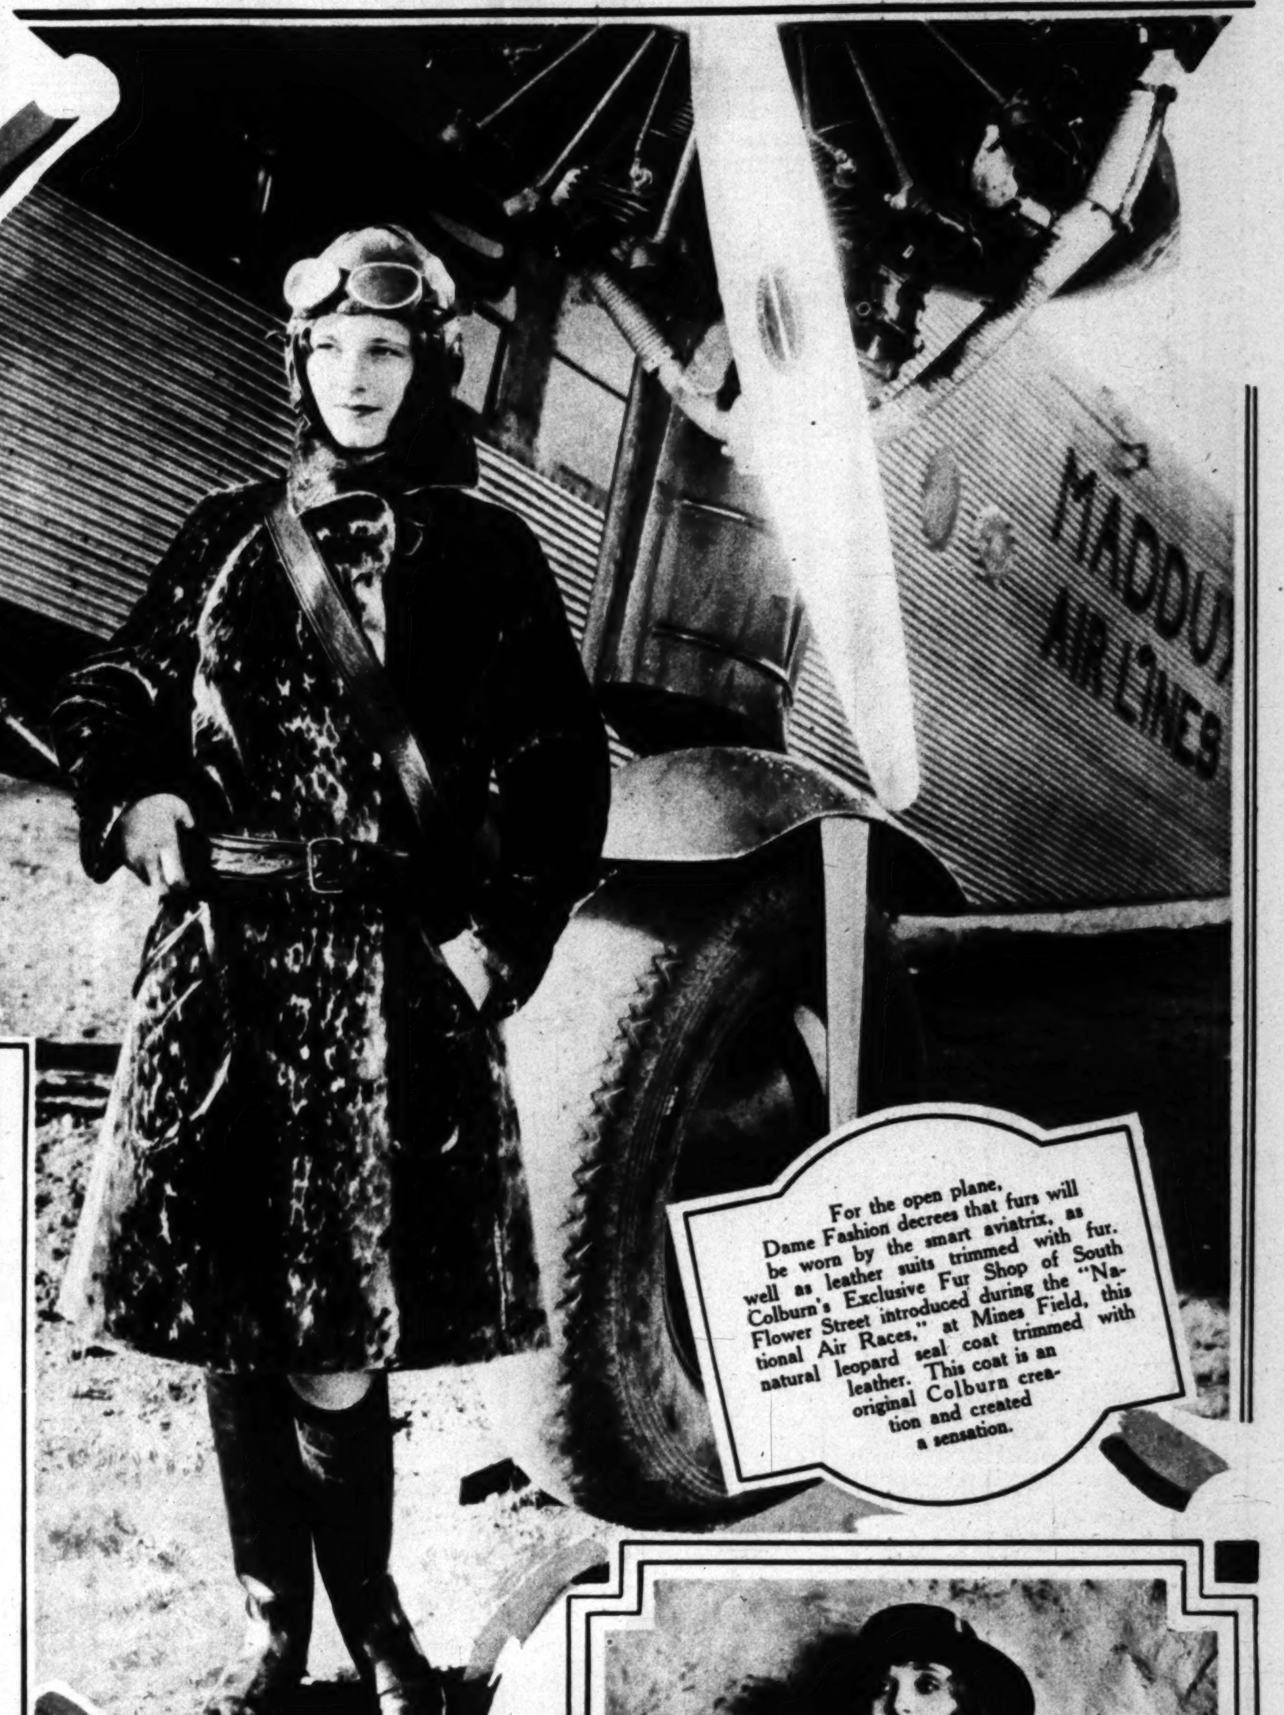
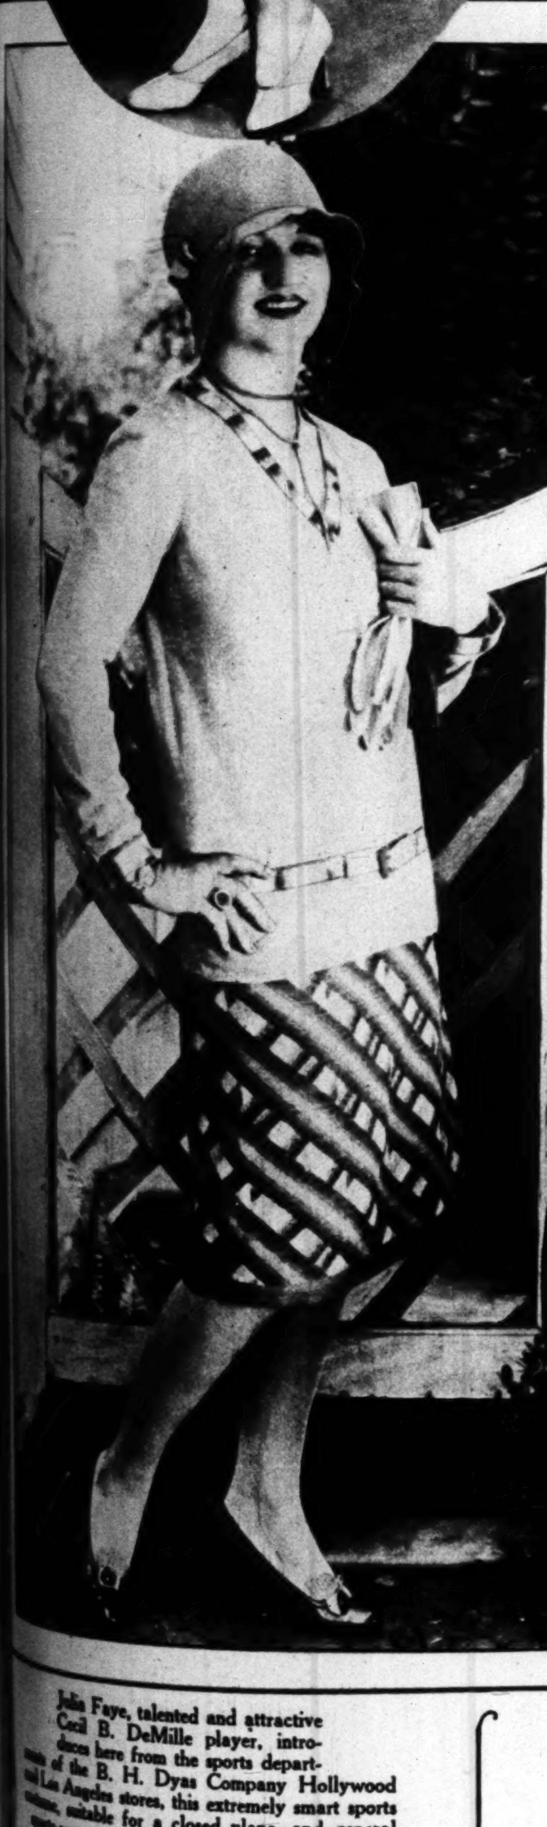
For aviation travel in closed planes, Jean Swartz, of Hollywood Boulevard, near Gower, created this coat of beige velvet, made along plain lines with trimming of stripe squirrel fur fashioned in a stand-up collar which extends to the hemline. Wide cuffs of fur finish the sleeves. Beige velvet hat with beige kid and suede pumps complete the outfit as worn here by Josephine Dunn, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player.

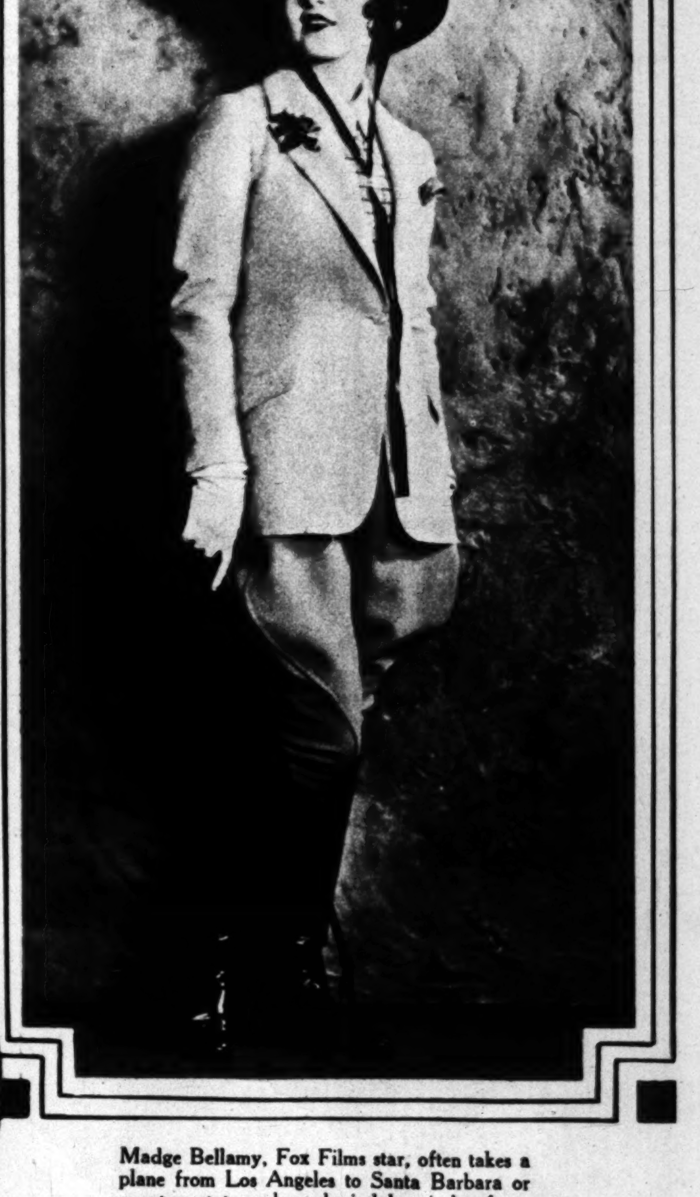


For the open plane, Dame Fashion decrees that furs will be worn by the smart aviatrix, as well as leather suits trimmed with fur. Colburn's Exclusive Fur Shop of South Flower Street introduced during the "National Air Races," at Mines Field, this natural leopard seal coat trimmed with leather. This coat is an original Colburn creation and created a sensation.



Julia Faye, talented and attractive Cecil B. DeMille player, introduces here from the sports departments of the B. H. Dyas Company Hollywood and Los Angeles stores, this extremely smart sports costume, suitable for a closed plane, and general sports wear, even practical for shopping on Fall days in California. The imported jersey top is worn with Jacquard woven skirt. The snake necklace, also from the B. H. Dyas Company, is the very latest thing from Paris.

After a ride in an open plane you can instantly transform your entire appearance with the Hepner "Halo-Tress." A pat, a quick brush and you look as though you had just come from the hands of your favorite hairdresser. The "Halo-Tress" is not a wig or transformation. It is a wonderful hair creation that actually combs in with your own tresses and defies detection, as shown here by Kay Bryant, Fox Film Player.



Madge Bellamy, Fox Films star, often takes a plane from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara or country estates, where she indulges in her favorite sport, horseback riding. For these days one can dress in any costume, in a closed plane, suitable for the affair which one expects to attend. Miss Bellamy wears various shades of Doraldina's "Allura," favoring "Light Burn" and "Tropical" for outdoors, and finds Doraldina's cosmetics, powders and creams excellent to beautify and preserve the skin.

▲ FROM A NATION OF FINE ▲ ▲ INN-KEEPERS COMES THIS ▲ WONDERFUL DESSERT IDEA

A NATION of fine inn-keepers! There's but one country in the world that can rightly claim this honor and that's Switzerland.

It's a constant joy to be a guest in a Swiss inn. From the moment the traveler arrives until he leaves, everything is done to make him comfortable . . . to make him happy. Above all is the thrill that comes at each meal. For the Swiss chef has no peer. Every dish he serves is a masterpiece.

It is your privilege to enjoy in your own home one of the most delicious desserts that is served in a Swiss hotel. Just go to your store and ask for a carton of Swiss Knight Cheese. Serve these individually wrapped portions with fresh fruit — apples, pears or grapes — and you will have the famous Continental dessert that thousands of travelers and tourists eat in Switzerland daily, and talk about long after they have left that picturesque country.

Swiss Knight Cheese has no equal in flavor and goodness. Possessing a rare, delicate, nut-like zest, it intrigues your taste with every bite. And you can eat it all because there is no crust. For sandwiches, omelets and salads there is no cheese that is as delicious as Swiss Knight.

Look for the red band

Swiss Knight Cheese is sold in grocery and delicatessen stores everywhere. Ask for it by name and look for the red band stripped across the carton, on which are the words "Swiss Knight." Then you will get the original Petit Swiss Gruyère Cheese which has been widely imitated, but never equaled. Swiss Knight Cheese is packed in 8-oz. cartons; one whole portion or six individual portions wrapped in foil. Gerber & Co., Ltd., Thoune, Switzerland. (Above)—Here's the Continental dessert so popular abroad—a nice, sound apple and a portion of Swiss Knight Cheese. The tart-sweet juice of the apple as it combines with the nut-like flavor of the cheese can't be described—you must taste it yourself. If you wish, pears or grapes can be substituted for apples.

(Below)—Swiss Knight Cheese is packed in 8-oz. cartons, either one whole piece or six individual portions as illustrated, wrapped in foil. As long as a carton of Swiss Knight Gruyère is unopened, it is not necessary to keep it in the refrigerator. This means you can safely buy several cartons at one time.

Why Folks Get Fat

and how they lose it

Science, some years ago, found a cause of excess fat which is easy to correct. Scientists proved it on thousands of test animals, then on human beings. The results were reported in medical journals, and the use of this method has spread the world over.

Then a great medical laboratory embodied this method in Marmola prescription tablets. They have now been used for 20 years—millions of boxes of them. The use has grown to vast proportions through users telling others.

The results are seen in every circle. Slenderness prevails. Excess fat is much less common than it was. Now physicians everywhere are prescribing for obesity the chief factor in Marmola.

CHILDREN CHEERFULLY EAT VEGETABLES

if you combine the vegetables with Knox Sparkling Gelatine

*Jellied Vegetables

*Spanish Cream

YOU can lead children to vegetables, but often it's a task to make them eat. Of course, you can coax and bribe, but there's a much more successful and easy way if you use the recipe for Knox Jellied Vegetables.

AS YOU read this recipe you can quickly see how simple it is to make Jellied Vegetables. And best of all, when the children see this colorful dish, all hostility to carrots, peas, spinach and cabbage will vanish. Many mothers are using this recipe with great success. As each season brings on new vegetables, you can vary the appearance and taste of the dish. Not only will the children get the nutrition from the vegetables, but the vital food elements from Knox Sparkling Gelatine that promote growth and strength.

Jellied Vegetables
(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water
⅓ cup lemon juice
1 cup boiling water
¼ cup sugar
Few grains salt
½ cup cabbage, finely shredded
1 cup celery, cut in small pieces
2 tablespoonfuls grated raw carrot

Soak gelatine in cold water about five minutes. Add boiling water, lemon juice, sugar and salt. When mixture begins to stiffen, add prepared vegetables (grate carrot on coarse grater). Turn into wet molds and chill. Serve on lettuce leaves with or without salad dressing. Chopped beets, spinach, peas, or other vegetables may be used.

Spanish Cream
(6 Servings)

1 level tablespoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine
3 cups milk
½ cup sugar, scant
3 eggs
¼ teaspoonful salt
1 teaspoonful vanilla

Soak the gelatine in the milk about ten minutes. Place over hot water, and when gelatine is dissolved, add sugar. Pour slowly on the yolks of the eggs slightly beaten, return to double boiler and cook until thickened somewhat, stirring constantly. Remove from stove and add salt and flavoring, then add whites of eggs beaten until stiff. Turn into one large or individual molds, first dipped in cold water, and place in ice-box. (This will separate and form a jelly on the bottom and custard on top.) Serve with whipped cream, sliced oranges or any fruit or fruit juice.

Nourishing desserts for children can also be made with Knox Sparkling Gelatine. The Spanish Cream featured here has no equal in this respect. For under-nourished children and babies, ask your doctor about the addition of Knox Gelatine to milk to aid digestion.

But Knox Sparkling Gelatine is not limited to children's food by any means. Quickly and easily you can prepare unusual courses for luncheons, dinners and suppers. Soup, salads, fish and meat loaves besides colorful desserts. The new Knox recipe books will tell you how.

Using Knox Gelatine means real economy, for each package makes four different salads or desserts, each of which will serve six people generously. Recipes in every package. Your grocer has Knox Sparkling Gelatine and can readily procure copies of the new Knox recipe books for you. Or address Charles B. Knox Gelatine Co., 304 Knox Avenue, Johnstown, New York.

The New Factor in motor car buying more and more car buyers are taking advantage of the Style Leadership of Body by Fishe

Everywhere, people now realize how pronounced is the style leadership of Body by Fisher.

So plain and unmistakable is this style leadership that it has become a new and important factor in the buying of motor cars. Thousands who appreciate what this style superiority means in terms of car satisfaction and resale value, carefully confine their motor car selection to cars with Body by Fisher.

This public attitude goes back, of course, to the fact that Fisher designers are style originators. They are so signally successful in creating new body styles, that those styles are followed almost as a matter of course. But style changes require from six to twelve months before they can begin to appear in other quarters.

And, by the time these style changes are made, Fisher has again created still finer beauty, which again places the cars for which it builds bodies still farther ahead in style.

The result is, quite naturally, that thousands of motor car buyers who demand the latest in authentic motor car style—who prefer to lead instead of to follow—buy only those motor cars with Body by Fisher.

By this, in reality, they reserve motor car selection to the leading cars in the various price fields. For, in whatever field you buy, it is a very plain fact that the greatest value and the most successful car is equipped with Body by Fisher.

Scan the list of cars with Body by Fisher, given herewith. Then you will realize how true it is that every car with Fisher Body leads, not only in style, in beauty, in comfort, but in dependability, in performance and in value, as well.

WHOOPE-E -- Cowgirl!

WESTERNS may be de trop with audiences, but if the studios choose pretty girls like Mary Brian to star in them, their popularity should soar. Miss Brian didn't wear the spiffy cowgirl costume shown in this photo in a plainsman's epic or anything like that—but as a fancy dress outfit in "Varsity," a college story. However, we recommend it to the attention of Tom Mix, Fred Thomson and other Beau Brummels of the great open spaces. It may not be especially dustproof but, Jove, it is de luxe!

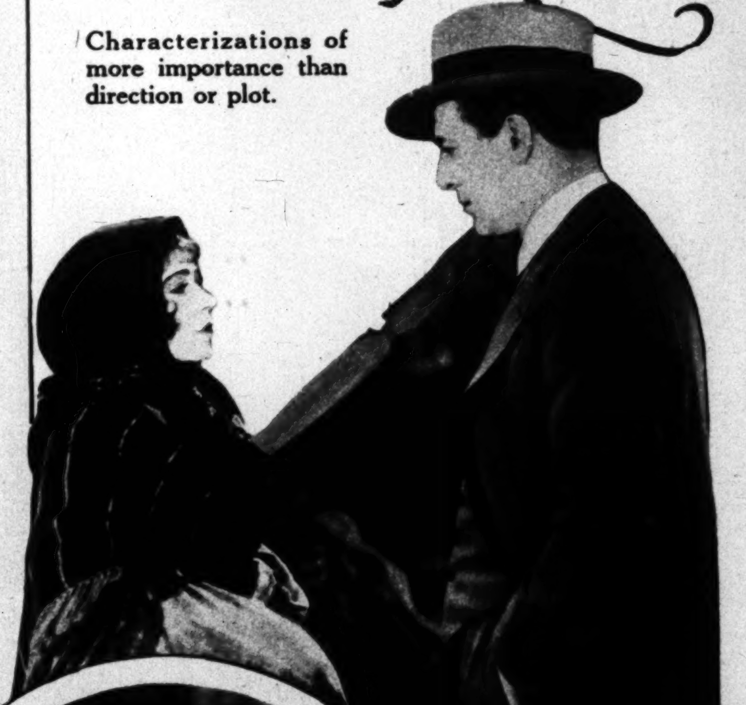
"The MATING CALL" A Drab Portrayal of Country Life

Characterizations of more importance than direction or plot.

e most spectacular and dramatic scenes in the picture take in the midst of "The der."

The scene in which Meighan throws Evelyn Brent from his house is somewhat amusing.



Meighan goes to Ellis Island for his bride, Renee Adoree.

Helen Foster and Luke Cosgrave as granddaughter and grandfather.

y WHITNEY WILLIAMS

IGHT be called a cross-section of life, "The Mating Call" it is drama of sordid proportions, however brilliant the acting. Cruze directed this picture Caddo Productions from the by Rex Beach, though it can ly be termed a faithful sion of the book.

story deals with the re- of a soldier from the late to his home in a small Flor- and to have thrust upon him the fact that the girl he secretly married the day he departed is wedded now to another man, the previous marriage having been annulled. The plot thereafter concerns the unwelcome attentions of this woman, the flaming jealousy of the husband, the soldier's marriage to an immigrant girl to stop once and for all the trouble that is brewing, and the ultimate climax at the whipping post of "The Order."

Thomas Meighan is the star of "The Mating Call," but his role has little of the interest that attached itself to his Captain McQuigg in "The Racket." A soldier, first, he soon is back in farmer's clothes, and throughout the screen play is a more or less ordinary and drab personality.

Meighan, however, cannot be reproached for his acting or for his portrayal of the role. At best, it is a part that offers little in color or of the spectacular. It has none of the romantic element about it. It is a far cry from the picturesque McQuigg to Leslie Hatten, agriculturist. Yet Meighan makes of the role a sincere characterization.

As the girl who insists upon troubling him, Evelyn Brent displays at times a lively representation of a woman tired of her husband. Essentially is it unsympathetic, her pursuit of the man she has treated so shabbily, and while the part is hardly likable, Miss Brent has breathed such wholehearted vividness into it that from the standpoint of interest it ranks high in showmanship. It is the heavy part, yet, so to speak, cannot be classed as the heavy, in the respect that such a role is regarded.

Sharing leading lady honors with Miss Brent, Renee Adoree is quite effectively pleasing as the immigrant girl whom Meighan weds. There is an unmistakable suggestion of Melisande of "The Big Parade" fame in her peasant Catharine, though the role does not even pretend to open up the possibilities of the former character.

About these three revolves the story of "The Mating Call," which scarcely rises to the standard of entertainment set by Caddo's two previous productions, "Two Arabian Knights" and "The Racket." It lacks their spontaneity, their verve and dash, and direction does not add to the general quality of the picture. "The Mating Call" cannot be said to add to Cruze's prestige as a director.

Entering the plot from time to time is "The Order," which, though its members wear black costumes, is the Ku Klux Klan. This may be an obstacle to its showing in certain sections of the country, for the Klan is so organized that it is certain to be censored. It is, however, an interesting and vital part of the picture, and is a more or less accurate expose of the workings of the Klan.

In homely parts, Gardner James, Alan Roscoe, Helen Foster and Luke Cosgrave give good accounts of themselves. Cyril Chadwick and Will R. Walling are also in the cast, but their footage is so small that one catches but a fleeting glimpse of them.

It is doubtful if "The Mating Call" will exert a general appeal. It will enjoy a certain popularity among the more sophisticated audiences, it is true, but it is not fashioned from the fabric of which truly successful pictures are patterned.

WALK on your dining-room table

YES, you can actually walk across your table and leave not a blemish behind . . . when it is protected with the satin-like richness of Johnson's Liquid Wax Polish.

For it is delightfully unlike other furniture polishes. Some are only cleaners. Others leave merely an oily residue that catches dust and shows even finger-prints.

Johnson's Wax forms an invisible armour wherever it is applied. Hidden in its delicate exquisite lustre is strength so great that generations of walking have not marred the floors that it covers. Scratches glide off. Dust whisks away. It is the only furniture polish that cleans, beautifies, and protects.

Try Johnson's Wax too on your woodwork, car, and floors. Particularly your floors, whether painted, varnished, shellacked or linoleum. Neither heels nor dirt will grind through its protecting beauty. You will know a new pride in your home and a new freedom from housework. Mail the coupon for a liberal sample and booklet.

The GREAT AMERICAN FAMILY

The final reunion, in which Hersholt comes back to his family, is grippingly human.

D. W. Griffith's latest picture, "The Battle of the Sexes," deals with the subject of family life in the American home, and tells a simple story of an errant husband's exploits as a philanderer. Jean Hersholt, in this role, offers one of the greatest characterizations of his already brilliant career, while Griffith's direction is, of course, masterful and opens up a new field of expression for him. Others in the cast are Belle Bennett, Sally O'Neil and William Bakewell, respectively wife, daughter and son, Phyllis Haver, as the adventuress, and Don Alvarado and John Batten. The production is showing now at the United Artists Theater.

Sally O'Neil's determination to bring her father back to her mother leads her to Phyllis Haver's apartment.

Belle Bennett's discovery of her husband's philandering has all the elements of intense drama.

Phyllis Haver again interprets the vamp who takes a husband away from his family.

Griffith opens his picture in a barber shop, where Hersholt meets Phyllis Haver.

There is throbbing suspense in the scene in which Sally O'Neil saves her mother from falling off the roof's ledge to the street below.

IT'S ALL A MERRY SHIPBOARD MIX-UP

"Just Married" rates high for laughs and is amusingly enacted and James Hall are provided with the two principal roles, with such able players in support as William Austin, Harrison Ford, Lila Lee, Tom Ricketts and others. It may be a matter of some interest to note at this point that Miss Taylor's success as Lorelei in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" was due, not so much to the role, as to her own personality, for in "Just Married" she proves a brightly clever light comedienne. She still retains certain Mack Sennettisms, it is true, but these are so delightfully displayed that one need not criticize her on this score.

Frank Strayer, the director, has caught the spirit of the original Anne Nichols' play with quite refreshing accuracy. The actors, too, evidently sensed their respective characters, because they are the personification of the stage figures.

"Just Married" gets off to a snappy start, with complications setting in almost immediately—and quite merrily—in the lives of the cast. Most of the plot unfolds on shipboard, but there is an introductory sequence in a fashionable Paris dressmaking shop explaining the status quo of a number of the principals.

Aboard ship, bound for New York, one hilarious mix-up follows another, until such a maze of trouble is woven between newlyweds, and lovers, and jealous fiances and jilted sweethearts that seemingly there is no plausible way out. Explanations lead to further confusion, but, as the Ancients were wont to croon, "everything comes out in the wash."

Both Miss Taylor and Hall excel in their respective comedy roles, the former looking particularly fetching in most of her scenes. Her popularity will in all probability be immeasurably increased by the humorous tenor of her interpretation, and Hall's standing in no wise will be affected.

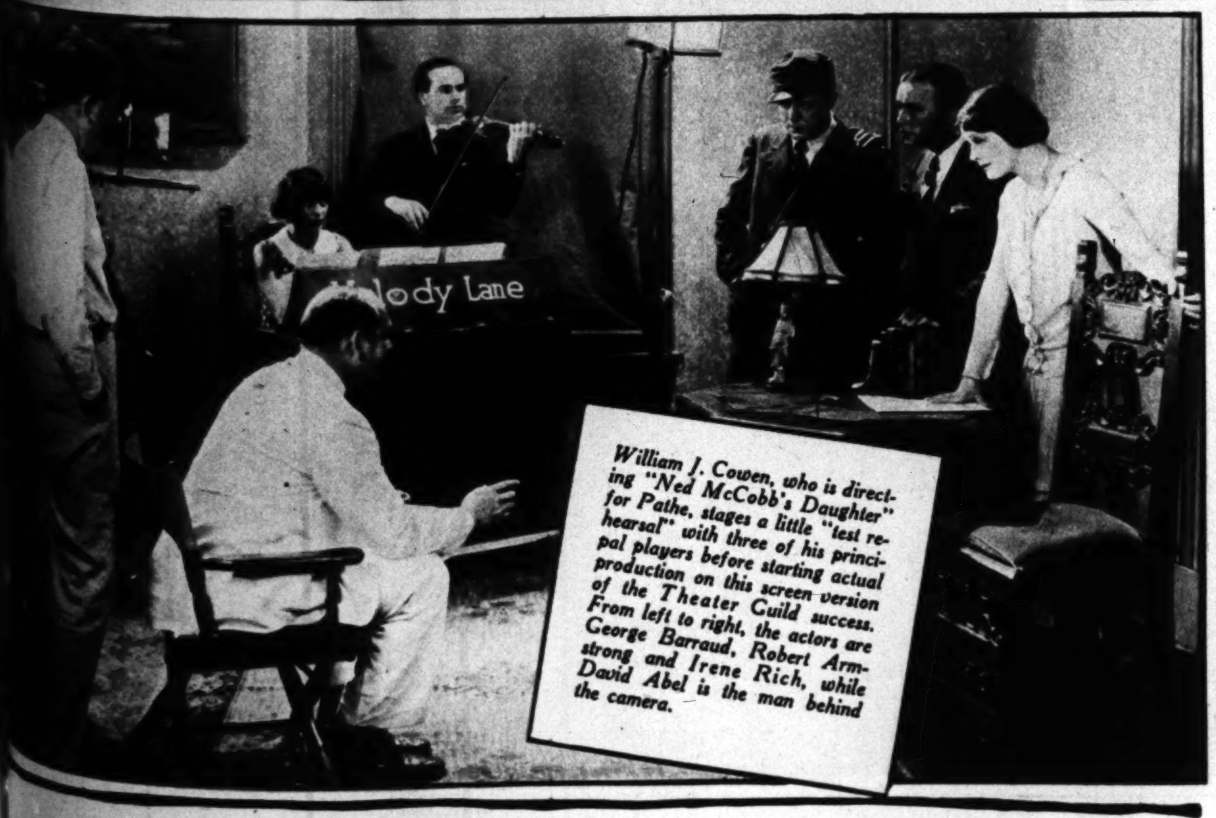
Before leaving Hall, mention must be made of two of his scenes. They are the high spots in entertainment value of the entire picture. Both are identically the same in action—Hall, ecstatically intoxicated, knocks at the cabin-door of the bridegroom, Harrison Ford, and upon its being opened falls crashingly into the room, with a wondrous beatific smile hovering over his features. The effect has been achieved so skilfully, by use of the camera shooting upward, and Hall toppling down upon it, that the scene is almost inspirational.

Ivy Harris and Harrison Ford are the bride and groom, and William Austin is Percy Jones, to whom Ruth Taylor is affianced. Lila Lee has been transformed into a fascinating French vamp, and it is her pursuit of Austin, as the man who threw her over, that contributes to the cause of much of the plot.

Tom Ricketts, Arthur Hoyt, Maude Turner Austin, Wade Boteler and Mario Carillo are others in a well-conceived cast.

"Just Married," palatable as entertainment and not to be taken at all seriously, was adapted by Frank Butler and Gilbert Pratt from the Anne Nichols' stage success. While some of the zest of the dialogue has necessarily been lost, the picture does not suffer overly from this fault and in the main is very acceptable divertissement. It is a Paramount production.

YOU'LL NEVER SEE IT



William J. Cowen, who is directing "Ned McCobb's Daughter" for Pathe, stages a little "test rehearsal" with three of his principal players before starting actual production on this screen version of the Theater Guild success. From left to right, the actors are George Barraud, Robert Armstrong and Irene Rich, while David Abel is the man behind the camera.

The TRIPLE THREAT

THREE ominous warnings signal the approach of age, and show that tire and time are beginning to destroy a woman's loveliness. The three threats are these: a drooping of the underchin, a crêpiness of throat, and a deepening of wrinkles at the corners of eyes and mouth.

It was Dorothy Gray who discovered how the years put their first marks on throat and chin and eye, and how—still more swiftly—neglect will leave these same marks, so that even a young woman looks middle-aged if she neglects her skin. This is all so needless.

If you would retain—or regain—the youthful charm of clean-cut chinline and smooth, fresh skin, follow the simple scientific treatments which Dorothy Gray evolved.

These treatments are readily available to Los Angeles women at the charming Dorothy Gray salon, 3301 Wilshire Boulevard. Please telephone Drexel 3203 for appointments. Here, and at leading Los Angeles shops, you may obtain the exquisite Dorothy Gray preparations for your home use.

POUDRE
Ybry

FROM Paris, city of lovely women, Ybry sends you his latest creation, Poudre Ybry, to take its place with his ravishing Parfums Ybry, which already are established as firmly with the discriminating women of America as with fair Parisiennes.

Not just a new poudre, but a different poudre—a real French poudre representing months—years—of experiments in Paris to find a poudre that would not only beautify but benefit the skin as well. The softest, smoothest poudre imaginable—and fragrant. Oh! so fragrant—perfumed with Ybry's tantalizing Femme de Paris.

Poudre Ybry is not for every woman—naturally. It has been created solely for those women who exult in the feel of silk next their bodies, who love the caress of rich furs, and who consider the price—five dollars—insignificant for such a jewel among toiletries.

Poudre Ybry is presented in a beautiful green and gold [illegible] [illegible] chest containing a genuine down puff. The Poudre is protected by a crystal-like cover so that Madame may select for herself that of the six exquisite tints which best blends with her personality.

Most of the better stores have received Poudre Ybry. If your dealer has not yet been supplied, you may obtain it by writing YBRY, Inc.—[illegible] Fifth Ave., New York.

WHAT! MORE PARTIES!
Yea, Brothers, TWO of THEM!

Edna Murphy has been working so constantly of late that her husband, Mervyn LeRoy, scarcely ever sees her. Incidentally, Edna has gone in for sophisticated roles.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

"THESE surprise parties are compulsory for the victim, aren't they?" smiled Stella, as we, Stella, John Davidson, Price Dunlavey and I, stepped into Price's car to go over to Chester Franklin's house, where his lovely wife, Mildred, was giving a birthday surprise party. "No matter whether you feel in a partying mood or not, if somebody gives you a party, why there you are."

"Yes, but after all, when you're given a surprise party you don't have to feel responsible," remarked John. "If you aren't dressed, it isn't your fault. The parties of the first part just have to give the parties of the second part a good time, that's all. Besides," he went on, "all Mrs. Franklin's parties are sure to be nice."

WE FOUND Chester simply beaming. He didn't say much, but we knew he was delighted. He tramped miles about those big rooms of his beautiful Beverly Hills home, seeing to it that everybody had a good time. "Oh, but you know it's Eph Asher's birthday, too," declared Mildred. "So it's a double surprise."

Mildred had had a terrible time keeping Chet away from home that day, so that she could prepare for the party. Jerry Fleming took him swimming and squash playing, all afternoon.

"Why, I was so nearly worn out that it's a wonder I'm not falling fast asleep right among my guests," remarked Chet.

THE HOUSE is a Spanish and Italian place, done in charming taste throughout, and all the large living rooms were crowded with guests.

Edna Murphy and Mervyn LeRoy were almost the first guests to whom we said hello. This was Edna's first party in a long while, she has been working so hard—sometimes in two pictures at a time.

"I hardly ever see Edna any more," declared Mervyn, ruefully. "Once in a while I catch a glimpse of her, and then I call out to her, 'Hello! Do you remember me? I'm the guy you married!'"

"IT'S a regular producers' and directors' convention here, isn't it?" remarked Stella.

Paul Sloane and his wife were on hand, Paul having just come back from New York, where he studied the making of the talkies, and is, we hear, shortly to start work directing them here.

Lillian Asher, of course, was with Eph, and there were Ward Lascelle and his wife, Charles and Mrs. Dorian, Leah Baird and Arthur Beck, Richard Wallace and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Al Rockett, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Cohen, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Miranda, Rosa Roma, Ned Marin and his wife, William and Ella Wickersham, M. H. Hoffman and his wife, Ruth Pickard, Juanita Valentine, Doris Arbuckle, Christine Francis, Mr. and Mrs. Scott Darling, D. Nadel, William Menzies, Mr. and Mrs. J. Freeman.

Ona Brown, who recently announced her engagement to Harvey Barnes, was there with her fiance, looking very pretty.

ROBERT EDESON came with his wife. Mrs. Edeson has lately been getting very slim, and she looked charming.

Mabel Normand came with Lew Cody, Mabel looking lovely in a black lace gown over white. Kathleen Clifford was with her husband, Meo Illitch; and there were Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Breese.

A charming bride was Mrs. Leon Navara, daughter of M. H. Hoffman, who was wed lately in New York, with the couple visiting her parents here.

I told Mrs. Al Rockett that I never recognized her because she always was wearing a new frock, but she said not to let her husband hear me.

BOTH Chester Franklin and Eph Asher were presented by Mildred with a tiny cake apiece, on which was a single candle. Mildred and Chester blew out the candle on Chet's cake and made a wish, while Eph and Lillian Asher did the same. A huge cake was brought in later, cut and sampled by the guests.

Rugs were cleared from the floor of the big living-room, and there was dancing to the radio, after which there was music, with Eva Olivetta giving a number of songs in a clear, charming voice, Price Dunlavey playing the piano.

Later there arrived the Russian musicians, including Michael Vavitch, who sang "The Volga Boatman" and other songs in that deep, splendid voice of his.

Everybody left at a very late hour, long after Chet's birthday had officially closed, and everybody declaring himself and herself completely happy.

IF YOU want to enjoy a thoroughly atmospheric Russian place, with the atmosphere realistic instead of in the tenuous form of bizarre paintings and an old pair of Western Costume Company's costumes on a couple of near-Russians who are serving as waiters, go over to the picturesque and vitally interesting cafe of the Russian Art Club in Hollywood.

Here General Lodijensky, Nina Macklineff and Prince David Mir of Russia, who works sometimes in pictures, and the rest of the time appears at the cafe, will greet you.

Stella and I went over there with John Roche, Jack Winslow, theatrical man, and Newell Vanderhoff to dine, the other night. John has just come back from a trip to Europe, and has a lot of interesting things to tell of the Russian aristocrats in Paris; for instance, how they don't in the least know how to be poor, but sell one jewel at a time and live sumptuously on its proceeds until the money has vanished.

YOU VIEW walls with bizarre paintings in vivid colors, long tables meagerly but tastefully decorated with flowers, a piano, groups of Russian artists chattering in their native tongue.

But back of it all the big story looms.

Any Russian who has no money and no home may come here and live, free of cost for a certain length of time, the only provision being that he aid in the cafe service in some way—waiting on table, decorating the rooms, arranging flowers, singing in the concerts, even washing the dishes, all according to his talents. It is related that more than one Russian nobleman banished to Hollywood has washed dishes in the Art Club's sinks.

UPSTAIRS are dormitories where homeless or temporarily moneyless Russians may sleep, the women in one big dormitory, the men in the other.

There are big gardens about the place, and some of the Russians care for them.

"Russian communism seems to work better among the aristocrats and artists away from home than it does among the proletariat in Russia," remarked John.

WE HEARD the harmony of rich voices somewhere in the rooms above. "Thursday and Saturday evenings usually are devoted to concerts, which are given in the big grounds, with various Russian artists donating their services," Prince David remarked to us, as we asked whence the music came. "The performers are holding a rehearsal upstairs now."

Jan Rubini, recently divorced, was there with a pretty Russian girl. He was a picturesque figure, as he sat near the gaily draped grand piano, clad in his black velvet jacket and with his handsome head seen with picturesque dimness through the smoke of his cigarette.

All the noted artists of the Russian colony dine here often, we learned, including Theodore Kosloff, Simeon Gest, and a dozen others.

THE Russian food is excellent, one intriguing dish, called shashlik, being made up of bits of beefsteak, pinioned one after the other in a row on a sword and roasted, with a decorative tomato at the tip. And there is an excellent Russian soup, in which you place a "plop" of sour cream, and there are a salad and an apple cake with tea or coffee in tall glasses.

There is such an air of charming, quiet gaiety, enhanced by the bright draperies and wall decorations, and the naturally easy manners of the Russians—not to mention the gay chatter about the place—that I'm sure it will soon have a hectic vogue.

"Maybe then it won't be so delightful, though," remarked Stella.

"Yes, we are surely all Russians tonight," remarked John, "even though we do turn back into shanty Irish tomorrow!"

Pinaud
CREAM
CREAM

Now you can get this amazing New Cream—the Cream that washes away—in gay green and silver TUBES . . as well as in those exquisite crystal jars! Now you can have it with you everywhere—camp or business office, train or steamer—in this immensely convenient Tube!

SHE was leaving for China and she asked us "can't you pack enough Pinaud's Cream to last me eighteen months—in easy-to-carry tubes?"

Two days later another woman came to us before she sailed and begged for enough Cream in portable tube form to take her through the London season.

Two out of hundreds of similar requests!

So—to satisfy these urgent wishes—we have placed Pinaud's Cream in leading drug and department stores in tubes, specially designed for travelling convenience—as well as in the charming jars of sea-green crystal Pinaud users love so well.

And it is no wonder women who have experienced the magic of Pinaud's Cream feel they cannot do without it, even for a weekend. For it takes only a brief half-minute with this amazing new preparation to cleanse your skin more perfectly than ever before—tone it healthfully—supple it exquisitely—make it ready for powder!

Just smooth it on . . . then wash it off.

The very first second it touches your face Pinaud's Cream collects all the day's dust and powder from the pores—"floats" them to the surface like a magic magnet.

Then—clear, cool water—and both cream and dirt melt swiftly away!

How much pleasanter and easier it is, too—washing the cream away—instead of the usual messy, sticky, incomplete wiping process!

And how much more effective—for as Pinaud's Cream sweeps away it carries with it all the dirt and grime it has collected. And it never leaves behind in the skin a single trace of waxy, fatty sediment, treacherously coarsening pores, encouraging blackheads and actually aging the skin—as dermatologists point out creams usually do!

Now, too, remember you need no astringent—and no powder base!

For in the very same swift half-minute this scientific cleansing takes, Pinaud's Cream is also toning and suppling your skin.

Causing the blood to course youthfully through the blood vessels just under the surface, sweeping away impurities, vitalizing, nourishing. Till your skin glows with a delightful flowerlike bloom!

Perfectly cleansed and invigorated, the pores close of themselves—you need no other astringent.

And the delicate oils of Pinaud's Cream supple the skin tissues to fresh young elasticity—perfectly, naturally! For they resemble more closely the fine natural oils of the skin itself than any that have ever been used in a cream before.

Not a trace of greasiness—yet powder clings marvelously to the new silken softness of your skin! You need no other "base."

Here is a Cream that is Cleanser, Astringent and Powder Base in one! A Cream that each time you use it leaves your skin clearer, fresher, finer-textured, more youthfully radiant!

Pinaud, Paris and New York: Makers of French toilet preparations for more than one hundred and fifty years

APPLY Pinaud's Cream lightly with the finger-tips. You need not rub it in with the strenuous, stretching motion used with other creams. Now you can actually FEEL this amazing Cream at work, cleansing the pores, toning the tissues! Next—instead of trying to wipe it off as one usually does—you are going to WASH Pinaud's Cream away—easily, quickly, delightfully!

then take a pad of cotton wet in cool water—or a soft washcloth thoroughly wet—and pat your face. Immediately the cream "lets go"—actually washes away! Sweeping with it all the dirt it has collected. Now you need no astringent! Perfectly cleansed, the pores close naturally. No "base"! Now powder clings to your cheek as smoothly as the peach-bloom to the peach!

THE first few times you use Pinaud's Cream—if your skin is suffering from deep-lying accumulations—you can actually feel its wonderful cleansing power. Feel a faint tingling as the clogging dirt is gently drawn from the pores—and then a delightful new radiant freshness! Yet, despite the marvelously thorough cleansing it gives, Pinaud's Cream has so soothing an effect that famous New York and Chicago hospital specialists are using it today to cleanse and protect the skin of day-old babies. They are prescribing it today for women whose skins are so tender that they demand a doctor's care!

NOW the thousands upon thousands of devoted Pinaud users can have this amazing Cream with them everywhere—on steamer, train, motor-trip, at summer camp and business office—in the new conveniently portable Tube! Especially important is this now, in this season of travelling and heat, when the refreshing and cleansing power of Pinaud's Cream is more than ever indispensable! And the triangular shape of the smart box that holds this new tube makes it particularly easy to pack. It slips neatly into a corner of the suitcase after everything else is in. Easy, too, to remove and return when you wish to freshen up during the journey. Take it with you on your next weekend trip! . . . At leading drug and department stores.

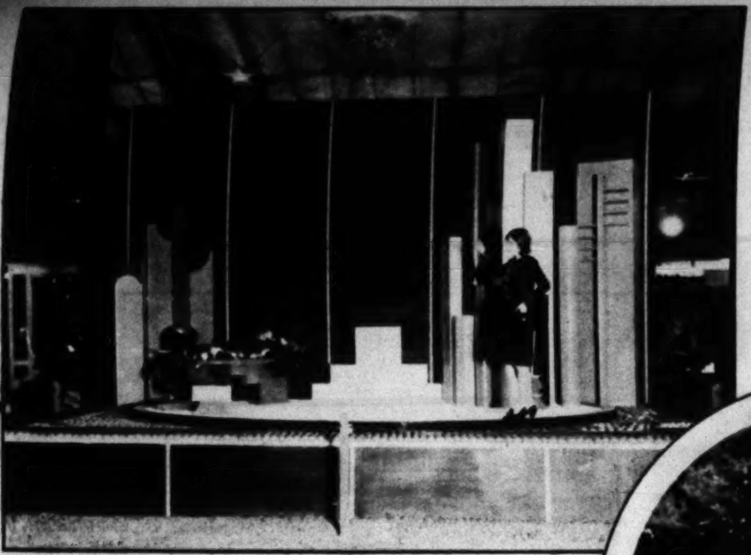
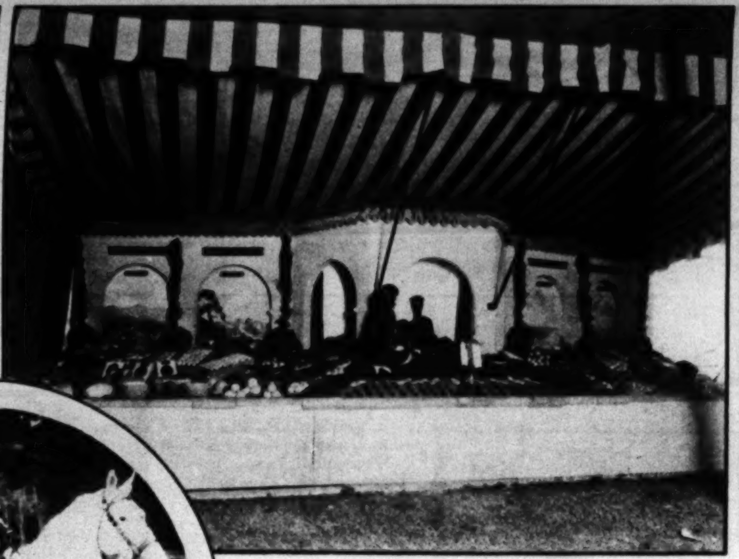
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA FAIR, RIVERSIDE~SEPT 25~30

A Few "Beauty Spots" at Various Southland Fairs



Oxnard is a community that is firmly convinced it has a future, and Jack Miller, secretary of the Oxnard Chamber of Commerce, hit upon this "futuristic" display as a happy way of acknowledging the fact. Just what the "doodads" mean, deponent sayeth not, but the exhibit itself was adjudged "most original, novel and attractive display" at Ventura County's fair.



Ventura County's display at its own fair classic. It was the same artistic exhibit that attracted so much attention at the State Fair.

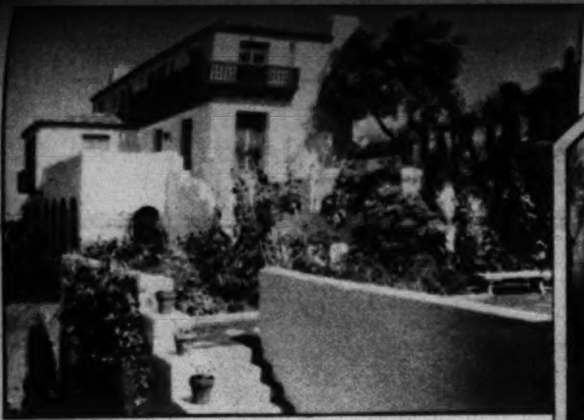
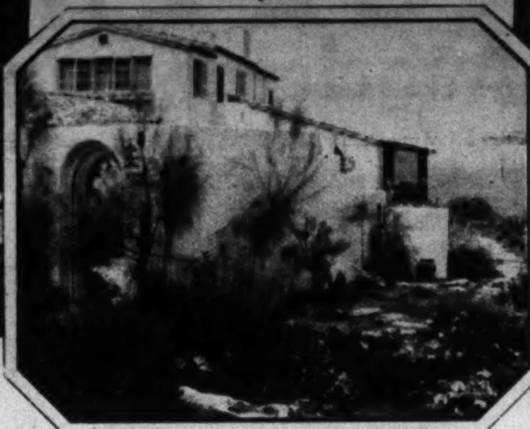
Harmony Follows in the Landscape Gardener's Trail

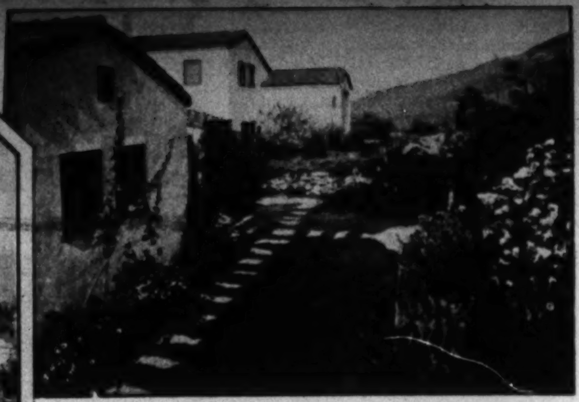
By Frances Duncan



Beautifully fitted into the landscape is the W. M. Sutherland house at Palos Verdes. The terraces are bright with hollyhocks, oleanders, California poppies and zinnias, and young cypresses harmonize with the lines of the Via Horquilla walls. The olive tree at the corner is especially charming.

Below—The Misses Reynolds' garden overlooks the ocean. Stepping-stones, cleverly used, make a winding way among the plants; bright-colored pelargoniums are much in evidence. The trees against the wall are Casuaria equisetifolia.





At the residence of J. C. Low, Palos Verdes. The line of the roof harmonizes with the line of the bare hill; in harmony with it, also, is the rough retaining wall of dry stone. The planting is simple—hollyhocks and asters against the house and phlox paniculata against the wall. Stepping-stones in the grass are a sufficient path.

GARDENING is like many other arts; it seems exceedingly simple to one who watches the work—a plant here, a plant there—anyone could do that. So, painting is nothing but the putting of color on canvas, but who does it, and just how it's done make a deal of difference in the result. Too often the landscape gardener, like the physician, is never called in until the patient is in a bad way, and the relatives feel actual alarm. So many a man doesn't realize that a landscape gardener's advice would be worth while until he has made his mistakes and gotten his place to look as he wishes it didn't. It's rarely that a landscape gardener has a free hand in a small place—usually the position of the house on the site, the placing of the garage and other important matters have been decided before he has a chance at it; still less often is it that the landscape gardener may be a factor in the planning of a subdivision.

How very lovely a development can be when an able landscape gardener has a fairly free hand is shown in many sections of Southern California. One of many is found at Palos Verdes where, under skilful direction so delightful a community planting is being accomplished that the Italian Riviera may look to its laurels. One has an impression of tiled roofs, lovely in line, against a background of hill and mountain, of charming little dwellings, half-hidden in eucalyptus trees, of bright gardens overlooking the intense blue of the Pacific—as blue as ever the Aegean was—of splendid roads winding leisurely and cleverly among the hills, following the contours in a most sympathetic adaptation to Madame Nature's mood.

Roads are always worth study. The Palos Verdes' artist is a past master in the art of designing a suitable and becoming costume for Madame Nature, of fitting both her mood and the occasion. With roads and drives, with trees, and plants, and gardens, and houses, he evolves a lovely and harmonious ensemble. Her draperies have always delightful lines, her beauty and individual charm enhanced. Never does he put our worthy mother's pliant and graceful form into the stiff architectural corset of the checkerboard subdivision. His roads always conform to the contour of the landscape.

At Palos Verdes, the roads are especially interesting. In the first place, they are unobtrusive—they follow the lines of the hills so skilfully that they seem to have "just happened"; also, they are arranged so that in driving, one has a constantly varied view; the planting is anything but monotonous, as if it also had been but a fortunate happening. One hopes that when our great landscape gardeners pass on to their reward, they will find pleasant employment in making drives about the Delectable Mountains as well as in planting trees—California trees, of course—along the streets of the New Jerusalem.

Aside from the well-designed roads and well-placed buildings, the whole wide acreage is unvexed by telephone poles or billboards; the dwellings are placed not only in harmony with the landscape, but with each other; one man's house does not mar another man's outlook; the playgrounds have charming border plantings; for the whole is supervised by an art commission.

Evidently the intention is to keep Palos Verdes largely a residence section. The community is carefully zoned and districts for the needful business houses are provided. For the convenience of the citizens, there is a nursery; there is also landscape service and assistance for those who desire it. And so charming has been the work about Palos Verdes that one would think no citizen would miss the advice which, so evidently, is of value.

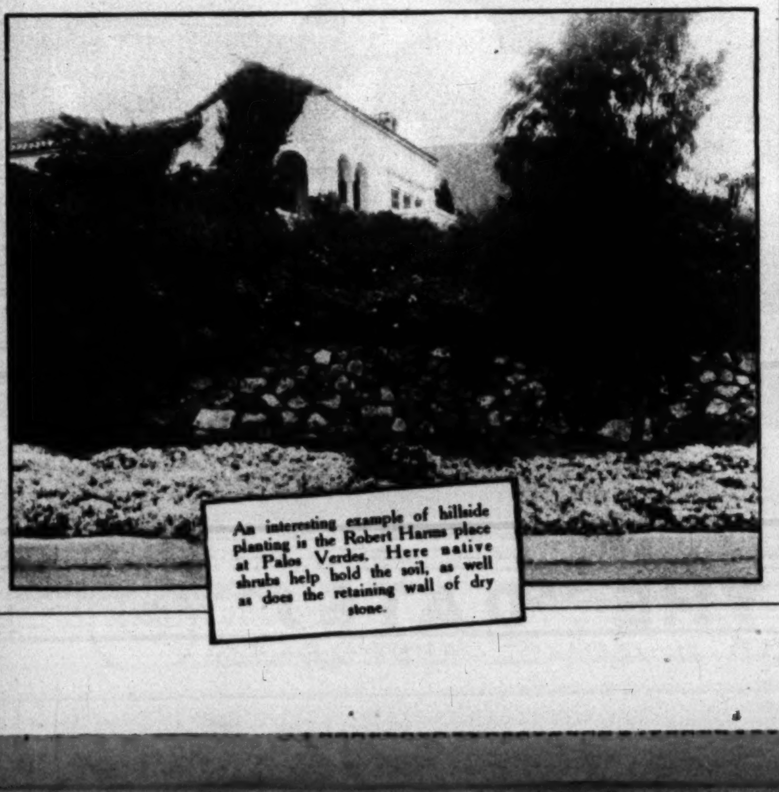
As to the planting, one notices the abundant use of statice, the sea lavender, which is always in fine form near the seashore; there are banks which are covered with nasturtium, convolvulus Mauretanica, California poppy and verbena. There have been many plantings of the native shrubs and trees which grow well in the vicinity of the sea. In the more sheltered spots are Hollyhocks, phlox, and many of the old-fashioned flowers. There are plantings of native trees, various eucalypts, tamarisks, Torrey pines, and many others. The place is still in the making and many of the plantings, lovely as they are, are new.

The friendly cooperation of an art commission is an immense help in any community even if the commission has not anything like Olympian power. The "Plans and Planting" Commission of Santa Barbara, where anyone may go for advice, has been of great service to that city. Any garden club might have its "first-aid" committee, and the town would profit greatly.

Bellflower's First Show

Bellflower's first flower show, held September 7 and 8, was "some show." Bellflower is a little place, but many a municipality ten times her size would have taken pride in so gorgeous a display. The dahlias especially were great, splendid beauties in brilliant color, and besides these were nursery displays and potted plants, and F. L. Ziegler, who was a notable prize winner and had much to do with the success of the show, exhibited a complete wedding decoration, altar and all, which was very effective. All that was lacking was bride and groom and clergyman. Splendid tiger lilies played an important part in the decoration—possibly quite appropriate in an up-to-date wedding. Mr. Ziegler took another prize for his lilies, also for his nursery display, for potted plants, and for many other displays. Mrs. E. M. McDonald exhibited magnificent "Jersey Beauty" dahlias and won three firsts and two second prizes. John W. Eierman, another of Bellflower's notable gardeners, exhibited rarely beautiful dahlias, and won several prizes, chiefly for "Flaming Meteor" and for his pompons. Elmer Klamath's dahlias attracted much attention. There were also Transvaal daisies, roses, and many displays of garden flowers. In fact, many folk had no idea, until they saw the show, how large Bellflower loomed horticulturally.

One pleasant aspect of this show was that the whole town gave such cordial cooperation. Besides the ribbons, which are, in a way, empty glory, the various merchants of the town contributed. No less than thirteen cups were awarded and the prizes ran from gallons of gasoline, and orders on hardware and grocery stores, to "hen and rooster," which were the prize for one item. Two ducks were another award, there were bowls of goldfish, orders for dahlia tubers; the two banks contributed cups. Sometimes a bank will fall into the line so pleasantly indicated, and offer a savings bank deposit as an award. Tangible booty is a right pleasant thing to bring home.



An interesting example of hillside planting is the Robert Harms place at Palos Verdes. Here native shrubs help hold the soil, as well as does the retaining wall of dry stone.

It's a Colorful Industry, Dahlia Growing

This Royal Flower Is Seen at Its Best in Southern California, and Here Many Men and Women Have Achieved Pecuniary and Artistic Rewards From the Development of Its Many Forms

By Frances Duncan

JUDGING from the tremendous increase in whole flower industry, it looks as if Angelenos and other Californians were following the advices of old Omar who ranked the white hyacinth among the necessities. The great increase in the use of flowers, the fact that folk are coming to consider the beauty and the joyousness they bring as an actual necessity of daily life, is one of the most refreshing signs of the times.

In fact, anyone who is worried about "what we are coming to," should go about a bit among the flower growers. He will see tiny holdings fairly crowded with beauty—flowers from the highway to the back fence; he will find, very likely, unpretentious houses and simplicity of living, but the beloved dahlias will be having every luxury. No Holland bulb grower of the seventeenth century, when the tulip growing was of intensest interest, gave more wholehearted devotion to his bulbs than the California dahlia grower gives to his dahlias today.

It is this intense interest, the passion of the artist for his work, that has made the California dahlia grower stand high in horticultural achievement. Under skillful fingers and fostered by unremitting care, our new and rarely beautiful varieties have been developed. It is safe to say that no State in the Union equals California in the bulk of its flower farming.

From Santa Maria to those at Encinitas, as one goes about among the dahlia growers at Bell, at Bellflower, at Gardena, Palms, and in the outskirts of Los Angeles, the delightful infectiousness of the business is always noticeable. Just as when one nears the seacoast before a glimpse of the ocean may be had, one gets a whiff of the salt air, so before reaching a dahlia farm, one notices dooryard after dooryard filled with the splendid blooms, hedges of them, beds of them—some brightening poorest houses, some gracing with dignity the most ornate and palatial dwellings. It is one of California's happiest industries.

Among the pioneers in dahlia growing are Carl Salbach of Berkeley, Alex Waldie, Jessie Seals and Bessie Boston of San Francisco, Mrs. Minnie Barker of Bell, J. J. Brownall of Eagle Rock, L. Swisher and R. C. Hayes of Los Angeles.

WOMEN DAHLIA GROWERS

As in many branches of floriculture today, in dahlia growing the ladies have taken a prominént place. Any account of women's work which fails to take cognizance of the achievements in horticulture of Jessie Seals, of Bessie Boston, of Mrs. Minnie Barker, would be pitifully incomplete. These women have done fine and highful skillful work. Aside from accomplishment by women alone, it would be hard to find among the noted dahlia growers one who has not been splendidly seconded by his wife, whether the growing be on a small or a large scale. A stalwart dahlia grower of San Gabriel, arranging his exhibit at the fair, lamented: "If the Missus was here she'd fix it O. K. in a minute!" Said R. C. Hayes, when complimented on his beautiful basket: "Mrs. Hayes arranged it." And this is no mere chivalry. I do not believe there is one industry in which the women work side by side so interestedly, so whole-heartedly and so competently with their men as in the growing of flowers, and it seems to be especially the case with dahlias. With many of the successful firms, the business has been begun by the wife and after she has proved it a success, he has gone into it with her. Thus Bessie Boston, whose husband was a salesman, made more money at home with her dahlias than he did "on the road." Mrs. McDonald of Bellflower did truck gardening with her husband but found the matter of livelihood difficult, started growing dahlias herself, for the fun of it, and presently began selling. Now on their two acres the dahlia reigns supreme, the vegetables having been completely dispossessed. The Ruckle family of Baldwin Park were in the poultry business, but Mrs. Ruckle wearied of the drab outlook—gravel wash and poultry houses—so her husband ploughed a strip of land on the highway, and she planted dahlias; selling followed shortly. The R. & B. Dahlia Gardens at Bell (Rupets and Barnwasser) is a family affair, the Barnwassers being daughter and son-in-law. Charles Barnwasser started with thirteen dahlia roots. These grew and prospered, and then began the raising of seedlings, and the setting out of other tubers from these first. Unlike many growers, the Barnwassers went through no noviate as amateurs, but studied the subject carefully and embarked successfully in the enterprise. So did the Vernons of the Alessandro Gardens—Gladys and Charles Vernon—whose gardens make a gorgeous spot of color in a rather unkempt district of Los Angeles where development at present is at the awkward age; but the tall eucalypti make a charming frame and the steep hillside is gorgeous with color.

The growing of dahlias commercially is one thing and requires one sort of talent; the developing of new varieties is another matter. Sometimes the commercial dahlia grower whose attention is centered on fitting his product to the market is able also to develop a fascinating new variety. Here is the unending lure of the new seedling, for seedling dahlias are produced with comparative ease and it is vastly interesting to watch the new plants and see what will happen. The selection of which seedling to push and which to let go into oblivion requires a deal of genuine wisdom. There are so many points to consider—the placing of the flower on the stem, the strength of the stem, which has to do with the carriage of the flower and whether it holds its head erect. The "Natalie Kingston," for instance, which has a magnificent yellow head, droops slightly. It's an admirable flower for decoration, if one can manage to give support to its head, and it is excellent under artificial light. Another point is whether the center of the flower is exactly in the center.

It happens often that those who have made genuine contributions to the culture and development of the dahlia have not large plantations. George V. Warren of Santa Maria, for instance, who has developed many fine sorts has little more than a backyard garden. It is for this reason—that much experimenting can be done in a comparatively small space—that experienced dahlia growers are looking with especial interest at the work of California's skilled amateurs. The amateurs, who is growing the plant for the fun of it, with its culture wholly dissociated from bread and butter, can afford to experiment endlessly, can give the tryouts which are necessary before one can be sure the character of the flower is fixed. It is for this reason that commercial growers were interested in the seedlings of Mrs. Buxton of Santa Monica, and in Peter Tarabino's splendid yellow seedling of a markedly individual type and habit.

Lovell Swisher, Jr., whose garden in Los Angeles is just now like a piece of rich tapestry with the soft green of deodars for a border, has originated some excellent varieties and always has a new seedling. His experimental garden is full of interest to the connoisseur and a joy to the eyes for the most unlearned.

J. J. Broomall of Eagle Rock has originated many fine varieties. "Grandola," which made quite a hit and attracted much notice in 1927, was his, and his "Golden West"—a deep yellow cactus dahlia which varies quite delightfully—has had much popularity. Mr. Broomall is one of the pioneer dahlia growers. Mrs. Minnie Barker of Cudahy has been exceedingly successful and has great skill as a hybridist; her new dahlias are almost invariably a "safe bet" for the commercial grower. "Flaming Meteor," which has been so in demand this summer since the Pacific Southwest Exposition adopted it as its official flower, is hers. And the flower is well worth the attention it has gained, for it is strong growing, with a fine stem and good keeping qualities and in color a brilliant flame-color tinged with scarlet; the dark velvety red "Inkyo" is hers; so is "Exquisite" which is a lovely thing, rose and cream color—a hybrid cactus of fine form. "Mrs. Barker," says a fellow dahlia grower, "keeps always a jump ahead of us. Just as I have something I think is mighty fine, she's likely to show some flower just a bit better."

DAHLIAS AND DERRICKS

The Seamans, Charles and C. J., have been long associated with dahlia growing and some fine dahlias have come from the colorful acres of the Advance Dahlia Gardens at Gardena, though, instead of trees in the distance are oil derricks of an industry far less lovely to look on. The soil in these outlying districts of Los Angeles, Bell, Bellflower, Gardena, Compton, seems well adapted to the growing of dahlias. Mrs. McDonald of Bellflower doesn't believe in giving too much fertilizer although her flowers are of splendid size. She says too much fertilizer damages the tuber—and she wants her tubers. John W. Eierman, another grower of Bellflower, a Latvian by birth, took to growing dahlias after the war and thinks the soil at Bellflower especially good for the purpose. He grows his dahlias between and under young fruit trees and has some particularly fine pompons in which he is much interested.

R. C. Hayes, one of the most expert of the California growers, has a beautiful setting for his garden, which is in the residential district of Los Angeles. The foliage of oaks, eucalypti and pepper trees set off to best advantage the wealth of color which the dahlias spread before them.

The culture of the dahlia is simple. Good rich soil, very well dug, for the dahlia roots go deep. This is an essential—the resolute pinching off of extra buds, if one would have the flowers of great size. Plenty of water is needed during the flowering season. A four hours run of water from the hose into the trench between the plants is none too much.

There is great fun for the amateur in the growing of dahlias from seed, which should be started in February in flats in the lath house or greenhouse. But for certain production of the flower which one has seen and admired, the tuber is the thing, and this fact is at once the joy and the despair of the dahlia grower. For he develops a beautiful seedling, much admired, dearly beloved and consequently longed for; he waits three years to make sure of it. Then he divides his precious tuber, getting perhaps three or four; divides again—the process is slow. And it happens sometimes, that while he is doing this, some one who has one tuber makes green cuttings of the precious dahlia. The green cutting is an exceeding rapid way of multiplying the plant, but the plants don't make good tubers, though one may get handsome blooms therefrom.

One of the charms of dahlia growing is that one may do so much in so small a space. Not all the well-known hybridists have large acreage. Sometimes an exhibit that looms large at the show may have

Ventura County Fair Sustains High Standards of Past Years

VENTURA.—Little Fillmore made a bold and successful bid for honors at the recent Ventura County Fair by competing out of its class in the community center division of the feature display section and capturing first award in "Group A," comprising, or supposed to comprise, communities of five thousand population or over. Fillmore is a growing place, but it hasn't "made the grade" to any such extent as that in so far as population goes. The lists were open, however, and Fillmore was so sure it had a winner that it decided to "pass up" the "Group B" class for small communities and fight things out with the big fellows. The little community's exhibit was in the form of an Eiffel tower of citrus fruits.

Santa Paula took second place in Group A, with a varied display of products arranged under an arbor of kaffir corn and in front of a painted setting. Oxnard was third with what was undoubtedly as unique a display as has ever been seen at a Southern California fair. Oxnard admits without the bat of an eye that it has a future as well as a past, and the youthful secretary of its chamber of commerce, Jack Miller, conceived the idea that a "futuristic" exhibit would put over the idea. One thing is certain—the fair crowds looked and marveled. "Cubist" was the way most visitors described the strange arrangement of blocks, cylinders and other odd-shaped pieces of wood that formed the setting for a small but select collection of products of the soil, but the judges promptly proclaimed the display the "most original, novel and attractive" of the fair and gave it a special award. Fourth place in this class was taken by Ventura with a notable display of fine lemons.

In Group B, for small communities, Camarillo was first with an old California house with grape arbor and pergola. Simi took second with a small but beautiful display seen through a picture frame. Saticoy was third and Piru, fourth. Awards for exhibits by outside counties went to San Bernardino and Riverside counties in that order. First for lemon feature display was taken by the Powers Ranch, Ventura, second going to the Limoneira Ranch, Santa Paula. The Powers Ranch also captured first for commercial pack of lemons. The prize for best orchard display of avocados went to C. J. Dally, Camarillo, with second going to A. J. Borchard, Oxnard.

The fair offered its usual complete display of tractors and the various tools used in Southern California's orchards and fields, the "machinery" department this year occupying nearly half of one huge tent. The automobile show would have been a credit to a much larger fair and the showing in the women's department was up to the Ventura fair's high standards. Ventura's annual classic has also become known for its excellent racing programs, and lovers of horses were not only delighted but thrilled by the contests on the track, in the rodeo ring and at the night horse shows. Stock, poultry and rabbit shows were well filled and brought out keen competition.

The fair of 1928 opened on Wednesday, September 12, and continued through the following Sunday.

THE POULTRY SHOW

The Ventura County Fair's poultry, pigeon and rabbit shows attracted entries from many leading breeders of California and, although not large by comparison with those of the more populous counties, brought out quality stock. Poultry specimens, including chickens, turkeys and geese, numbered over 500, and some fifty pigeons were on display. Rabbits numbered about 500. Many winners from the California State Fair at Sacramento, the Orange County Fair and the San Joaquin County Fair at Stockton were entered.

The poultry judging was in the hands of William Wise of Santa Ana; rabbits were judged by James Jenkins, C. S. Gibson and Lewis M. Salisbury; pigeons were passed upon by Andrew Stodel. C. S. Gibson was manager and J. W. Woodford, superintendent, of the department.

Notable poultry exhibits included those of the Blanchard Wyandotte Farm of Santa Cruz, showing eight varieties of this breed;

CHAFFEY.—A recent report issued by the Chaffey Squab Breeding station showed Pen No. 14, Carneaux entered by the Palmetto Pigeon Plant of Sumter, S. C., to be the leader for the first six months of the contest, as well as for the month of August, during which month there were eight squabs on the floor, weighing twelve pounds, eight squabs in the nest, and four pairs on eggs. The grain consumption of the pen for the month was seventy-seven pounds, and fifteen pounds of grit. For the six months they laid twenty-nine rounds, or fifty-eight eggs, hatching forty-six squabs, of which they reared thirty-seven, weighing fifty-three pounds, consuming during that period 319 pounds of grain and 75 1-2 pounds of grit.

Second place for the month and to date went to Pen No. 15, White Kings entered by Hoover Bros. of Pomona, with eight squabs, weighing 10 3-4 pounds, four in the nest, and three pairs on eggs for the month. Third place for the month and to date was won by Pen No. 12, consisting of one pair each of Red, Black, and Splash, and two pairs of White Carneaux, entered by a number of owners.

Dairy-improvement associations have grown in number from 120 to 522 in the past eight years, and in number of cows tested from 40,000 to 142,084.

Place for Pigeons

Ontario.—Pigeons raised in Ontario lofts and at Chaffey Union High School are being sent into exciting careers. Ray R. Delhauer, in charge of pigeon station, has sold pigeons to be used in airplane messenger service, for use on ice trucks penetrating distant points in Imperial Valley, and now they are going to sea to help crews on fishing barges. L. W. Holland of San Pedro, a recent visitor at Chaffey, purchased a set of homing pigeons to be taken out on one of his fishing barges. In case of emergency on the barge the pigeons will be released with messages calling for help.

year's burning having been on brush lands. According to Mr. Dunne's reports, 10,788 acres have been burned over to date, with a total loss amounting to $12,947.17. There have been nineteen fires so far this season, a major portion of them having been started by careless smokers.

Fix Olive Prices

Terra Bella.—At a recent gathering of olive growers of Terra Bella district it was decided to hold the crop for sale at $100 per ton because of the shortage of the olive crop in the northern and southern sections of the State. About 500 tons were represented at this meeting, which was called for the purpose of discussing a pool, but ended with the decision to hold the crop at a fixed price. Of the 8800 acres of olives in Tulare county, only 1700 are in the Lindsay Ripe Olive Association, the remainder being dependent on outside buyers. A holdover of 285,000 cases from last year has made the maintenance of prices this season rather difficult, the best offer recorded early in the month in this district being $65 per ton.

To Aid Fire War

Riverside.—Directors of the Riverside-Arlington Fruit Growers' Exchange have agreed to contribute $1 per year for each carload of fruit they ship, to aid in co-operative construction of firebreaks in the San Bernardino Mountains which furnish their supply of irrigating water, for reforestation and the spreading of surplus water. The action was taken at the suggestion of Francis Cuttle, president of the Tri-Counties Reforestation Association. It is expected that the donation of this exchange will annually reach about $4000 for this purpose. Only the fruit produced in localities benefited by the water from the San Bernardino Mountains will be taxed.

They Dodge Muscats

McFarland.—H. L. Heard has been hauling in his raisins from the field and delivering them to the independents at Fresno. He will receive 2 1-4 cents for them, which will, he says, pay expenses. They graded No. 1. He has finished picking forty acres on one of his ranches, and has forty more to pick on the home place, on the Elmo highway. These last are especially fine fruit, due to consistent care and water. Good sulphuring prevented mildew. He has five acres of muscats, but so far has been unable to get pickers for them, as the workers prefer to pick Thompsons. The Muscats can hang on the vines for another month without harm and if they are not picked at the end of that time, they will probably be left on the vines.

[illegible] of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Orchard Magazine is the only farm journal in the West printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

The One-Crop Farm

THE perils of overproduction have been italicised of late, and properly so, for they are very real. They are, it would appear, the natural fruit of every man's desire to excel in some one particular line of production, and to exclude as many other things as possible. California has been advertised as the orange land, and the vision of the snowbound Easterner has usually been of spending his days in peace and prosperity in the shade of his orange grove. As a result the efforts of the great citrus associations have been largely forced to marketing. California has been heralded as a land of small poultry holdings, and nowadays there is a struggle on the part of the small poultrymen to sell their eggs profitably.

These are but two of many examples of the danger that lies in a general adoption of one crop by great numbers of people. The production end of farming is advanced by specialized farms, but it is almost certain to bring about trouble in the market department. If everybody in a district grows spinach or raises rabbits, or plants nothing but fig trees, for example, there is sure to come a time when there will be too much spinach or two many rabbits or figs.

Diversification is not apt to reach a stage where every farmer will be absolutely independent of everybody else, nor is this desirable, for specialized farming has its great advantages, but at the same time, it is wise for the farmer to have more than one iron in his fire—more than one string to his bow. He should not depend, save in special instances—and we are talking bout the average grower—on one crop A disaster in the field or orchard, a sudden drop in the market, and his labor may have gone for nothing.

We hear a lot about advantages of balanced rations for man and beast. We realize the necessity of a balance of the bank account. Why not have a little more balanced agriculture? When all the difficulties of transportation have been solved perfectly, it won't be necessary to grow more than one crop on a farm or in a district, for the surplus can then be shipped to Timbuctoo or Kamchatka or some other corner of the earth where there is a shortage. But until there arrives a golden age when world crop reports and market conditions are wirelessed to every community daily, and when great aerial vessels can fill requirements from ports posted strategically all over the globe, it will be found a safer practice to have a sensible system of diversification.

The man who has grown nothing but peaches or grapefruit might well have an intercrop, in case the grapefruit demand falls shy of expectations. For additional insurance there might be the traditional "cows and chickens." A few baby beeves might help out not a little on tax bills and upkeep. If he's wise he won't be caught napping by unexpected market depressions or crop failures just because he has nothing else save his "specialty" to fall back on. He will be able at least to sell some milk or garden stuff, or turn off a litter of fat pigs to meet emergencies.

There is no business on earth which is so imperiled by too close specialization as farming. There are too many one-crop farmers and too many communities of one-croppers who have found climate and soil suited to the production of some certain thing and who have thought no farther into the situation.

Our Melons in Fiction

THE days have passed when for local interest the novelist had to go to New England and write the B'gosh story or drama. Even the cowboy and the westerns aren't needed to furnish local interest and melodrama. It's the farmer and rancher now, as like as not, who bust into fiction. The Saturday Evening Post has long been stressing Southern California and a recent issue carries a delightful story by Earl Biggers, the hero of which drives a truck laden with melons from Imperial Valley for the breakfast tables of Los Angeles. Long have we known that there was both cash and lusciousness in those Imperial Valley melons, but that there was poetry and drama in them and in hauling them to market not all of us were aware. The heroine of this yarn is a millionairess, but the stalwart, khaki-clad truck-driver does not fall for her; the curtain does not drop with the damsel in his arms. Instead, he steps on the gas, sends on his truck and attends to his proper business—everyone is satisfied, especially the Angelenos waiting for their melons.

Today's Cover Page

The carefully nurtured and cultivated dates which are winning world-wide recognition for the Coachella Valley as a center of date-growing and date-packing, are depicted in today's rotogravure cover page. The bounteous cluster of dates, held in the arms of Miss Helen Lambert, were picked for exhibition at the Southern California fair, which opens in Riverside on September 25, by the Riverside County Farm Bureau representative, H. W. Postlethwaite.

Statistics from terminal live-stock markets for 1927 show that more than 30,000 crippled hogs, weighing 7,000,000 pounds, were sold at one market during the year, most of them being injured before they arrived.

Without good farm land there can be no fat purses for farmers.

Farm News of the Great Southwest

HEMET.—The alfalfa seed crop in the Hemet district this season will be between 700,000 and 750,000 pounds, according to local estimates. Harvest of the crop began the first week in September, a little later than usual, as the seed ripened more slowly than ordinarily. The total alfalfa seed crop in Riverside county this fall will be in the neighborhood of 900,000 pounds, about 100,000 pounds less than that of 1927. Decreased acreage is given as the reason for the lessening of the crop total. Prices for the present crop will probably be good, it is believed here. Two alfalfa seed-cleaning plants are in operation in Hemet.

First Cotton Baled

Tulare.—The first local bale of cotton of the 1928 season was turned out at the Heiskell gin September 4, opening what is expected to prove a record-breaking season in this district. The cotton was grown on the Heitzig and Vetter ranch near Goshen and was the first picked on a 100-acre field. It was officially graded by the government as good middling of 1 1-16 inch staple. In keeping with an age-old custom, the first bale was ginned free of charge and sold for 25 cents per pound, netting the growers $152.74.

To Treat Apples

Yucaipa.—A patented method of treating fruit designed to ward off decay is to be extended to the apple industry this year, one of the packing-houses in the Yucaipa Valley having installed the necessary equipment this year. By the method a thin film of protective nature is put over the fruit. Orange packers have been using the system for some time, it is said.

Dried His Own Peaches

McFarland.—Emerson Root has just finished shipping the last of his dried peaches to Fresno by truck. He had four tons of Lovells, and received 7 cents a pound for them. They were dried on his ranch, south of town. Mr. Root has five acres in Lovells.

Pomona Horse Wins

Pomona.—Carnation Chief, young stallion of the Carnation Farm Stables here, purchased last winter in Kentucky by Manager John Thomas Hook of the Carnation string, won the championship five-gaited stake of $5000 at the California State Fair at Sacramento this year in the face of keen competition beating the five-gaiter San Juan owned by Mrs. Pike, which took second place. Carnation Rosebud of the local stables won blue ribbons in two events at the State fair, and Carnation Lavendula won a $1000 stake in a harness event. Barcarolle of the stables won the $1500 junior stake for five-gaited steppers four years old and under. This horse also won third place in the $5000 championship stake lifted by Carnation Chief. Carnation Chief also won at the Palo Alto Horse Show and Stockton fair recently.

Pepper Harvest On

Talbert.—The chili pepper harvest is under way. Red peppers are developing rapidly, and a good crop is expected. Buyers are in the field and canneries are getting set for the fall campaign. A meeting of the growers of Orange county was recently held here by the pepper growers' department of the farm bureau, at which proper methods of harvesting and washing the pods were explained by State and government specialists

Grows Concord Grapes

Chatsworth.—Although oranges and figs have been major figures in the horticultural industry of this district, grapes are now receiving considerable attention. One of the interesting local enterprises is on the ranch of C. R. Bowell on Devonshre street. Four years ago, realizing that many Southlanders like the American varieties of grapes, Mr. Bowell planted ten acres to concords. This year he has harvested six tons from his vineyard, and expects next year to have a full crop. Practically the entire crop has been sold at retail from the roadside stand on the place, Mr. Bowell says.

Has Own Fig Pack

Cutler.—Gail Hare, fig grower of this district, is marketing his figs under an individual pack, and has built up such a demand for his fruit that he will not be able to supply all the orders received this season. Besides packing figs from his own orchard, he bought from neighboring territory, including Exeter, Porterville and Terra Bella, shipping 1000 crates from the latter point. The figs are shipped out at $1.25 per crate, f.o.b. With the cost of picking and packing estimated at 25 cents per crate, a fair margin of profit was possible, he says.

Boys Attend Fair

Tulare.—J. G. McMillan, head of Tulare Union High School's agricultural department, and four members of his classes attended the recent California State fair at Sacramento. The party stayed at Camp Millard, where accommodations were provided for more than 300 high-school instructors and their classes of students from all sections of the State. They were given the freedom of the grounds during the horse show and races, as well as daily instruction on interesting features of the fair. Local boys making the trip were Ernest [illegible], [illegible] Paxton, Joe Rocha and Richard Bingley.

Breaks All Records

Pomona.—The 1927-28 season's crop of oranges brought [illegible] to the grower-members of the Claremont Citrus association, or $224,000 more than the receipts of the association for any similar period in the thirty-year history. Four hundred and sixty carloads were packed, including 369 Washington navels, eighty-five Velencias, and six of other varieties. Directors and officers re-elected at the recent annual meeting were Charles D. Baker, president; P. L. Bayham, vice-president; H. K. Pitzer, F. W. Ford and L. E. Sheets. F. C. Jacobs is secretary and manager.

Sugar Content High

Ontario.—Continued heat of the early part of the month speeded up the ripening of the grapes in this community, and a great call has been made for cars to carry them east. Although the heat caused a bit of sunburn on the outer edges of the vineyards, it produced a high sugar content in the crops, according to F. C. Cadwallader, State inspector, with offices in Ontario. He says the suger content is about 27 per cent.

Porterville Wins

Porterville.—First honors in the sweepstakes for oats, wheat and barley were awarded the exhibit entered by the agricultural department of Porterville Union High School at the State fair in Sacramento. L. S. Tromanhouser, agricultural instructor, and four of his pupils went to Sacramento to install the exhibit, which also included some pure-bred hogs.

Expensive Carelessness

Santa Barbara.—According to Frank Dunne, Santa Barbara county forester, there have been more fires to date this year than last, but the damage done has been small in comparison, due to most of this

Orange County Fowl Show Breaks Record

By Harry D. Jones

The largest and finest poultry show ever held in connection with the Orange County Fair was cooped August 28 to September 2, at the twelfth annual exhibition of the Orange county organization, held at Santa Ana. Will Hatch, veteran poultryman, was the superintendent, and his initial effort in his capacity was crowned with success. In fact so well satisfied were exhibitors that a petition with many signers was circulated the closing day of the show asking that Mr. Hatch be selected as the permanent head of the fair's poultry department.

Judge Henry Mumford made the awards in the exhibition classes in a satisfactory manner. His placings were well received and there was not a disgruntled exhibitor to be found. George Masterson hung the ribbons on a large utility class, and Andrew Stodel passed on the bantams and waterfowl.

The show occupied a spacious tent, which also contained the pigeon exhibit, and waterfowl. There was a fine waterfowl exhibit in the center of the tent and a cage of rare birds attracted considerable attention from visitors. Many poultry fanciers attended [illegible] Heinemann, whose Rhode Island Reds won their share of prizes in the standard-bred as well as utility classes, George Ashton, who won the blue in Rhode Island Red hens and pullets, and Harry Scholl, showing a string of Barred Plymouth Rocks from Long Beach that won every first but one in the class. In the Rhode Island Red aisle, F. H. Manning saw one of his birds adjudged first cock. Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Paige of Monrovia, Fred Clendenen, Stanley Foote, O. A. Ford, Elmer Koenig, W. C. Childers, L. T. McLean, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Lyons, "Bob" Stephens, and Claude Potter were there. D. Goddard personally checked over his winnings on a fine display of many varieties of ducks. Fanciers from all over the Southland renewed friendships. Mrs. Helen Blanchard, Mrs L. Harmon of Santa Cruz and John Colosso of Stockton were among those from a distance. It was a real show and a record breaker for the Orange county organization.

The honor of being placed best bird in the show went to a Silver Laced Wyandotte hen, bred and exhibited by Walter A. Adams of Pomona. This bird was truly a queen, of rare lacing and wonderful type. She recently returned from the International Poultry Show at Ardmore, Okla., where she was adjudged the best of her breed and sex against the nation's best. Best opposite sex was a wonderful Rhode Island Red cock bird, exhibited by F. H. Manning of Los Angeles. Here was a monarch of his breed, shown in wonderful fettle and of rare type and color. Best cockerel was another bird hard to fault in any section, an Ancona exhibited by F. Chatburn and Son of Inglewood, who had the misfortune of losing him before the show closed from an unknown cause, the bird being found dead in his pen the day after the judging.

The Chatburn Anconas were adjudged best display in the show. There were twenty-four of them, all of unusually good type and conditioned to the minute. George Ashton's Rhode Island Reds won for second best display, while third best went to the Rancho de Oro string from Santa Cruz.

One of the largest classes in the show, with a splendid average of quality birds, was in the Barred Plymouth Rocks. Here Harry Scholl, the Long Beach breeder, made a "clean-up," winning every blue except that for dark hen, which was taken by Foote and Ferris of Rosemead, with a bird for whom an excellent trapnest record in her pullet year is claimed. The Scholl birds were put down in wonderful condition and made a great show in themselves.

One of the big winners, both in the standard-bred classes and in the utility section, was A. H. Heinemann of Orange, Rhode Island Red breeder. He won first cockerel, first young pen and fifth hen and cock in the exhibition-bred classes, and was the biggest winner of the show in the utility classes of Rhode Island Reds. Mr. Heinemann believes that good show birds can be reared from egg-bred ancestry, and his winning exhibition birds, he declared, were all from "high-egg" ancestry.

Probably one of the "hottest" classes in the entire show was that for Rhode Island Red pullets, in which George Ashton won the blue. Mr. Manning was second and third, and Ideal Red Farm of Monrovia fourth. Here were twenty-one pullets and Judge Mumford had his work cut out for him in sorting them.

There was a nice exhibit of Wyandottes, with Mrs. Helen Blanchard of Santa Cruz showing seven varieties. She was a big winner in all but the Silver Laced, in which variety Walter A. Adams cleaned up with first cock, first hen, first pullet, first cockerel and first pen. Mrs. Blanchard showed some nice Buffs, Columbians and Golden Laced as well as Whites, Blacks and Silver Penciled, winning the special for the best display in this variety.

Rancho de Oro (Ranch of Gold) lived up to its name in exhibiting several varieties of buff-colored fowls. They showed a splendid string of Buff Leghorns, some nice Minorcas, Orpingtons and Plymouth Rocks, and won many firsts in these varieties. The Buff Orpington class was a hot one. The Atlantic Poultry Pens of Bell won first in cock and hen with two outstanding birds, while Mrs. E. E. Fairchild, Garden Grove, Rancho de Oro and Conrad Oertly, Garden Grove divided the balance of the ribbons.

There was a fine display of bantams in most of the popular varieties. O. A. Ford and Altadena Aviaries "hooked up" in a warm fight in the Buff Cochins, Altadena winning first cock and hen and Mr. Ford "cleaning up" in cockerels and pullets. Fred Clendenen, Los Angeles, showed a wonderful string of Black Cochins, getting first, second and third in cocks, hens, cockerels, and pullets. His three cocks were hard to fault and the hens were well above standard. Many fine Games were shown. Mr. Clendenen won for best Game with a Black Breasted Red cockerel that is promising. One of the features of the bantam exhibit was a display of Bearded Silkies shown by Miss Alva Scholl of Long Beach. They were of remarkable type and the first birds of the variety to be seen at a show on the Pacific Coast.

In ducks, D. Goddard of Gardena won for best display, with a fine exhibit of White Indian Runners, Pekins, Rouens, Khaki Campbells, Magpies and Mallards. His Indian Runners were awarded the special for the best duck and drake in the show, and Judge Stodel pronounced one of the Runners the best duck he had ever handled.

The Southland Garden and Small Farm Home

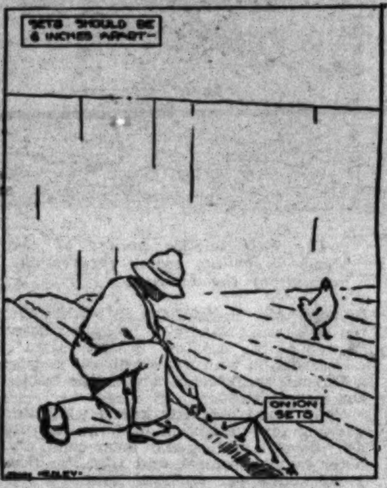
By Ross H. Gast

A FEW weeks ago, we suggested the preparation of plots for the planting of a cover-crop. We soon will be having ample rains to carry on a planting of this kind, and seeding should be gotten underway before long.

Granting that the soil has been spaded deeply, the next step is to make up beds about 10 or 15 feet square, with about six-inch borders. These should be flooded and then when the soil is ready, the surface should be worked up about four to six inches deep, then the whole plot leveled carefully so that it can be flooded later on. The best cover crop for the Southland garden is melilotus indica. This plant will make good growth during the winter months and can be turned under during January and February to show a decided improvement in the soil. Broadcast the seed rather thickly and then rake it in. There should be enough moisture in the soil to bring up the seed, but if rains do not materialize soon enough and germination is delayed, it might be well in this case to sprinkle the surface regularly each evening until the plants appear above the surface. The rain should carry the planting after this, but in case extra moisture is needed, it can be flooded.

PLANTING ONIONS

Those who like to produce their own blood purifiers should make preparations now, for the best onion season in Southern California is approaching. Onions will do well in most any type of garden soil with little additional fertilizer or manure. The necessity of drainage should be recognized, however, and it will generally be found that lighter soils produce the best onions.



SETS SHOULD BE 6 INCHES APART—
ONION SETS

Plant onion sets in a double row, each line of sets thus being close to a small irrigation ditch.

The accepted method of planting in the Southland is on double rows. These rows should be spaced about thirty inches center to center and the rows on the ridges can be as close as ten inches apart. At this time, the ridges should be about four inches high. One should ordinarily plant the seed about six inches high, but this is not necessary and should not be done when one is interested in green onions. When mature onions are desired, it is well to thin out the plants to about four to six inches apart in a row, but with bunching onions, sow the seed sparingly and it will not be necessary to thin.

The onion is a long-season crop and should be irrigated freely until the rains begin. They may even require an additional supply through the winter months.

For bunching onions, plant such varieties as Southport White Globe, or ask the seedman for bunching onion seed. The Sweet Spanish should not be planted until about December and the best variety for planting just at this time is the Early White Queen. The Riverside Sweet Spanish, both the brown and the white types, has been popular as a crop for the small farm. However, this crop is being extensively produced commercially and unless a local market is assured, the small farmer should not go too heavily into it. The Sweet Spanish is by far the most desirable onion for the local market, but generally they are allowed to grow to a large size. Most housewives like a medium size onion and on the small farm it is wise to hold down the size by allowing the plants to stand closer together in the row, six inches apart being a desirable spacing.

HANDLING DRY BEANS

The gardener or small farmer who has made a rather large planting of lima beans either for market or home use may find that a great many pods remaining on the plant are too dry to use or to market green. These can be picked and shelled and put away for winter use. The best place to store them so that they will not be damaged by insect infestation is a large can or some other tight container. To prevent any damage from bean weevil, saturate a cloth with carbon bisulphide and place it in the can with the beans, replacing the cover immediately afterward.

WOOD ASHES

Recently a correspondent asked for information as to the value of wood and plant ashes for improving soil. The value of ashes, of course, varies considerably and one cannot judge rightly their plant food material content. In general, ashes from fires which have burned slowly have the greatest value. Light soils are generally benefited the most by the application of ashes. The mechanical condition of heavy soils is also improved by their addition, since they contain a good deal of lime.

CARE OF ROSES

Roses will require some attention at this time. Thin out the straggly growth, leaving only well-ripened canes. Mulch the beds with well-rotted manure to a depth of three inches, then make up basins around each plant and give them a thorough soaking. Prune out Cherokee hedges lightly now.

TIMELY FLOWER PLANTINGS

Sow stocks and antirrhinum for late fall bedding and other use now. The Mammoth Nice stocks are well adapted to the Southwest, and desirable for winter flowering, although the Emperor strains, expecially Crimson King and White Lady, are popular. Of the antirrhinums, the Maximum Grays are new, but both the tall and half-dwarf types have splendid varieties.

Other popular annuals that can be sown in the open or in flats now are alyssum, arctotis, calendula, candytuft, annual chrysanthemum, calceolaria, acroclinium, clarkia, mignonette, lupinus, pansy, poppy, and godetia. Shirley poppies should be planted in the open, as they do not transplant well.

The annual larkspur, with its beautiful pastel colorings, is a most desirable bedding plant for the Southwest garden, producing a wealth of blooms for cutting. In frostless locations of Southern California, they can be planted in the open at this time for winter and early spring bloom. The seeds are slow to germinate, and the seed bed must be kept moist.

Plant Nursery Nets Ontario Boy Profit

ONTARIO.—Joe Tangeman, 14-year-old son of W. H. Tangeman of this city, has shown that it is possible for a boy to find remunerative employment right at his home, and add a good sum to his bank account. For two years this boy has been growing flower plants and selling them to his neighbors. Last year he banked about $125 and this year he has increased that amount about $50. The neat book account that he keeps shows that since February he has banked $175 from the plants sold. His books are ruled so that each variety of flowers has its own column. In this way he can tell at the end of the season just what plants were the most profitable. Then there is a column for his expenses, so that he is able to show at a moment's notice his exact financial standing.

Mr. Tangeman assisted his son in sowing the seeds in flats two years ago, but left it to the boy to care for the plants and dispose of them when they were ready for the garden.

Cold nights retard the germination of seed, and this year Joe and his father decided to build a small greenhouse, which has improved the business markedly, the boy says. The house is small enough to fit in any back yard, and its cost was but $60. Its dimensions are 8x9 feet and its walls are of glass except for three feet of siding from the ground up.

When the material was purchased, instructions were given the lumber company to cut it to the desired size, and groves were made so that the window glass might be fitted in with little trouble.

Among the plants that were started in the greenhouse this spring were asters, zinnias, snapdragons, stocks and chrysanthemums. One nursery bought 100 dozen zinnia plants, another bought chrysanthemums, and neighbors took the rest of the plants for their gardens. Next year Joe plans having a larger variety of plants for sale, and perhaps some vegetables also.

The greenhouse which helps Joe Tangeman, 14, of Ontario, to make money with flowers.

"This work surely keeps a fellow out of mischief," he says. "But it makes you feel mighty good to put money into the bank when you have earned it yourself."

Kern County Fair Needed More Space to Accommodate Exhibits

BAKERSFIELD.—All previous attendance records were broken for the Kern County Industrial and Agricultural Fair, which closed its doors Saturday evening, September 15. In all departments the 1928 event was the largest that has ever been held in Bakersfield, in keeping with the considerable increase in patronage. Stock and poultry exhibits grew this year about 25 per cent more than the fair officials anticipated or had prepared for, and on the opening day of the fair, these individuals were seen exerting themselves and others to find shelter for the last entries. An emergency order was rushed to town for 200 square feet of canvas to be used as a roof for an auxiliary building, and an "SOS" was sent to the Fresno District Fair board for the loan of 200 extra poultry coops, since the quarters provided for the feathered visitors had proved insufficient.

The live-stock entries, including beef and dairy cattle, sheep, swine and horses, numbered about 400, with cattle well in the lead. There were over 1500 birds including both chickens and pigeons.

Inside the big tent a dozen farm centers competed for honors, the first prize being $150, and the second $100. Those who attended the fair expressed delight over the excellence of these displays, which were declared by many to have surpassed any previous efforts in this direction in Kern county.

MAGUNDEN WINS

Magunden, which includes the orange-growing district of Edison, won the coveted first prize, with a booth arrayed in purple and gold, representing the royal chamber and throne of Ceres, goddess of the harvest, and utilizing a lavish supply of both fruits and vegetables. The effect was unusual and very pleasing.

Shafter was adjudged to be second. This display presented a great globe composed of grapes, with the green varieties appropriately representing the seas and the dark grapes forming the continents and islands. The judges made their decisions by the card system, Magunden winning 942 out of a possible 1200 points. The center which scored lowest was only about 300 points below the highest.

Arvin offered a relief map of the United States, also made of grapes, with the slogan, "Her Grapes Cover the States," well displayed. Pond, announced as the "Cream of Kern," had a dairy and poultry exhibit. Wasco's booth presented a cow, baby pigs and chickens, the cow stuffed, but the rest of the stock alive. Weed Patch used a flag constructed of grapes and cotton. Delano showed a huge top spinning against a background of rays constructed of fruit and vegetables, the slogan being "Delano Tops All." McFarland, "The Gem of Kern," was a huge diamond with facets of fruit and vegetables. Rio Bravo was announced as the "Center of Harmony," and the exhibit depicted a harp modelled out of vegetables and fruit of various sorts. Kern Delta had built a steamship to carry its "Products for World Markets" abroad. Tehachapi had prepared a huge pear most appropriately. Rosedale showed a model dairy farm and miniature oil derrick and airport, with the inscription, "The Farm Home Wins a Place in the Sun."

COMMERCIAL CRITERION

In Agricultural Hall the individual exhibitors had impressive displays of agricultural and horticultural products, and the judges awarded the prizes rather on the basis of commercial possibilities for fruit, vegetables and grains, than on abnormal size or peculiar shape.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of "fair week" over 100 dogs, entered in the Kern County Kennel Club bench show, provided the feature of the fair, and attracted a great deal of attention. A number of specimens of unusual breeds were on display, as well as fine examples of the better-known canines. Thursday was Bakersfield Day and all the local merchants closed their places and attended the fair in the afternoon. Friday's special event was a parade of live stock before the grand stand.

The most radical change which this year's fair presented was the elimination of horse and automobile races. Musical and dramatic entertainment before the grand stand was offered in place of the races, and no additional charge was made for grand stand seats.

Meredith and Francis Rudkin won ribbons on Frizzles. W. Meredith, Sacramento, won all prizes for Hamburgs. Australorp prizes went to Edward Phipps and H. M. Mayhews. F. H. Bain took many ribbons on Games. Other winners than Paul G. Owen in the turkey classes were the Bush Ranch, Albert Brandham and Mrs. Gus Mulhardt.

In the pigeon department, R. E. Kuhns, Eldorado Estates, Santa Susanna Lofts, Lawrence Hinckle and John Oliva won Silver King awards. Santa Susanna Lofts, Mr. Kinckle, Mr. Kuhns and C. H. Haubihauson took the ribbons in White Kings. R. E. Kuhns took all awards on Carneaux, Maltese,, Swiss Mondaine and Black Hungarian.

Leading exhibitors in the rabbit classes included Roy Crum of Oxnard, who entered eighty animals of several varieties, and Mr. and Mrs. Sadler of Ventura, with an entry of sixty English Angoras and White Flemish. Casa Conejo Rabbitry also had a large and fine display. Following is a summary of awards:

Mar Vista Rabbitry, Venice, firsts for White Flemish senior buck, senior doe, special doe, junior buck, best doe in show and best rabbit in show. El Blanco Rabbitry, Ventura, and Roy Crum won all other prizes in the strong class of White Flemish.

Mrs. Laird and Owen Olney won awards on Belgian Giants, Katherine Austed on Belgian Giants and Steel Gray Flemish, C. E. Brown on Belgian Giants, Red New Zealands and Long Hairs, Mrs. George Lewis on Steel Gray Flemish and Black Flemish, H. G. Mendenhall on Steel Grays and Grays, H. G. Fisher on Black Flemish, William Nichols on Gray Flemish and Roy Crum on Gray and White Flemish, Havanas, Lilacs and Chinchillas. R. W. Drake exhibited Black Siberians and American Whites; George Taylor showed Blue Eyed Beverns, Long Hairs, Chinchillas, Silver Martins and American Whites. Silver Fox and White New Zealands took prizes for C. L. Friese. Casa Conejo took ribbons on Silver Martins, White New Zealands and Angoras. White and Red New Zealands brought awards to J. P. Maple. Mrs. Charles Reidy showed White New Zealands; John Buckner, Santa Paula, showed Silver Chinchillas, American Whites and New Zealand Whites, and took best buck in the show on one of the latter.

Orange Association Has Record Season

CLAREMONT.—While marketing but one car more than last year, the Claremont Citrus Association was able to return to its members $224,000 more than for last year's shipments, F. C. Jacobs, manager of the association, reported at the annual meeting held here recently. The total return of $750,068.52 from 460 cars of fruit is a new record for this packing house, which has been in continuous operation for thirty years. For the 1927 season, 459 cars were sent to eastern markets. A healthy demand, in addition to the economical marketing methods employed by the California Fruit Exchange, were responsible for the greater return, according to Mr. Jacobs.

Due to mild weather during the spring months, the association was able to dispense with the usual precooling and icing until April 2, this economy serving to bring in a greater return to the growers.

All officers of the association were reelected at the meeting. They are Charles D. Baker, president, F. L. Baynham, vice-president; R. K. Pitzer, L. E. Sheets and F. W. Ford, directors.

Here's Two That'll Fit in Any Garden

By Elizabeth Boswell

A vegetable that is relished by many Southerners, but it not well known in the West, is the okra, a non-starchy product that may be used in many combinations.

Okra is very easy to grow. It likes a rich loamy soil, and will reach a height of four or five feet before the frost nips it. It is related to the roselle that many housewives plant for jelly. The flower of both is of a lovely pale yellow shade attractive enough to merit a place in the flower garden. The pods of the okra should be plucked three or four days after the blossom falls, as the vegetable is much more palatable when eaten while young and tender. The chief objection to the okra in the markets is that it generally has been allowed to get "husky," and much of it has to be thrown away.

Okra is easily prepared for the table. It should be cooked for only a few minutes in boiling water, then seasoned with salt and butter. It is also used extensively in soups.

Another vegetable that is easily grown, and that is just beginning to find its way into the markets, is the Jerusalem artichoke.

Early dwarf okra plant.

A row of okra just coming into bearing in a garden at Roscoe.

This plant grows wild in many of the Eastern States, where it is used to fatten hogs. Since raw vegetable salads are coming into popularity, the Jerusalem artichoke is finding a place in the home gardens.

In September, 1926, I happened upon some Jerusalem artichokes in a local market, the first I had seen since I was a child. I bought a small quantity, which I planted in an isolated spot in my garden. The following spring they came up, and grew rapidly until after the fall rains. Although they were sadly neglected, they yielded many tender, juicy roots. This spring a larger number sprouted from the roots that were left in the ground, and there is an abundant supply. They bear blossoms similar to those of the wild sun flower.

If no place can be found in the kitchen garden for these two vegetables with their pretty flowers, neither of them would be at all out of place in the ornamental garden.

Southern California Fair to Be Varied and Colorful Event

RIVERSIDE.—The sixteenth annual Southern California Fair, a State-endowed institution, opens its doors next Tuesday with an important and extensive show of farm products, live stock and the arts of rural life. More than $90,000 in prizes will be awarded this year by the fair. Judging will be carried out in the following divisions: Horses, cattle, swine, sheep, goats, junior fair, apiary, agriculture and horticulture, child welfare, domestic arts and crafts, fine arts, educational, and poultry, pigeons and rabbits.

Officially, the fair is under the guidance of George W. Thomas, president of the Forty-sixth District Agricultural Association, and is sponsored by every civic body and official organization of the Southland's agricultural centers. Entries, which closed on September 15, and all other details, have been arranged by Mrs. Cecelia U. Cravens, who has been secretary of the fair for many years.

Cotton and dates, the typical and choicest products of the Coachella Valley, may carry off the lion's share of the agricultural and horticultural exhibits. Beautiful specimens of dates, in all stages of growth and preparation for the market, have already begun arriving in Riverside, where a large section of the horticultural tent has been reserved for acclimatized fruits.

The cotton growers of Southern California will enter an elaborate exhibit of their product, consisting of a miniature train and cotton gin—the train operating between a Lilliputian model of a cotton field and the gin.

Besides the agricultural and husbandry divisions of the fair, several other features of educational and diverting nature have been added. Among these, the aviation show, including a series of flights by army birdmen from the government training school at March Field; the Junior Fair, conducted by the youth of Southern California's agricultural sections, and an extensive program of horse racing command attention.

An exhibition of paintings, a rare enough item in the traditional county fair, occupies not the least portion of the fair's space. Cash prizes will be distributed among the winners of the landscape and figure competitions, as well as to the winners of the competitions among exhibitors of dairy cattle, horses, swine and poultry.

CHILDREN'S DAY

The opening day, Tuesday, is to be devoted to the children of Southern California and is so designated. The Sherman Indian Institute, in this connection will send a delegation of students who are to perform tribal dances in colorful costume. The opening day will also feature the attendance of the Retail Merchants' Association of California.

Judging of the various competitions in the agricultural and live-stock divisions will begin on Wednesday. On that day special honors will be paid to the supervisors of the seven southern counties and to Orange county. March Field and Long Beach will be recipients of official tenders of courtesy.

On Thursday, Riverside, city and county, will have its own day, the artists of Southern California, the Santa Monica Municipal Band, and delegations from Corona, Norco, Arlington and other county points supplying the ceremonies.

Farm Bureau Day is Friday. Not only the Riverside County Farm Bureau, but the Riverside county school children, the Riverside Women's Club and delegations from Ventura, San Bernardino and Imperial counties, will be the honored guests. On Saturday, the celebration will be called American Legion Day, with the service clubs of Southern California, the municipal departments of Los Angeles and various other civic units uniting to complete the day's activities. The fair will close on Sunday, a day set aside as Southern California Day.

Colorful Industry

come from a small backyard. In Santa Maria, noted for its skilled gardeners, as is Santa Monica, dahlia growing is highly developed, but it is not on a large scale. In that section of the country dahlias thrive better with some protection from the wind, hence George V. Warren protects his with a hedge of common mallow, cut back rigorously every February. George Walker of Orcutt grows ten-foot corn as a windbreak. Mr. Walker, by the way, seems especially interested in the pompons and in the English singles. Mr. Warren has developed some fine new sorts. Two of his later ones are a charming lavender, "Milton Sills," and a yellow hybrid cactus, "Natalie Kingston." The latter is inclined to droop its head—its papa was "Bashful Giant," so Mr. Warren says, and "Natalie" inherits his defects as well as his size for "Bashful Giant" is a huge dahlia with a head almost as big as a Russian sunflower, but with the habit of the modest violet.

Making cuttings. Sometimes several hundred are made from one dahlia root.

The half minute plunge of the stems in boiling water insures the keeping of the blossom.

Your true hybridist knows what he is working for—perfection of form, fine foliage, strength and grace of stem, color, character and endurance, and that the flower looks well under artificial light.

Interesting developments have been found of late among the smaller dahlias, the charming and quaint collarettes, the singles, the miniature decoratives. Mr. Hayes, at Santa Monica exhibited a charming little Dutch decorative, "Little Jewel," for probably in size, the dahlia has gone as far as we care to have it.

The dahlia has a great future; it and the gladiolus are ideal flowers for home experiment. The space required for growing is not large, nor is the flower exacting, the rewards it offers are many, the opportunities for modifying and varying it are legion. It is a joy to the amateur horticulturist and seems to hold for the professional enough fascination to last a lifetime.

Small Grove Best, This Grower Thinks

Editor, Farm and Orchard:

I have read the very interesting article by E. H. Kranz in Farm and Orchard, in which he declares that big companies make better citrus growers than do the individual, and I must say that my point of view is just the opposite.

I have been reared in the citrus business since boyhood, and my observation has been that the most successful grower is the one who has twenty acres of good soil, good trees in a favorable location, and through his personal attention to details makes a splendid success.

Looking back, I have seen big companies start in this business, operate for a while, and then subdivide their holdings into five, ten and twenty-acre tracts. You will ask why?

First, this industry is in the nature of a farm venture—the good comes with the bad. When the bad comes, a farmer will "cut down," and work out a living at something else till things get better, while a big company must go ahead with its big "overhead."

The general public is far better off when the individual is the owner of citrus holdings than when the operations are carried on by large companies. The small cities prosper and everybody has that "right feeling" which comes from ownership.

The way the large co-operatives are handling the output makes for the highest point of efficiency, the individual being able to get quantity prices on his purchases through the supply departments, and good net returns through selling in volume.

Mr. Kranz makes the prediction that in 15 years the citrus industry will be in the hands of big companies. I make the prediction that it will remain the same as it is now, with the most successful of the individual growers raising stock, either poultry or baby beef, for the organic fertilizers they produce, in this way cutting down the cost of production.

PAUL G. LEHMER

Watch the Heat

Anaheim.—Three hundred and fifty walnut growers from all parts of Southern California met here recently to discuss timely field problems of the walnut industry. A. W. Christie, manager field department of the California Walnut Growers' Association, warned the growers against overheating the nuts in the process of dehydration. The maximum temperature for dehydration is 110 degrees. Excessive heating breaks the oil cells of the kernel and causes rancidity, which greatly depreciates the quality of the nut. Mr. Christie stated that over 50 per cent of the State's crop will be artificially dehydrated this year. Some 350 dehydrators will be in use.

Ventura Is Granted Special Fair Award

Among numerous honors granted by the California State Fair this year to communities and individuals of the Southland, was a special award to Ventura county for complete representation of its resources, of commercial and educational value and artistic arrangement. Orange county won a special citrus award of $150, and San Bernardino and San Diego tied for second and third prizes totaling $175.

A Southland horse, Royal Arlequin, entered by E. G. Stinson of Orange, came off senior and grand champion Belgian in the open class. Several other Stimson Belgians also won awards. Kingzar, owned by E. C. Marks of Pomona, took third in the class for Percheron stallions over 3 years of age. Among the Shires in the open class, Fred Bixby's horse, Montezuma Chief, from Orange, took third among the stallions over 3 years of age. Hales and Miller of Los Angeles took a number of ribbons with their mule entries.

In the "farmer class" of draft horses, E. G. Stinson of Orange took first for heavy four horse and two horse teams, with Hales and Miller of Los Angeles taking first, second, and third in the 1150-pound four-horse and two-horse competition.

Among the honey exhibits, Orange county took a first for extracted orange honey, and Ventura county came off with three seconds, for extracted sage honey, extracted orange honey, and specimen of beeswax.

Lompoc Fair Shows Agricultural Worth

LOMPOC.—With the closing of its gates at midnight, Saturday, September 8, the Lompoc Valley Fair ended one of the most creditable expositions ever put on by that community. Headed by J. H. Lundberg, chairman of the Lompoc Farm Center, the fair association did a good job of putting on an agricultural fair.

Probably the outstanding department of the whole show was that holding the agricultural exhibits which showed the various products grown in the district. There were sugar beets weighing forty pounds each down to mustard seeds, which would take several thousand to weigh a pound. All of the plate exhibits were attractively arranged. Over 150 first, second and third prize ribbons were given out by the judges, who were Parker Talbot, farm adviser of San Luis Obispo county, Thomas Chalmers, horticultural commissioner of the county, and Sidney A. Anderson, assistant farm adviser of Ventura county.

A feature of this department were the one-farm displays put on by five Lompoc growers, L. D. Streeter, C. W. Henning, C. W. Coper, Charles Davis and George Summers. The first named was given the blue ribbon.

Another feature was provided by the various farm centers of the county. Carpinteria, Coast, Santa Ynez Valley, Sisquoc and Lompoc were represented.

Heavy Tomato Planting

Perris.—An unusually heavy planting of fall tomatoes is reported in the Perris and Moreno valleys this season, approximately 300 acres being devoted to the crop. The tomatoes will be picked just as they are turning yellow and will be crated and shipped to eastern markets, ripening en route.

There's Right and Wrong Way to Fertilize the Citrus Trees

By M. B. Rounds,
Farm Advisor of Los Angeles County

THROUGH survey, experimentation and observation, a considerable amount of data and information has been accumulated on the use of fertilizers for the purpose of maintaining fertility in citrus orchards. While some of this information may not apply to other fruits, it is thought that much of it does and that the deciduous fruit grower might apply the same information. The survey of citrus orchards which was made by Prof Vaile in 1923, in co-operation with the extension service and farm bureaus, brought out the fact that profitable results were had only from the application of nitrogen and organic matter, such as manures and cover crops. Experimental evidence collected during the last twenty-five years has also borne out the survey.

For the most profitable results in the use of nitrogen, use 200 to 300 pounds per acre, according to the age of the trees. On young, bearing trees, the amount of nitrogen per tree would be two and one-half pounds on a basis of eighty trees to the acre. The survey and experiments have also shown that best results are obtained where approximately one-half of the nitrogen is obtained from bulky, organic fertilizers and one-half from concentrated fertilizers.

Because of the need for more nitrogen during the spring months when the trees are more active, the concentrates which are more quickly available should be applied during that season. When organic fertilizers are applied in the spring, some nitrogen may become available for use during that season, but since only a minor portion of it does become available for immediate use that factor does not materially control its seasonal application.

When large amounts of organic matter, especially cereal and bean straws, are applied so that they break down in the soil during the season when the tree is requiring large amounts of nitrogen for growth, competition between the tree and the factors of decomposition sometimes takes place and the tree suffers. It is gratifying that this condition does not always exist since, where consistent fertilization has been practiced, the supply of this element is nearly always ample. Organic fertilizers are frequently applied on the surface and not worked in very deep, which may be another reason why much of the time this competition does not take place. On light, sandy or gravelly soils, however, there is often a shortage of nitrogen and on such types, precaution is advisable.

Many growers are now planning to eliminate the danger by making application of manures, bean straw, etc., during the summer or fall months, since decomposition will then take place during the season when growth of tree and development of fruit are retarded and there is less need for nitrogen.

Th bulky organic fertilizers classified by Prof. R. W. Hodgson, in Circular No. 283, of the College of Agriculture, are as follows: Bulky organic (.5 to 2.5 per cent nitrogen.) Slowly available: bean straw, animal manures, dry cover crops, garbage tankage. Quickly available: alfalfa hay, poultry manure and green manure crops.

It should be noted that some of these are slowly available and others quickly available. If the animals from which the manures are obtained are alfalfa-fed and a large portion of their organic matter content is wasted alfalfa, then the manure obtained would be more easily broken down, making the nitrogen more quickly available. This type of manure applied in the spring would be less apt to cause a deleterious effect. The grower will find that the bulky organic fertilizers or manures will contain from .5 to 2.5 per cent nitrogen.

The following is the approximate nitrogen content of a number of these materials used: Alfalfa hay 2 per cent, bean straw, 1.5 per cent, barnyard and horse manure .5 per cent, dairy manure 1 per cent. Poultry, rabbit, sheep, bird guano and bat guano run high in nitrogen and vary in their nitrogen content according to the nature of the litter used and the percentage of moisture; whatever the material purchased, its quality should be the first consideration; the percentage of nitrogen and organic matter content determine the quality. If the grower is planning to apply 2.5 pounds of nitrogen annually to his trees, experience and experimental evidence teach that he should plan to apply at least sufficient bulky, organic fertilizers to furnish one and one-fourth pounds per tree, leaving the balance to be applied in the concentrated fertilizers which he puts on the orchard in the winter or spring. Bean straw, alfalfa straw, and alfalfa hay are all good fertilizers if purchased at the right price, since they may run more uniform as to their nitrogen and organic matter content.

It is not necessary to apply nearly as much of such materials as of animal manures. However, in some fruit-growing districts, the animal manures cost less when nitrogen, organic matter content and labor are considered. As an example of cost, compare bean straw with dairy manure when the dairy manure is spread for $4.50 per ton and contains .75 per cent nitrogen and 30 per cent organic matter, while tne bean straw contains 1.5 per cent nitrogen and 90 per cent organic matter. Using a unit as a basis for the value of nitrogen, the organic matter then is worth $1.50 or $.05 a unit. Using these values, the bean straw would be worth $10.50 per ton.

If the grower asks himself how much bean straw he should apply to equal the ten tons of manure, the answer would be five tons. The bean straw, however, contains three times the organic matter, making the application of bean straw cost $52.50, as compared to $45.00 for the ten tons of manure.

If possible, bulky organics should be turned under deeply either by deep plowing or discing. This prevents loss from oxidation and accelerates decomposition. Placing it in deep furrows is satisfactory, provided enough of the soil volume receives the benefit. The chief benefit to the soil from the application of organic fertilizer comes through the breaking down of the organic matter into materials which bring into availability the other much-needed mineral elements. All of the root feeding portion of the soil should receive the benefit, as far as possible.

"Old-Timer's" Farm Once Indians' Camp

REDLANDS.—One of the oldest and most interesting places in this section is Crystal Springs Ranch, about three miles southeast of this city. The ranch consists of 175 acres, and is owned by George D. Heron, a pioneer of this section. Only between thirty and forty acres of this ranch is tillable, the remainder consisting of steep hills lying along the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway grade between Redlands and Yucaipa.

Crystal Springs ranch, near Redlands, was bought for $100 and two watches—but not lately. Its springs were once the rendezvous of Indians, and the upper picture shows some of the stone relics disclosed by the owners plow.

Several acres are farmed to a variety of vegetables, and fruit trees, including oranges, lemons, grapefruit, pears, cherries, and apples fosm a small orchard. Oat hay is usually grown on the remainder of the tillable land.

This ranch is one of the historic old places of the southern part of the State. The land around its springs was a favorite camping place for the Indians both before and after the advent of the white men in California. For about forty years Mr. Heron's plow has been turning up Indian relics. He has a collection of about seventy Indian mortars and metates made from stones. When he purchased the Crystal Springs Ranch he gave $100 and two gold-filled watches for it. Productive citrus orchards are now located nearby, and one acre of his ranch is now worth far more than the original purchase price of the 175 acres. Mr. Heron was a constable of the Northwest Mounted Police from 1879 to 1885.

Approve Elaborate Fair Grounds Plan

POMONA.—The local city council has formally accepted the major development idea for a greatly enlarged Los Angeles County Fair grounds plan, as worked out by the members of the Los Angeles county regional planning commission and officials of the fair association. The Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors already has approved these development plans and is committed to the expenditure of a large sum for the construction of permanent buildings.

The contract for the construction of the first of these buildings has been awarded. This display building will be 800 feet long and 135 feet wide. The new fair grounds will contain 105 acres, additional roads will be laid out and the general arrangement of the present plant entirely changed. The main buildings will face the east, as will the main entrance, which is arranged to open upon a circular road into which White avenue and Walnut street will connect. Two automobile roadways and a walk for pedestrians lead west to the fair grounds entrances.

Inside the entrance gates the plans provide for an automobile highway thirty feet wide, which will encircle the grounds and will be amply shaded with trees. To the north of the large exposition buildings will be permanent buildings for the exhibits of machinery, poultry, rabbits, pigeons, swine, sheep and goats. On the south the plans provide for the fine arts educational, floriculture, household science, and dining salon permanent buildings. A large building for horses and cattle, 750 feet long by 200 feet wide, will be erected west of the permanent buildings and between them and the race track. South of the present grand stand a circular night horse show building is planned. Near by will be a stock-judging pavilion.

It is estimated that it will take seven years to consummate these plans. The first building for which the contract has been let will be ready for the 1929 fair.

Mr. Butler says:

Gentlemen: I have done all my work alone. Not a hired man or a horse on the place so far, which I claim is doing the work of two men and two 2-rows in planting and three men and three 2-rows in cultivating, and does it on one-half feed expense. Must you ask if I am satisfied with my Farmall?

(Signed) J. A. BUTLER,
July 28, 1928 Nunn, Colorado

Farm with Farmalls

THERE was a time when a man bought a tractor to use with his horses; today he buys a McCormick-Deering Farmall Tractor to use instead of horses—and word comes to us often that the Farmall plan is doing more for farm profit and farm happiness than horses and hired labor could ever hope to do. Every new horseless farm—and there are already hundreds—offers new proof that this new farm power idea is a profit builder. The word of success travels fast, with the result that Farmalls are being put to work everywhere in rapidly increasing numbers.

Great, long trainloads slip away from the big Farmall Works at Rock Island, Illinois, to all points of the compass. Even so, it has been difficult to keep up with the cry for more Farmalls.

With all indications pointing to an even heavier demand next year, it becomes the part of wisdom to order your Farmall now, while the local McCormick-Deering dealer can make reasonable delivery.

Turn your horses and mules into money—there's no need to feed them through another winter—and prepare to enjoy the convenience and economy of Farmall power for fall work and all work. The local dealer will show and demonstrate the Farmall on your own farm upon request.

Plow with a Farmall

The Farmall thrives on row-crop work, but that doesn't mean it spends its whole life straddling rows. Far from it! Its full power, quick turning, and easy handling fit it perfectly for the heavy, hard job of fall plowing. Hook a Farmall to a 2-bottom plow and go ahead; you're all set for fast work and good work, at low cost. It's the same with all other jobs—the Farmall is the real all-purpose, all-year tractor!

Make Hay with a Farmall

As the season progresses you can shift from one important job to another with surprising speed. Tilling, plowing, seeding, planting row crops (with 2- or 4-row cultivator), mowing, raking, loading hay, harvesting grain, harvesting corn, and doing the hundred and one belt jobs around the farm.

Now Selling Second Unit in One of the Most Beautiful Suburban Districts in the State of California

La Habra Heights

Only eighteen miles—forty-five minutes—east of Los Angeles, in the scenic Whittier Foothills—the ideal location for your Country Home, and unexcelled for the commercial production of Oranges, Lemons, Avocados and subtropical fruits of all kinds.

LA HABRA HEIGHTS possesses everything that possibly could be desired by the suburban home-seeker, as well as by the experienced citrus or avocado grower. The soil is as good as can be found anywhere in the Southwest; the climatic conditions are as good as could be wished for; the water supply is adequate and dependable for all time; the environment is that which is sought by the more discriminating, and the scenic grandeur is unsurpassed anywhere within a radius of one hundred miles of Los Angeles and embraces "magnificent distances" which include the most captivating view of mountains, verdant valleys, and the grand old Pacific.

La Habra Heights is owned and developed by Edwin G. Hart, Inc., who have had fifteen years' experience in orchard development work in Southern California. The first unit of La Habra Heights, consisting of 2,000 acres, was practically "sold out" three months ago and will be one of the most attractive horticultural districts in California when fully developed. Some of California's most prosperous avocado orchards are now flourishing here, evidencing the adaptability and desirability of this district for citrus and avocado production. Eighteen-hole all-grass golf course in center of this subdivision.

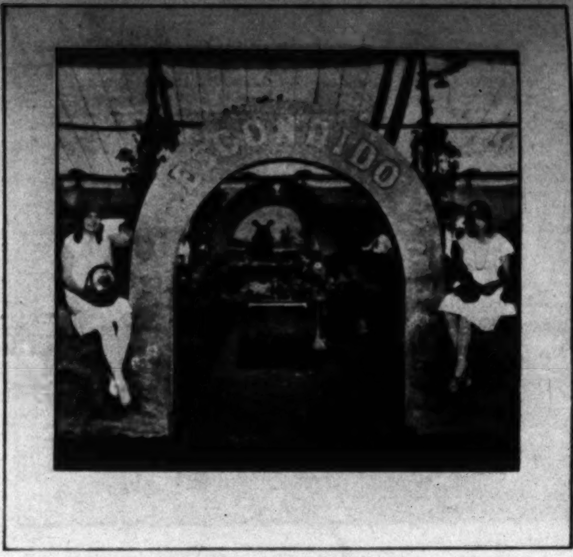
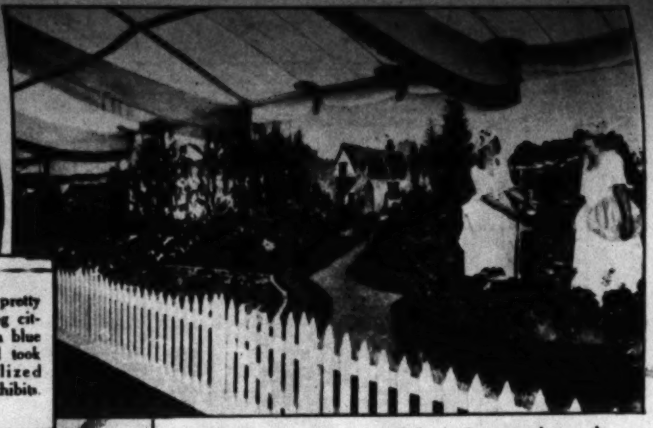
Communities Vie With Each Other at Santa Ana Fair

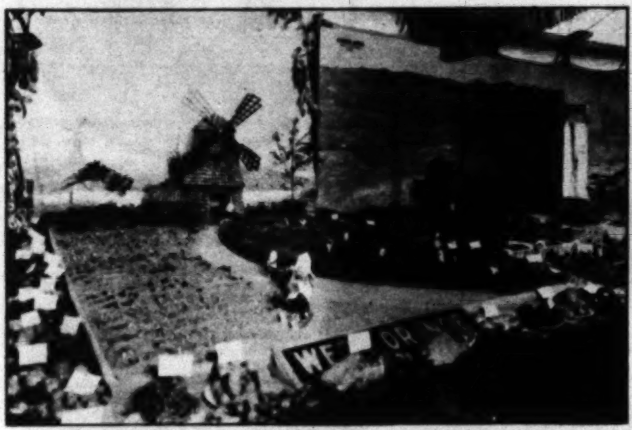


Escondido won first place among visiting exhibits at the Orange County Fair this year, with a mission court wherein were all sorts of products from that favored district.

Tustin had a pretty display featuring citrus fruits and a blue windmill, and took first for specialized farm center exhibits.



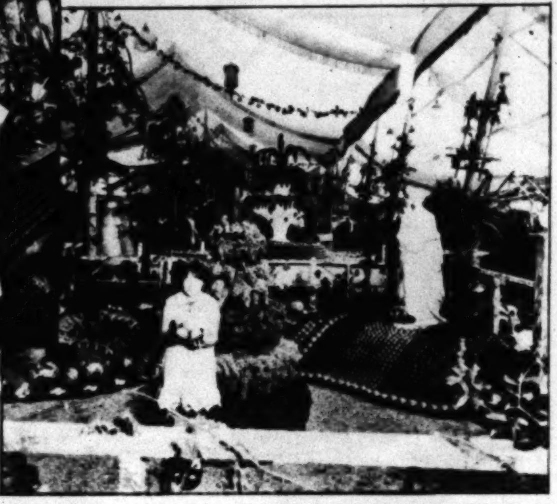
This home scene was awarded grand sweepstakes at the fair at Santa Ana. It is the display of Garden Grove, which was also given first for diversified farm center offerings. The well was made of potatoes, and the curved walk of milo maize, the "flower beds" being composed of vegetables.



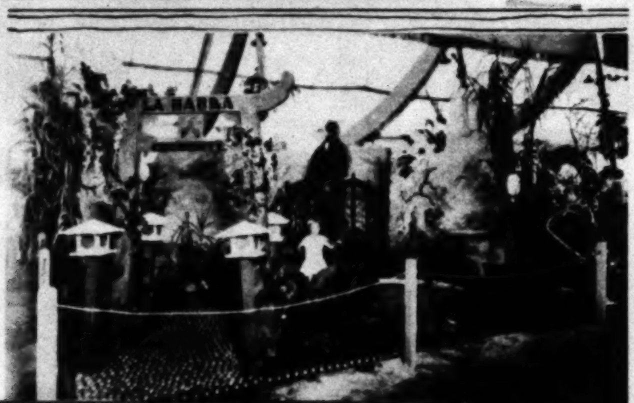
This "Dutch garden" from West Orange, its windmill made of walnuts, won second in diversified farm center offerings at the fair.

Anaheim Farm Center

Anaheim, with a subtropical garden and grass hut, was second for specialized farm center display.

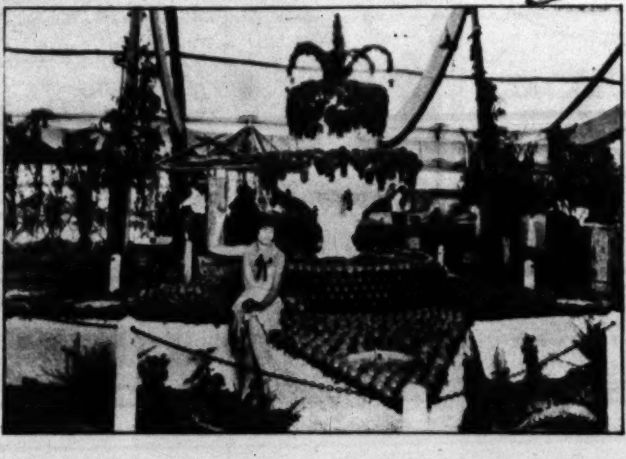


Pomona's sunken garden and fountain of grapes stood second among the visiting exhibits.



La Habra's Japanese garden with a footpath of oranges, earned a third in the specialized farm center displays.

Buena Park won third place for diversified farm center offerings, with a garden in rustic mood, featuring a well composed of sugar beets.



San Bernardino, third among visiting exhibits, showed a grape-embellished fountain set in a star of fruits.

"Mine Own Vine and Fig Tree"

For five thousand years man has associated the idea of home with the idea of fruitfulness and beauty.

It is that spot essentially his own—the cradle of his affections—the storehouse of his treasures—his refuge from the elements.

The enhancement of its comfort and loveliness is, therefore, of prime importance to him.

Here in this pleasant land are brought into being new conceptions of what a home may be.

On every hand is to be found loveliness beyond the dreams of the centuries.

Artistic workmen in wood and stone—craftsmen versed in the use of tree, shrub and vine—have contrived together to build a Paradise.

None have made a richer contribution than has the Landscape Architect*, for it is he who has, with growing things, satisfied our hunger for the final note of beauty and harmony.*

Bulbs

Ready For Immediate Planting

NEW RANUNCULUS, "Giants of Montebello." Very double flowers, larger than those of any other strain, are borne in great profusion. Rich crimson, dazzling scarlet, soft pink, yellow, amber and gold predominate. The intervening shades are too numerous to mention. Fine, two-year-old bulbs. Price, $1.00 a dozen, $7.50 a hundred.

RANUNCULUS, Howard & Smith's Prize Strain. Equally beautiful in color combination. Flowers just a trifle smaller. Price, 75c a dozen, $5.00 a hundred.

H. & S. ANEMONES. Large, single flowers. A strain rich in blue, scarlet, crimson, lilac, etc. A splendid cut flower, as well as good for bedding. Planted now will bloom during the holidays.

RAINBOW FREESIAS. A fine collection of all high colored varieties, mixed. Price, 75c a dozen, $5.00 a hundred.

PURITY FREESIAS. Pure, glistening white, exceedingly long stems. Price, 35c a dozen, $2.50 a hundred.

IRIS IMPERATOR. A magnificent variety. Flowers are borne on strong, stiff stems, 24 to 30 inches above the ground. The color of this charming bulbous Iris is a rich shade of deepest blue. Bulbs planted now will bloom in March and April. It is a splendid variety for cutting purpozes and should in no way be confused with the so-called "Flags" or German Iris. Price, $1.00 per dozen, $7.50 per hundred.

ENCHILADAS

- 2 tablespoons Globe "A1" Flour
- 2 tablespoons vinegar
- 1 tablespoon shortening or oil
- 1 cup cooked pork, minced
- 1 cup grated cheese
- 1 large onion, minced
- 1 cup ripe olives, minced
- ½ cup chopped raisins
- a little minced garlic
- salt to taste
- tortillas and chili sauce

PLACE shortening or oil in frying pan, add onion and garlic and cook for 3 minutes, add chopped pork, add the flour mixed smooth with the vinegar and cook again for 3 minutes adding a little water or meat broth if the mixture is dry. Remove from fire and add salt to taste, add minced olives, raisins and cheese.

Dip each tortilla in the chili sauce, then place upon it a heaping tablespoon of filling, roll it up and place in a baking dish or pan. Place the enchiladas close together, pour chili sauce over all and place in a hot oven for about ten minutes.

TORTILLAS

- 4 cups Globe "A1" Flour
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ¼ cup shortening
- ¾ cup warm water

ADD salt to flour, add shortening and chop or rub it into the flour until well mixed. Now add warm water, enough to make a smooth dough, and knead it for a few minutes. Let stand for about half an hour and knead again. Shape small pieces of the dough (about the size of an egg) into flat round cakes, place them on a board and roll them very thin. Bake them on an ungreased griddle that is not too hot, turning each tortilla to brown both sides. The tortillas should be about six inches in diameter.

CARE OF THE BODY

If he wanted to give you a mild one, he might prescribe the essence of garlic, or the essence of onions, or ground-up pumpkin seed.

If he wanted to give you a stronger vermifuge, he might prescribe male fern or emetine taken internally. Personally, I believe these have some use. The worms must be stupefied. Their grasp upon the intestinal mucous membrane must be weakened and they must be prepared to become discharged.

The things of greatest value, however, are the fast itself and the intestinal house-cleanings.

When we have a clean digestive system, we shall find that worms cannot form.

Study the foods which are responsible for their presence and when we combine the two, we shall find that there need be no worms in the system, or when they are there, that they can be easily discharged.

Numbness

Q.: Can you tell me the remedy for numbness and cold extremities, not only upon awakening but during part of the morning as well?

A.: A sluggish circulation or a retarded circulation has its effect upon the heat-producing powers of the body. Such a circulation we usually find coincidental with anemia, with low vitality, or, as you may call it, with lack of pep.

Were we to conduct an examination in the average person suffering from this trouble, we would find him of a sedentary occupation or disposition. We would also find poor intestinal elimination, a skin that does not perspire easily, intestines and digestive system prolapsed and the entire nervous system depleted to a very serious point.

Were we to analyze the dietetic habits of a person suffering from this ailment, we would find that for years he has been addicted to the use of salt, condiments and spices.

There is no better destroyer of the red blood corpuscle than such condiments and therefore I would caution against their use.

We try to overcome this trouble by the consumption of heated foods and concentrated foods such as eggs, meats of all different varieties, hot drinks, etc. In reality, if the blood lacks its own oxidizing power, its own ability to manufacture heat, we certainly cannot substitute the artificial heat of highly cooked, seasoned and spiced foods. We must ultimately rely upon the body's intrinsic power to produce its own heat.

You may ask, "What is the remedy?"

First, increase the rate of circulation. Get rid of your sedentary habits. No matter what your age may be, there is some sport, some physical activity, some means of increasing the circulation of your blood. If you have a garden, work in it until the perspiration pours down. Otherwise, practice the simple sports of walking or hill-climbing if you are not sufficiently active to engage in golf, tennis, swimming, hiking, dancing, etc.

In addition, learn the value of sunshine. There is no finer heat producer, energizer, stimulator of the blood than that which you can get free from the glorious golden California sunshine.

Then learn how to diet so that you clean house, so that the noxious poisons which have accumulated, sometimes for years and years, will be discharged from the body.

The problem of constipation is intimately related to this ailment and must be solved before this condition can be overcome.

Broken Veins

Q.: Can red spots, caused from broken blood vessels, be removed from the skin?

A.: I have answered this question indirectly several times in "Care of the Body" department under the head of varicose veins, for these are the usual causes for the presence of the red hemorrhagic spots in the skin.

When we find the blood vessels breaking, due to the accumulation of toxic waste in the valves, frequently a bluish or sometimes a reddish discoloration occurs.

When there is any foreign substance in the blood stream, there are only one or two things that can happen to that substance. Either it must become absorbed by the blood circulation or absorption must take place through the skin by means of toxin elimination.

Sweating or any physical-culture pursuit which involves oxidation of such poisons will furnish an excellent means of discharging this debris outward.

Again, if one were to go on a short fast or adjust the diet so that the kidneys could take care of the noxious poisons as fast as they form in the blood circulation, absorption would also take place.

Several additional measures may be helpful.

A friction rub in the morning following a cold shower will usually bring the red tingle of active circulation to the surface of the skin.

Sports of all kinds are advisable provided that they are not taken too strenuously and that the blood pressure is not too high nor a heart lesion present.

Typhoid Fever

Question: What is the cause of typhoid fever?

Answer: Ask any of our medical brethren and they will reply, "The presence of the bacillus typhus in our milk or water or the presence of sewage in whatever we drink."

There is no question in my mind but that there is a very large gist of truth in that statement and therefore, it behooves our public authorities to be everlastingly on guard against sewage-infected liquids of any kind in water, in milk or in any other fluid.

On the other hand, the building of vital resistance is of just as great importance as the actual presence of bacteria.

Keep yourselves clean. Then consume clean foods and clean liquids and you will find that typhoid fever, as well as most of the other infections, will not "get" you.

Fruits and Vegetables in Diabetes

Q.: May a diabetic patient eat okra, also carrots, beets and turnips—raw, stewed or baked?

A.: I can answer this question with one brief "Yes," and I shall extend the answer further. The diabetic patient may consume, in an unfired, raw state, every kind of fruit grown and known in California which includes the sweet dates and all other sweet fruits, as well as every type of vegetable with the exception of the very starchy varieties such as potatoes, sweet potatoes, etc.

This opens to the diabetic, a vast field of dietetics and is certainly a marked contrast to the concentrated meats, proteins and robbed gluten breads which are commonly fed in the guise of a diabetic diet.

BUNIONS

WE have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have every reason to believe it will cure nine cases out of ten.

The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the toes and cause this hideous deformity.

The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal traction for the bones will be re-established and in a short time the bunion disappears completely and forever.

What the Preacher Said Is the Truth

When it is proposed to canonize a saint those who have authority to do so hold a council and go over the record of the deceased person's life. If a blemish on the character of the one proposed as a candidate is found, or if the advocates fail to prove a miracle performed, the whole matter fails and falls through.

It is a hard job, and is made the more so because of the presence in the council of an extremely pessimistic individual who is called "Advocatus Diablo"—the devil's advocate.

This devil's advocate in the council disputes every contention made in favor of the candidate. He refuses to believe anything good that is put forth as an argument in favor of canonization. And so, if the candidate can get by the devil's advocate his name is put upon the long and glorious roll of the saints.

Well, sir, danged if a devil's advocate didn't come up to see us one night there awhile back in our little high house in the hills.

The way the whole thing came about was that we had just received in the mail a beautifully engraved certificate with a gold seal upon it which set forth the fact that we had been named to be "A Fellow of the Pacific Geographic Society."

Are you aware, we said to our visitor, that you are sitting in the house of a person of vast importance? And he answered and said in a sneering kind of way, how come? he said.

So we took a piece of paper and a lead pencil and said look at what we can put after our name when we write it down. We have received the Degree of Doctor of Literature from the Methodist University of Southern California, the Degree of Doctor of Laws from the Catholic University of Santa Clara, and now comes this honor of being a Fellow in the Pacific Geographic Society.

So what did we do but write our name down on the paper and after our name we put down these honors "Litt.D., LL.D., F.P.G.S." But in the face of this impressive array of titles the devil's advocate sitting with us in our little high house in the hills never even batted an eye, as the saying is. We had to go at him again.

Besides all this, we said, look at the other honors that have been conferred upon us. A mountain has been named for us, a street in San Gabriel, a Pullman car, a canary bird, a delphinium and a salad invented by a lady who is a member of the Santa Monica Women's Club, a baby and a pedigreed Persian cat. But the devil's advocate still surveyed us with a stony glare.

And if you want to know it, we said in desperation and feeling that we were in the last ditch, we were once elected Justice of the Peace and were a sergeant in the militia in Pennsylvania.

And still the devil's advocate sat impassive. He might as well have been a wooden Indian.

And when he did talk it was to say that all these honors we had spoken of were like the foam on beer. And what good do they do you? he asked. He asserted that they were merely feed for our vanity.

You went up just a few hundred miles from your home and paid a visit to Chinese Camp, didn't you? And you have admitted yourself that not one of the seven living human beings in Chinese Camp had ever heard of you. They didn't know a single thing about you. And yet you had not traveled half the length of California. And I'll bet you are totally unknown in Eureka, Dutch Flats, Requa or a thousand other well-known places.

Yes, we said, but we can name you one place where we are known to the entire population, and are, therefore, famous. It is a place called Aguanda, we said. And the population of the place consists of a storekeeper and his wife. And once when we were in Aguanda the storekeeper and his wife knew us as soon as we arrived and called us by name. And what do you know about that? we said.

You are doing nothing but fooling yourself, replied the devil's advocate. All is vanity, as the Preacher says in the Good Book. And even if you were to be elected Vice-President of the United States not one man out of ten thousand would be able to say what your name is on a bet. "All is vanity, saith the Preacher."

By gollies, when the man left us, disappearing down the trail of the chaparral in the dim light of the stars, we felt as though some one had whipped us with a cat o' nine tails. All the pride and pomp of place and circumstance lay like a heap of torn rags on the floor of our little high house in the hills.

And yet, after awhile when we had recovered our poise, we still felt grateful to those who had honored us, little though we deserve the honors. They were kind and their action inspired us to be kind also. And we suppose it must be true that this is all there really is to life—to be kind.

Memories That Will Keep the Heart Warm

The other day we met a friend in the roaring town who told us that he had just spent a wonderfully happy summer without ever once having stepped beyond the boundaries of California. He had crossed great mountains radiant with dawn, panoplied in the purple of the dusk and gemmed with stars at night. He had wound a wandering way through flower-flamed valleys. His ears had heard the Angelus ringing from the ancient towers of San Juan Bautista and from the time-mellowed belfry of Carmelo where the dust of Fray Junipero lies. He saw the sunset roofs of Monterey and had slept under the towering branches of the redwoods in the hills of Santa Cruz.

And now that summer is done and there will be nights when the wild horses of the rain gallop across the mountain peaks he will have memories to warm his heart when he sits at the embers of his hearth.

It is good to meet with one who has memories to warm the heart. And one who is wise to seek beauty and gladness inside the borders of our lovely California.

A Ladder That Reaches to the Stars

Politics is barred from this poor blundering page of the Synagogue the same as it is barred from the public parks. And with this rule the Conductor is well pleased. There is plenty of room for politics on other pages of this, the greatest newspaper in the world.

But the present Presidential campaign brings to light the inspiring fact that for the boy born in our America there is ready for his feet a ladder upon which he may climb to the stars. Though he were born in a hovel or in a roadside ditch, even in a county almshouse, there is no barrier to prevent him from reaching the goal of the White House. And there could be no greater goal than that.

Both the Republican and Democratic candidates for the Presidency were poor boys. Both in their boyhood had to work to earn their daily bread. Both came up from the common walks and ways of life as did Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Garfield and several other of our Presidents.

What a glorious thing it is to be an American.

Here Was Truly a New Good Samaritan

A couple of days ago, or maybe three, when we were again in the roaring town, we went several blocks out of our way to get a bite to eat in the restaurant that has the sign in its window inviting anybody who is broke and hungry to come in.

And we asked the dear folks who run the restaurant if unfortunate wanderers out of work and hungry still continued to drift in. And they answered and said yes, and that the same good average of those who remembered and came back sometime to pay, continued.

And then the woman of the house told us of a man who had dropped in just a few days before with a goodly sized roll of money in his pocket. And the man said to the woman of the house I am neither broke nor hungry, he said, but I see you take care of those who are in that hard fix. And I want to leave some of this money with you to pay for meals for those who come in and have no money of their own.

When we had heard this story we thought again how true it is that the world is not half as bad as people say. And that this man who had left money to pay for meals for those who would have no money of their own was equal in the sight of God to the Good Samaritan that Christ told about. The Good Samaritan who took the man who had fallen among thieves on the road to Jericho to the inn, leaving money with the landlord and saying take care of this poor fellow and if the charge is more than this I will pay it to you on my return.

Thank God there are still Samaritans.

We Receive a Compliment Not Deserved

From a snowy rafter of the Synagogue in far away Russia we have been included in a communication adressed at large "To the Capitalists of the United States." We take it, of course, that a copy of this document has also been received by John D. Rockefeller, Henry Ford, Pierpont Morgan and other capitalists of the United States.

Well, sir, we felt when we received this communication much the same as a little old man once felt under similar circumstances. He was a little old man and had never had money in his possession. But while he was standing on a street corner smoking his corn cob pipe a man came up and asked him if he could change a twenty dollar gold piece. And the little old man answered and said "No sir, but I thank you for the compliment."

How the dickens this committee over in Russia got the idea that the Conductor of the Synagogue is a capitalist, we suppose must always remain one of the unsolved mysteries of the world.

But, it was really a great compliment, wasn't it?

"Take Lunch Along"

In the routine of most workers—office, factory and shop—it is customary for the average man to eat his breakfast and evening meal at home and depend upon luck, the cafeteria or restaurant, for his noonday repast.

Downtown Los Angeles is so excellently equipped with cafeterias and restaurants of the finest type that one who wishes to follow a diet has no difficulty in "sticking to it."

When we get out into the suburbs, however, or when we consider those whose vocation is such that it forces them to travel from place to place, it is much more difficult to follow a sensible diet under such circumstances.

The restaurants of the suburban districts cannot afford to maintain the variety of the downtown cafes and restaurants. Their clientele is too restricted and their income insufficient to warrant diversification.

Those groups who find it difficult to procure a sensible health meal because of geographic circumstances, instead of relying on the haphazard meal at almost any place, ought to take their lunch along.

For those who drive to work, the problem is still much more simplified, as it does not entail carrying a grip.

A visit to any up-to-date hardware store or home-equipment store reveals some very charming, and at the same time, thoroughly practical carry-along equipment for those out-of-town workers who desire to take their lunch along.

There are easily cleanable metal mason jars where the salad could repose and a smaller receptacle for drinks. There are wide-mouthed thermos bottles for warm drinks or soups and porcelain containers for the cooked vegetables, sandwiches or breadstuffs.

Modern inventive genius has made the problem of carrying along lunch simple, indeed. There is no justification for anyone to break dietetic training for the noon meal merely because an up-to-date restaurant or cafe is not at hand.

Colitis

Bowel trouble probably leads all the rest in scope, in severity and in the number of people it affects. One of the leading ailments of the bowel is labeled colitis, meaning inflammation of the colon. It is a general term, like many others, covering a multitude of ills. With it, there may be constipation or sometimes diarrhea.

This ailment may come from a number of causes. It may come as a sequence to acute disease such as typhoid fever or it may come from chronic constipation or from the chronic use of drugs.

The cause is important but far more important is the cure.

Consulting five standard medical textbooks, I have not come across one reliable medicinal agent for its treatment.

Fundamentally, it involves the digestive system and the subject of diet. Unless the trouble is treated from these aspects, I cannot see how it can be overcome.

I have written a leaflet on this very important question, available to friends and followers of "Care of the Body." Send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope with a loose two-cent stamp and I shall be very glad to mail this leaflet to you. I feel confident that it will be of help to you in the solution of this very important and painful ailment.

Congested Liver

Q.: What treatment would you suggest for a congested liver?

A.: The liver, in reality, is an appendage of the digestive tube. Its function is similar to that of the pancreas. It plays a direct part in the process of digestion.

When, through improper diet and sedentary occupations, the digestive system becomes impaired, the liver is one of several organs that is compelled to pay the price.

A congested liver, however, may mean several different types of liver troubles. For instance, we may have a congested, hard, hobnailed liver which may be associated with excessive coffee drinking, with alcoholism, or with the simple hardening processes of old age.

Again, we may have the enlarged liver which one finds in the person who consumes large quantities of food, where fatty degeneration or hypertrophy of the liver takes place.

We may have a liver in which the bile forms gallstones. We may have a liver in which bile does not pass into the intestines—all of which may mean a congested liver.

What should be done, you may ask.

First and foremost, overcome constipation. I especially emphasize this, for, to my mind, it is utterly impossible to correct abnormalities of the liver until one first secures adequate, free, copious, intestinal elimination. If you want to overcome liver trouble, the question of constipation must be solved!

Again we come to the same factors upon which we have relied so often—corrective diet and physical culture work. The physical culture you get every morning over KHJ you will find is admirably adapted toward solving both these problems. If you don't know the exercises, my best advice to you is to tune in tomorrow morning at seven-thirty, the physical-culture period under my jurisdiction.

Dietetic Treatment of Gallstones

Q.: What is the proper diet after an attack of gallstones?

A.: You will generally find that gallstones attack the seemingly well nourished, those who are thirty or forty pounds overweight, and, who, at the same time, are usually partially constipated and exceedingly sluggish.

The foods to be avoided under such circumstances are all drinks except water, all condiments and spices, all meatstuffs and animal foods, and all fats and oils. The fats and oils include corn oil, cottonseed oil, peanut oil and the ordinary olive oil. They also include the fatty fruits such as avocados, olives, bananas, etc.

It would be best to make the diet, under such conditions, as free from fats and proteins as possible.

Pinworms

Q.: Will you please state the cause and the cure of pinworms?

A.: If the pinworms occur in an adult, the first part of the remedy should consist of a thorough intestinal cleansing induced by a fast and by a series of intestinal irrigations.

Most of the intestinal parasites live by two means:

First, they imbed themselves in the intestinal mucous membrane. Second, they live upon the toxic poisons ever present in the digestive tube. They come into the body, principally through pork that has been improperly cooked, also through beef and mutton that have been improperly prepared.

This does not mean that we cannot secure parasitic diseases from the various fruits and vegetables.

In short, no matter in what field it may be, it is essentially a question of internal resistance and external cleanliness. That is, how able is the resistance of your body to withstand either the worms or the eggs of the worms?

However, when worms have already affected the body, the question is, "What is to be done?"

If we know and understand that the primary cause of worms is the accumulation of toxic poisons in the system, half the victory is won.

If you will use no other measure than the simple water fast or the orange juice fast, you will find that the worms will disappear of themselves. That is, they will be discharged and new eggs will not hatch.

If you were to go to your doctor and pay him to "do something" for you, he would probably prescribe a vermifuge.

ascertain why your heart is not leaking and at five, you had better fulfill your engagement with the alienist to ascertain the wherefore of your neurotic symptoms!"

Artificial Stopping of Menstruation

It is a very common experience in the doctor's office to find young women of twenty-five and thirty in whom the menstrual function has ceased completely—this, too, not because of a premature menopause but rather because of a mentrual stoppage induced by vicious therapy and by stupid ignorance.

We must recognize the fact that menstrual abnormalities are present with many thousands of young women.

Our whole civilized process of diet and the fact that one-third of our marriageable women must remain in an unmarried or childless state foster the development of genitourinary congestions. Even with the two-thirds who have become mothers, a large proportion of them also manifest various degrees of pathology, depending entirely upon their experience, their physical life, their sex life and other elements.

Irrespective of the cause, and there are many causes about which I have written and shall write more, the solution to the problem of difficult, painful and abnormal menstruation is most certainly not the complete destruction of this function.

Yet, this is exactly what takes place. Women who have developed a small fibroid tumor, a nodule, a retroversion or misplacement of the uterus, or some other similar abnormality, are given X-ray treatment, radium treatment or are treated with painful drugs whose effect is the complete destruction of the menstrual function.

I have never yet seen a case where the artificial stoppage of menstruation benefited the patient. Yet, it is done—not once but in thousands of cases.

Suppose there is profuse menstruation. Suppose there is a great loss of blood. Suppose the woman does get weak, lose strength, etc. Do we correct the cause by the total destruction of the function? Do we get at fundamentals, at the reasons responsible for the abnormality, by the annihilation of the functioning structure?

Common sense should teach us better. Unfortunately, it does not.

When a woman flows unduly heavily, the destruction of the mucous membrane of the uterus certainly does not find the cause of the profuse flow.

The befouled blood stream, loaded with poisonous toxins, has prevented the normal clotting powers of the blood from functioning.

The rectal pressure of a bloated colon has mechanically irritated the adjoining uterus. Perhaps a growth is sloughing off and thus induces a free and copious discharge.

None of these factors are taken into consideration by those who artificially stop menstruation. Theirs is a straight-line, yet short-sighted reasoning. "Menstruation is profuse or painful. Then let us stop it altogether!"

The neurotic effects of such a policy are manifested two and three years after the X-ray, radium, surgical or medical treatment has stopped the menstruation.

What are some of the consequences of a premature menopause, artificially inducd?

First and foremost, is the terrible sterility. The woman is denied the right to motherhood ever after. It is a horrible price to pay.

Next come the nervous phenomena invariably attendant upon this procedure.

The insane asylums are filled with women who have had complete hysterectomies, that is, the surgical removal of the uterus, ovaries and tubes. The pri- [illegible] a full burden of similar cases.

The constitutional effect and the mental degeneration invariably attendant upon the artificial abortion of menstruation are well known to every specialist in mental and nervous diseases.

Finally, as to the fears which permeate the reasons for artificially stopping the menstrual function—the ever-hovering dread of cancer!

The big question is: Does the artificial destruction of menstruation prevent cancer?

I believe the burden of proof in this case must rest with those who practice this method.

I cannot see how it could affect cancer except to induce it. We know that cancer is an end product of great primary irritation and destruction. What greater irritation and destruction can we give to these tissues than the one induced by the complete destruction of this all-important function?

Even in cases of hysterectomy, where the uterus, ovaries and tubes are removed, the chances are that cancer will be induced in another part of the body, as the great destruction of tissue with the surgical shock involved will augment the condition of carcinosis much more easily—that is, cancer in the blood circulation.

No, no matter how you view it, the abnormalities of menstruation are not solved by the complete destruction of the function.

Find out the cause. If there is a fibroid tumor, such a tumor can be successfully treated without surgery, X-ray, radium or drugs. The body health, itself, can easily take care of it. Reduce it to a size easily tolerable by the body and devoid it of all painful symptoms.

If there is anatomical irritation or inflammation, it is correctable by sanity in diet, hydrotherapy, manipulative treatment, physical culture and the other

CHEN YUNG RETURNS

By JOHN AMES

A Story About One of the Thrilling Exploits of the First Air Detective and a Chinese Smuggler

JIM READING, flying special agent of the Department of Justice, had been resting for a few days at the ranch of his friend Dan Burke, in the Sierra foothills of Southern California.

Burke, whom the government detective occasionally deputized to assist him in pursuing criminals of the air, had helped to clean up the Andrews gang of airplane thieves. The chase had ended when the flying gunmen were shot down into the waters of Puget Sound, after an aerial battle following their pursuit across the continent.

Reading was about to fly back to Washington to deliver his report when he received a telegram from headquarters which caused him to change his plans. Decoded, it read:

"Chen Yung, who escaped from San Quentin Prison after his capture by you, has been seen in the Manchurian cities of Mukden and Harbin, according to advices from the American Consul-General in China. Proceed immediately to Tokio, where the American Embassy is arranging co-operation of Manchurian and Japanese authorities."

Reading smiled as he finished reading the message.

"What will it be, Dan—eagles or our old friend Chen?"

Burke had been trying to induce his friend to remain over for a week of eagle-hunting by airplane in Northern California. But his eyes were now alight with a new interest.

"The eagles won't mind waiting till we tuck Chen back into San Quentin. I'm with you."

"That's good of you, Dan. I've a hunch this is going to be a rather tough job. The Orient is a big place to hunt a Chinaman in."

"When do we start?'

The detective reached for a newspaper. "We'll catch the next fast mail steamer from Seattle to Yokohama."

He ran his eye down the sailing list.

"The General Sherman," he said, "sails day after tomorrow. There's time to fly up there and get a plane aboard."

"But, Jim, the steamer will take ten days. Why not fly out there? We can make it in two hops, by way of Hawaii in less than three days, with fair luck. Those new transport amphibians I've been building for the Navy can do it easily on three motors, if the weather's not too rough."

Reading shook his head.

"Not for this job. We don't want to advertise our arrival in the Orient. But if you've got one of the new ships ready we'll fly it up to Seattle and take it with us. It's a better type for the work we have ahead of us than my bus. If things turn out all right, and we're fortunate in finding Chen Yung in the Asiatic haystack, we can fly back."

Burke was more than a bit disappointed, but saw the force of the detective's objection. Such a flight as he had proposed was no longer a matter of record-breaking, but it was not yet sufficiently common to escape observation.

Reading telephoned Washington to arrange for a special passport for his friend. He himself carried one at all times. He also made arrangements with the steamship company.

Burke busied himself with getting his plane ready to take off early the next morning. He operated a factory and a private airdrome on his ranch, where he built and tested new planes; or, rather, his organization did most of this work for him. He occupied himself mainly with design and occasional test flights, and usually found himself free to accompany Reading when his help was needed.

Still in his thirties, as was Reading, he loved action and adventure better than the drawing board. Besides, he would have ten days on shipboard, over the Oriental mail line across the Pacific, in which to work on design, if he chose.

They flew to Seattle without incident the following day, superintended the loading of the plane that night, and the following morning sailed.

It was the second time that the international criminal, Chen Yung, Occidentally educated Oriental, had escaped since his activities began to enlist the flying detective's interest.

Born a Cantonese some forty years before Reading first met him, Chen had attended universities in the United States and in Europe. He had first learned to fly in the United States, but had taken tuition also on European airdromes.

Chen was said to have come of a family of mandarins, but it was known that he had cut off his queue before the pendant braid began to go out of fashion in China. He was a sleek, tailor-made Chinese, slightly taller than the average southern Chinaman, when he first appeared on the campuses of the universities.

His smile was the bland grin of the Oriental, and no one who had known him before his career of crime began had found anything sinister about him. His almond-shaped eyes had rather heavier black brows above them than is usual in a Cantonese, and probably indicated a Manchurian somewhere in his ancestry. Otherwise his face was smooth and sallow.

So far as was known, he had no subterranean headquarters in the Chinese quarter of any American city. In London, Paris, Berlin and Moscow he had lived at the best hotels. His residence in Los Angeles had been a handsome house in the suburbs.

He became an expert aviator, and at first pretended that he was learning all he could about aviation in order to build up an air force for the Nationalists in China. Then he leased the old Buckley ranch near Los Angeles, and bought planes. Ostensibly, these were the nucleus of a fleet of aircraft he intended to take to China for action in the revolution.

Chen was operating a highly successful game of smuggling narcotics and Chinamen across the Mexican border when Reading was sent down from Washington to see what could be done about it. The flying detective succeeded in capturing a cargo of Chinamen and dope, but Chen and his mechanician and servant Lai Ling escaped.

Later Reading and Burke, using small, fast planes, intercepted a large plane in which Chen and Kai were ferrying another shipment of Orientals and narcotics and this time also captured Chen Yung and Kai Ling. They were sent to San Quentin for long terms.

Now the flying smuggler and his faithful servant were at large again, having escaped from prison and, it was believed, made their way to the Orient in a tramp steamer. The regular passenger ships had been rather too closely watched to permit of their escape across the Pacific in any other manner.

Chen knew the ways of trans-Pacific tramps; they had aided him in his smuggling operations, landing coolies and opium below the Mexican border, which Chen afterward flew into California.

Reading and Burke were seated in a corner of the ship's smoking room. Cape Flattery, the Olympic Mountains and Vancouver Island had been left astern and out of sight, and the General Sherman was plowing steadily through the Pacific Ocean toward Yokohama.

They were about to go down to dinner when a message was brought by the Captain's Chinese steward inviting them to have dinner with him in his suite.

Captain Robert Harkins, who had known the dangers of both sail and steam on the vast stretch of water that lies between the American continent and the Orient, had never ceased to wonder that men were willing to trust themselves to the winds and fogs above the Pacific, in craft the stoutest of which look far too frail for the tasks which their powerful motors drove them to perform.

He was a sturdy and ruddy-faced man, a little past middle life, gray-haired and smooth-shaven.

Greeting them at the door he said:

"It's kind of you gentlemen to come up and keep me company at dinner this evening. I can't go down to the dining-room, for we're running into a heavy fog—very common, they are, on the North Pacific—and I've got to stick fairly close to the bridge."

They returned his greeting and thanked him for his invitation.

"I'm thinking you'll be more comfortable aboard ship tonight than if you had to fly through this weather," said the Captain, with an inquiring smile.

"Undoubtedly,' 'responded Reading, but if we were in the air tonight we might not have to fly through this fog. The atmosphere may be clear two or three miles above it."

"That's true. I hadn't thought of that. In this job I'm too busy thinking of what's down on the water—and that's often enough given me plenty to worry about."

They were smoking after dinner, and conversing between blasts of the fog horn, when the Captain returned from a visit of inspection on the bridge.

CARE OF THE BODY

soft, fatty, flexible abdomens compress them and produce results markedly similar to the lady of yesteryear with her bustles and corsets.

The anatomical picture revealed by the internal abdominal contents is even more marked. The experienced X-ray man sees the effect of this abdominal constriction in his X-ray plates.

Where there should be complete abdominal freedom, constriction occurs and the opening of the intestine is restricted. Constipation easily results. Breathing becomes abnormal and shifts from the abdominal type to the chest variety.

Where a belt is worn, at least such a belt should be worn loosely, or better yet, the newer fashion of flexible buckles or a belt made of flexible leather or rubber is much more to be desired.

At least, under such conditions the harm of great restriction is diminished.

Another cause for such an abdominal ring is surgery.

The abdomen may be compared with a room solidly packed to the ceiling with objects, one resting on the other. Remove one object, especially a lower one, and the others tend to sag in order to fill its place.

A similar condition takes place following surgery. Nothing is put in but something is taken out. The organs immediately adjacent and those farther away tend to fill in the empty space. The abdominal symmetry is distorted and we may have almost any kind of lines on the abdominal surface.

Such sagging, protrusion or prolapsus invariably follows abdominal, pelvic surgery.

The contraction which takes place from scar tissue in surgery is another factor to be reckoned with.

Scar tisuse is, in a sense, pulling tissue. The pull is directed against all other organs which may be attached to the injured peritoneum, ligaments or membranes, many of which support several structures. When an injury is done to part of them, it tends to distort the others.

The most difficult types of abdominal correction to make are those induced by the contractions or distortions following surgery. The abdomen and its contents are the most important parts of the body and care must be both internal and external. When function is established internally and when common sense is used externally, then, and only then, can we build the body beautiful!

Cancer Panics

From the daily Times column of July 10 I have excerpted the following article:

"The necessity of propagating in the general public a veritable cancer 'panic' if cancer mortality is ever to be checked and reduced, was emphasized today by Colonel James F. Coupal, President Coolidge's physician, who addressed members of eleven Wisconsin medical societies.

"The White House physician traveled to Ashland from Superior to urge the attending doctors to disregard campaigns recently started to hush up the dangers of cancer and to minimize its horrors in the eyes of the public. Wide and persistent publicity of its stealthy and malign effects was the only way, Colonel Coupal said, whereby the evil could be combated, since thereby people would be frightened into undergoing medical examination and detecting incipient cancer still in a stage susceptible to cure.

"'Cancer fobia,' or a stage of utter fear of cancer, should be entertained by all persons over the age of thirty-one, which, according to Dr. Coupal, is roughly the demarcation line between the periods in a man's life when he is prone successively to tuberculosis and cancer. Such a state of mind must be spread if cancer is to be successfully fought, he continued, because cancer develops obvious symptoms only when the evil is so far progressed as to be incurable.

"After reaching thirty-one, all persons should be periodically examined by specialists to determine if any cancers are in formation, President Coolidge's physician said. In one single week in Detroit, he added, three hundred and eighty-four unsuspected cancer cases were discovered and over three hundred of these were detected early enough to be completely cured."

Now that you have read it, what do you think about it?

Surely, let us have panics against ingorwing toenails, dipsomania, bunions and halitosis! Let us build up huge fear structures on measles, mumps, dyspepsia, neuralgia, housemaid's knee and "pedunculosis!" Let us fill the thoughts of every man and woman against the terrors of tonsilitis, the horrors of halitosis and the fears of pyorrhea!

We have over five thousand diseases commonly afflicting mankind. Here's a good suggestion. Let us divide each day into ten one-hour periods and instruct all of our vast public as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen: It is now twelve o'clock noon. Please fill yourself full of fears about tuberculosis. At one o'clock don't forget that you should take care of your antidiphtheria inoculation. At two o'clock be sure to get full of dread about spinal curvature and at three, take the day off to get examined for hardening of the liver. At four o'clock your specialist has an appointment with you to

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's feet is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and deranged ligaments complicate matters still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and alter them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the feet be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-feet, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

STOMACH TROUBLES

"There are many symptoms of ulcers of the stomach, some of which are a typical chronic pain which occurs from one to three or four hours following the meal. It is a sharp, cutting excruciating type of pain, present as soon as the stomach has emptied itself of food.

Chemically it is usually due to a hyperacid secretion. We also find a great deal of gaseous distention, a feeling of discomfort, distress and sometimes nausea which is characteristic of this ailment." The above is an extract from editorial by Phillip M. Lovell, N. D.

PEERLESS STOMACAL REMEDY has afforded thousands of people relief from Hyperacidity of the Stomach, Gas on Stomach, Heartburn, and Gastric Distress due to Hyperacidity. On hand at the Owl Drug Co., and other good druggists.

Varicose Veins
Reduced by New Method

Varicose veins are reduced by Dr. Clason's Absorption treatments. You are not laid up or deprived of time from duties or pleasure. There are no scars or evil after-effects. The method is painless and harmless. This is the record of thousands who have had veins reduced to avoid unsightly appearance or prevent the ill-effects of poor circulation. Those already suffering from varicose symptoms, such as pains, cramps or inflamed veins, leg ulceration, leg rash, or swelling, must heal these first. We apply the Viscose Method to heal while you work, or will teach you its use at home. To become familiar with these new methods call if possible, or write for information. Explain your ailment. Office hours: 9 to 5 daily. Tuesday and Friday evenings until 8 p.m. Consultation and examination FREE.

"Captain Harkins, will you tell me whether you were correctly quoted, after your last trip eastward, when the newspapers reported your having heard the sound of airplane motors south of the Aleutian Islands?" asked Reading.

"Yes; reasonably so," replied Harkins; "but I have thought since that perhaps what I heard was a trick of the wind—although I remember, too, that there wasn't much of anything but fog that night. The sea was not rough."

He slowly rubbed a slightly rheumatic knee, and continued:

"It was so foggy that we were sailing by dead reckoning, and none of us saw anything, but most of the midnight watch heard the same thing I did. I was on the bridge with my navigating officer, and he heard it.

"The sound—and for a little while it sounded strong enough to be two or three airplane motors—was first heard off port, and later it didn't seem more than a thousand feet or so above us, and moving eastward. But we never saw anything of a plane, nor did we hear by radio that anyone else had seen one. It was strange."

"You haven't heard of the Russians operating an airplane base on the Kamchatka Peninsula?" asked Reading.

"No; that I haven't. They might be, for all I know, but I've never heard of any ship on the northern route sighting a plane.

"And," the Captain added, "what would a Russian plane be doing more than a thousand miles east of the southern tip of Kamchatka Peninsula?"

"I'm sure I don't know," responded Reading. "It's a strange circumstance. Although planes have been flown across the Pacific via the Hawaiian and Midway Islands, there has been no public attempt to fly nonstop over this route. The only aviators I know of who flew along the Aleutians and Kamchatka were the World Flyers of the American Army Air Service, back in 1924."

"The sea has always been full of strange mystery," observed Captain Harkins, "and now that men are beginning to fly the ocean, I suppose there'll be more than ever."

Later that night Reading and Burke were discussing what the Captain had told them, and speculating on its implications. The detective was speaking.

"Cape Lopatka, the southernmost tip of the Kamchatka Peninsula, which is practically the outpost of southeastern Asia, would be an excellent strategic spot for a Russian air base, either from a political and military, or a commercial point of view."

"But why the secret flying—supposing the captain and his midnight watch really did hear airplane motors?" queried Burke. "If they have really established an important base there, out-of-the-way as it is, it must soon be found out."

"Kamchatka, too," resumed the detective, "might be used as a fuel station for airplanes engaged in smuggling, from either Siberia or the Orient to the United States or Canada."

"Jim, do you think—?"

"We can't do much thinking about it yet. There's too little to go on. For the present we'll have to content ourselves with guessing about possibilities—and our friend Chen Yung, a man of large operations and a larger imagination.

"We'll probably have more to go on concerning Chen after we've talked with those who reported his whereabouts to Washington."

"Our heathen friend has been on the loose for a couple of months now—plenty of time for him to have started something new," remarked Dan.

"I haven't the slightest doubt that he has. He is not oversupplied with Chinese calm and procrastination. He is one of the new Chinamen that have appeared in this generation. Most of them, I think—followers of the late Sun Yat Sen—are honestly working for a modern, recivilized China. But Chen is working for himself, and probably for another movement in the world that didn't originate in China.

"Let me tell you something about Chen that I haven't had occasion to tell you before. Some time ago, when he was still in prison, I stopped briefly at Berlin on my way to Moscow in the matter of the plot against the Panama Canal. I heard about him both at the Tempelhof and the Hodinka airdromes. He spent some time at both places, you know, before he began his smuggling operations over the Mexican border.

"In Berlin he was more than once seen with representatives of the Soviet government working between Moscow and the German capital. He was especially interested in the large planes that Germans—I don't say the German government, but German builders, were making in other countries, including Soviet Russia.

"Probably no one, except Russian authorities and a few Germans, know to what extent planes of advanced size have been built in out-of-the-way places in the vastness of Russia and Siberia.

"In Moscow Chen was seen with Chinese, as well as with Russian Communists. When he left Moscow it was by way of Siberia and Manchuria, passing through Harbin and Mukdén, where he has been seen recently.

"Our State Department," continued Reading, "is not supposed to have secret agents abroad, but a lot of information comes to Washington from our various embassies, especially since Communist propaganda became active the world over. And Washington, you may have noticed in the news, has been keenly interested in Moscow's operations in China."

Fog continued to hang thickly over the North Pacific during most of the voyage to Japan. Reading spent much of the time with maps of the Orient. Burke restlessly tried to design a new combat plane, but made little progress with it. He was too eager for possible adventure in strange lands.

Dan, like most Californians, knew of the Orient mostly through what he had read, and what he had seen of Japanese and Chinese servants, laborers and shopkeepers. He had never been in the Far East, and looked forward almost with the eagerness of an outbound missionary or a school teacher on a touring vacation. He wanted especially to see Japan, Korea and China from the air.

"You will find the air a bit fresher sight-seeing the Orient, more especially China, from an airplane," said Reading, who knew his way about in the East, "but you will find it more amusing and interesting on the ground."

They landed at Yokohama and found that the American Embassy at Tokio, nearby, had made arrangements for reception of Burke's plane as a consignment to the military airdrome. Dan followed it there and superintended its reassembly, while Reading, accompanied by Major Harry Atkinson, the American air attache, who had met them at the dock, went first to the Hotel Imperial, and then to the embassy.

"Ordinarily," the Ambassador said to Reading, "we would not receive such hearty co-operation from the Japanese War Office. They don't like any foreign planes flying over or near their fortified areas. It's not a secret now that they objected at first to our Round the World Flyers landing on Japanese soil. When Erik Nelson offered them blue-prints of the aerial invaders it softened them up a bit, but they are still suspicious.

"It happens that their own agents have been on the trail of Chen Yung, and they are satisfied that he is working in the Orient for the Russian government; they want him caught, and are willing to work with anyone engaged in trailing him. But if they catch him first it will not be necessary to take him back to San Quentin.

"Ordinarily, too, the Manchurian war-lord, so-called, Chang Tso-Lin, wouldn't help us much, but he is fighting Communist influence in China, and knows that Chen is a dangerous agent operating for Moscow against him. Chen will be minus more than the queue he discarded if Chang's outfit gets hold of him. They do those things expeditiously out here."

"Chen Yung," continued the Ambassador, "hasn't been seen lately at Mukden, which is one of the operating bases of Chang Tso-Lin. Our American Consul there says he got out of Mukden by airplane only one jump ahead of Chang's men when he was discovered there."

"Have you had a description of his plane?" asked Reading.

"A general description, which comes from the American Consul. At least he believes it's the one. A Chinese member of his staff, who has been an airplane mechanic, saw a strange plane in a field, which was not an airdrome, on the outskirts of the city. It was a large amphibian, with a wing-spread of over a hundred feet, of an all metal type which Germans are said to be building near Tchita, in Eastern Siberia, for the Russians.

"This Chinese saw a man of Chen Yung's description get into the plane with two Russians and fly off toward Manchouli, near the Siberian-Manchurian frontier, which is only about four hundred miles from the Soviet air base at Tchita."

Happy over getting his plane made ready for flight, Burke met Reading at the hotel late in the afternoon.

"Well, Jim, is the plot thickening any?" asked Dan.

"On the contrary, I think it begins to clear."

The flying detective looked up from his maps.

"Dan, I am about convinced that the agile Chen has been operating a secret airplane service between Russia and the United States, probably across Manchuria via Harbin to Vladivostok, and from there over the Gulf of Tartary, Sakhalin Island, the Sea of Okhotsk, Kamchatka, and south of the Aleutian Islands to some point in the vicinity of Seattle.

"Washington knows that dozens of Communist agents have been getting into the United States through the northwest, but hasn't been able to find out how. All kinds of steamers have been watched, and the Canadian border, but not one agent has been caught. I think our friend Chen could tell.

"He has gone in for bigger game than the smuggling of coolies and dope. It will be a difficult job to hunt down Chen and his air fleet, and I think that now it will depend mainly on whether your plane is better than the one or ones he is using."

"I don't know how good their stuff is, but mine is ready for action, Jim."

The telephone rang.

It was Captain Atkinson. His voice was tense with suppressed excitement.

"We have just got word from the War Office that one of their seaplanes, patrolling the Sea of Japan near the international boundary, sighted a large and strange amphibian, evidently bound eastward from Vladivostok.

"As the stranger cut across the Japanese waters the seaplane tried to overhaul it, but failed. The plane disappeared, flying in the direction of Kamchatka."

"Have you any information as to her probable speed?" asked Reading.

"Not exactly, of course, but the Japs reported by radio that is seemed to be doing better than 120 miles an hour."

"Thank you, Captain. Will you inform the War Office that we will go in pursuit as soon as we can get to the airdrome and take off?"

"Right! It'll be done immediately. And I'll have a fast motor car at the hotel for you in a few minutes."

Reading turned to Burke and relayed the air attache's report. Dan had heard the detective's response, and was already preparing to leave.

"It looks as if we won't see much of the Orient this trip," he observed.

But he seemed happy about it, anxious to get into action after the long loaf on the steamship. He was now to retrace its path, or at least part of it, seven times the speed of the fastest trans-Pacific ship.

"We can cruise at close to 140 miles an hour, and let her out to better than 150 if we have to," said Burke. "and make it nonstop to Cape Flattery in less than thirty-six hours. If the bird we're chasing isn't doing much better than 120, and has to stop at Kamchatka, we'll overhaul her. Let's travel!"

The runway at the airdrome proved barely long enough for the take-off with a load of gasoline and oil sufficient for flight across the North Pacific. Reading had been a bit apprehensive about the smallness of the field for so large a plane—its wingspread from tip to tip of the single plane was 120 feet—but Dan's ship lifted gallantly, and they were off for the long pursuit race.

The weather had been fairly clear, with a 15-mile following wind. Most of the way en route to Kamchatka they had been within sight of the straggling Kuril Islands. The start had been made just before sunset. Dawn was now breaking, and there would be light enough at Cape Lopatka to observe any signs of airdrome activity. The motors were working beautifully.

Bright morning sunlight, not common in this latitude, revealed the southern tip of the Kamchatka Peninsula. Reading, who had been relieving Burke at the controls, now turned them back to his friend and devoted himself to observation. They were flying at an altitude of twelve hundred feet. Reading directed Burke to fly five hundred feet lower.

On the shore the detective soon spotted what was evidently an emergency landing field. There was a hangar, and a hut beside it, but no sign of life. Apparently, if the pursued plane had stopped there, it was only to take advantage of a lonely cache of fuel and oil, and hop off again.

There was nothing to do but continue eastward, and pray, in this ordinarily foggy latitude, for a maximum of reasonably clear weather. Even under bright skies the chance of passing the other plane, if it were still in flight, was enormous, particularly between Cape Lopatka and the Aleutian Islands, and over the vast waste of the ocean between the Islands and the North American Coast.

Mountain Memories

By James M. Warnack

Among your temples many sun-bright days
I wandered, with my glad heart pulsing praise—
Baptized each day by those eternal streams
That rush from snowy heights to vales of dreams;
Watching the feathered beauties in the trees,
Hearing their love notes in each fragrant breeze;
Finding fulfillment of all high desires
In contemplation of your lofty spires;
Seeing an angel's face in every flower,
Feeling the love of God through every hour;
Closing the portals of the mind, to rest,
At eventide, upon your flowered breast.
And now, although I walk the dusty ways
Of city thoroughfares, yet all my days
Are filled with memories that grow more bright
With each succeeding hour; and when the night
Calls me to sleep and blessed dreams, ah, then
I roam my heaven-piercing hills again!

What is the Health Center?

The Health Center of Los Angeles was founded in 1923. Because of the extraordinary success of the treatments administered, it was found necessary to expand the original institution a few months later. Since then its growth and development have been continuous, until the Health Center together with its various subsidiary departments is now recognized as the outstanding institution in the West devoted exclusively to Drugless Healing.

Under the same management and dedicated to the same principles of healing as discovered by Prof. Arnold Ehret, are the Health Cafeterias and Highland Springs Health Resort, near Beaumont.

Located at 1000 West Seventh, one block above Figueroa, is the Health Center Clinic. Here under the supervision of Dr. Newcomb, thousands of men and women have found a new joy of living through bodily healing and health instruction. Such chronic diseases as asthma, diabetes, hemorrhoids, rheumatism, etc., are being regularly and successfully treated. Free examinations and consultation are given daily by Dr. Newcomb.

In addition every Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday evenings at 8 p. m. a free lecture is given in the main hall by Dr. Newcomb, Dr. John H. Decker, Prof. Barclay Severns, F. S. Hirsch, Prof. Amos Beamon, and other authorities. These lectures are free and open to all.

There are four Health Cafeterias, located at 217 West Sixth Street, 639 South Olive Street, 820 West Sixth Street and 1000 West Seventh Street, specializing in delicious, appetizing and nonclogging foods. Here health seekers may find wholesome vegetarian menus, scientifically balanced to fit their individual needs. To appreciate these fine cafeterias, arrange to enjoy your evening meals there. Frequently special programs such as health lectures—motion pictures—physical culture demonstrations, etc. are given immediately after the dinner hour.

Highland Springs Health Resort is a beautiful 320 acre scenic retreat only 80 miles of paved highway from Los Angeles. Its appeal is to the well as much as to the sick and rundown. Its location is famous for the winter climate—mild but invigorating. Every opportunity is available for sun bathing, hiking and health building play. The food served is prepared according to the diet principles of the Prof. Arnold Ehret "Mucusless Diet Healing System." Accomodations at reasonable rates may be had either in hotel or in modern cottages. Ask at the Health Center or any of the Health Cafeterias for free descriptive folder.

Prove this
at our expense

Do you know that medical science has proven that impurities in the system are the cause of most sickness? To remove these impurities many physicians have found that the ordinary laxative is not enough. Something is needed to dislodge old clogging accumulations on the walls of the intestines instead of just flushing out the center of the passage. For this purpose thousands now use Innerclean Intestinal Laxative, the wholesome compound of dried aromatic herbs and vegetables discovered by Prof. Arnold Ehret, founder of the Mucusless Diet Healing System. We want you to prove the superior efficiency of Innerclean. We will send you a generous trial package FREE of charge. Write today to the Innerclean Mfg. Co., 846 E. 6th St., Los Angeles.

not only that portion of the digestive tube not involved in bowel action but the entire body, as well.

A casual study of the functions of the digestive tube shows us that absorption of the intestinal content takes place throughout the entire length of the digestive apparatus during all the time that it is present. The blood stream takes it up and circulates it to every tissue of the body. Thus, indirectly, we suffer a poisonous effect from the absorption of these drug compounds.

If you could realize, the next time you take a cathartic, that it is affecting the heart, the lungs, the blood vessels, the kidneys, the liver—aye, every part of your body, perhaps it might act as a deterrent and you would choose better ways of solving the problem of constipation.

You should understand the general effects of the laxative and cathartic habits, as a whole.

In next week's issue I shall be more specific and deal with the various types of laxatives and their effects on the human body.

I have prepared a special leaflet on constipation. This series of articles deals with the substance of my leaflet but if you are impatient, and want it now, send me a stamped, self-addressed envelope with a loose two-cent stamp and I shall be glad to mail it to you.

Styes

As I am writing this, a case in point illustrates the contention of "Care of the Body" that infections are caused by a toxic blood stream rather than by the presence of pathogenic bacteria.

A young man in his middle twenties lived in New York for many years. He followed the typical New York habits, that is, he paid no particular attention to his diet, eating every kind of "truck" without regard to its health value. The delicatessen had a good customer and the can opener was never permitted to grow rusty.

Somehow or other, he could not explain why it was that every three or four weeks, with an almost invariable precision, one of his eyes would be covered with a stye.

He came to California about eight months ago with an acute attack of "California-itis" which nine out of ten of our tourists get. He also contacted some keen "Care of the Body" fans. The logic of the diet principles of this department appealed to him and ever since his arrival he has been following them.

Throughout this entire period he has not had one solitary stye.

Perhaps it's California but I am more of the belief that it is common-sense in diet.

I am not so much concerned with the treatment and the cure of a stye when it arrives. In the vast majority of cases, merely leaving it untreated would be sufficient for it seldom causes complications and very infrequently does it involve vital structures.

The thing of greatest importance is the prevention of its formation. Therefore, it is the belief of "Care of the Body" that, as in other eruptions, an internally clean body cannot form styes.

In the diet principles espoused by "Care of the Body" we shall find a better solution to this commonly encountered ailment than in the boric acid concoctions, treated almost as a specific for everything affecting the eye from astigmatism to old age.

Abdominal Ring

If we were to make a topographical analysis of the abdomen, that is, that portion of the body north of the point where the two hipbones join (the symphysis pubis) and south of the point where the lower portion of the breastbone ends, we would find an odd picture in many people.

In some few, especially in early youth, we would find an abdomen flat and muscular. As age advances, the contours change. A certain proportion assume a rotund benevolence, an end product of glorious, good feeding.

Others bearing a similar rotundity, have the front protuberance divisible into two halves, upper and lower, divided by a concentric ring, marked in some cases and relatively slight in others.

Superficial appearance means very little to me. It is rather the significance of such topographical analysis as it relates to the abdomen and its function.

The mid-abdominal line is achieved from several sources.

In the "good old days" when bustles, corsets and a shifting waistline were quite the vogue, the continued compression against the soft abdominal tissues ultimately produced sufficient compression to show an abdominal ring.

With men, the custom still persists, as somehow or other, the psychology has gone across that belts are in the mode of "what the best-dressed men will wear." Polite society considers it a distinct violation of its code for one to wear galluses or suspenders.

Consequently, men of corpulence, with

Making Individuality a Box Office Attraction

DOGS, like human beings, have individual peculiarities, and taking advantage of these has enabled C. C. Tryon of Los Angeles, to train a very popular troupe without the use of the whip.

"Observe almost any dog," said Tryon, "and you will discover that he had some habit that is distinctly original. One of my pups that gets the best 'hand' was only a street mongrel when I picked him up. I had noticed that he had a way of putting his nose down between his forepaws when standing. This was a good start for a somersault act, and that dog learned the stunt in half the time required of one that had no natural inclination this way.

"And in this connection I admit a great respect for the mongrel, although I am an admirer of the pedigreed animal and recognize the latter's many superiorities. But the so-called mongrel is often more amenable to discipline and to training. Just why this is would be hard to explain. Perhaps it is because interbreeding, as in some other animals, strengthens the stock. Maybe it's plain gratitude for being fed and well treated. The fact remains that I can do quite a lot with some homeless straggler whose parents have not been overparticular in their family tree."

Some animal acts do not "get over" well with the public because the audience subconsciously feels that the dogs are forced rather than led, and that a whip is always imminent, according to Mr. Tryon. It is not hard to distinguish between dogs that perform their stunt eagerly, and those doing it reluctantly. The eager ones—especially those pert little comedians who seem to be laughing with the audience—are far and away the best drawing cards.

In addition to their peculiar whims, different breeds of dogs are adapted to different acts. For example, it would be a downright hardship for a dog as large as an Airedale to walk around on his hind legs for any length of time, but this breed is very good at pawing, or anything requiring strong and active forelegs. We all know the fox terrier as highly efficient at tugging or pulling things with his jaws—especially skirts and trousers, and occasionally the wash on the line—so this trait is put to good use by Mr. Tryon in his act, in which one of his canine clowns grabs his necktie in an effort to draw the master's attention from some mischief by another cutup. Poodles are very good at sitting up and walking on hind and forelegs, while the Spitz, like the Airedale, but not so clumsy, is a past master of pawing.

A natural alertness in distinguishing between sounds is a great aid to the trainer, and the four-legged pupils soon learn to associate certain sounds with certain actions. For instance, in teaching a dog at table to tell the difference between knife and fork, the word "knife" is spoken distinctly each time the trainer places the subject's paw on the corresponding object, and so on throughout the rehearsal. The process is patiently repeated over and over, until the new actor is "letter-perfect"—or rather "sound perfect." When the beginner is put through the act without touching his paws, he is praised each time he picks the right implement, and mildly scolded for a mistake. All dogs are quick to recognize a tone of praise and one of censure.

An illustration of tugging and pawing. The terrior is best when pulling or tugging at things with his jaws — especially skirts and trousers

Half way over in the somersault act. This little fox terrier practiced so much for the sheer fun of it that he nearly wore himself out.

Poodles are best adapted to standing and sitting. They always appear to be getting a good laugh out of their act.

A back somersault required greatest patience with a lively little fox terrier before the animal gained enough confidence to accomplish the feat without assistance. One must be very cautious in forcing a dog in any stunt in which he might hurt himself, for he will forever after fear an injury, but if his confidence is not shaken he will be a willing, even eager performer. The method employed by Mr. Tryon was to take the terrier in the hands at the chest and lift him over backwards, slowly at first and then faster and faster—each time with the words "Over you go!" until he gained the courage to try it alone. And when he had mastered the stunt, the terrier practiced so much for the sheer fun of it that he nearly wore himself out.

A short-legged little black-and-tan was taught to walk on his forepaws by taking his hind legs and pushing him along like a wheelbarrow. Gradually he acquired enough balance to take a few steps on his own, and in due time was able to "stand on his own legs"—two of 'em.

Two Persian cats travel with the troupe and are a part of the act, but they are not as readily trained as the dogs. However, they have their bit, and get along admirably with the barkers. During one night performance, between acts the white kitty wandered off stage and down a strange alley—and around the corner right into a tough local bull terrier. With more agility than judgment the terrier made chase and was led into the stage entrance, smack into the pack of show dogs. What they did to that bull terrier is still lively local history, and the victim no doubt is still wondering what breed of dog it could be that would take a cat's side in an argument.

Through sickness and loss of pets, Mr. Tryon is obliged to make replacements now and then and train the neophytes, but states he finds no difficulty in getting the proper material. There are so many dogs, with so many different dispositions, that he usually can secure the type he wants on fairly short notice.

The Young Radical of the Nineties

"Personally, Miss Armitage, I see no reason why ladies should not have equal suffrage with the men."

"Oh, Mr. Swayne!"

"Did I startle you? I beg your pardon. I am afraid I have some rather—well, radical ideas. For instance, why is a young man expected to sow his wild oats, while his sisters are models of decorum?"

"Mr. Swayne! Really!"

"And another thing: How can you play a lively game like tennis in those long skirts? Couldn't the ladies shorten the hem to just above the ankle?

"Mr. Swayne—I'm—I'm almost afraid of you! You seem to know so much about the world."

"Miss Armitage . . . have you ever, by any chance, wanted to smoke a cigarette, just to see what it was like?"

(There is a loud shriek, followed by a muffled thud as Miss Armitage collapses gracefully on the floor.)

CARE OF THE BODY

By Philip M. Lovell, N.D.

Lectures

Dr. Lovell lectures on care of the body each Thursday afternoon, 2 o'clock at the Southern California Manufacturers' Exhibit, 130 South Broadway, Los Angeles, California.

Admission is free and open to the public. No collections are made and nothing is for sale.

These lectures are an extension of the health education of "Care of the Body" department and are held under the auspices of The Times.

Come and bring your friends.

Also "listen in" to Dr. Lovell's weekly radio talks over KHJ, 4 p.m., every Thursday.

Epidemics

During the past few days the newspaper has contained a number of items concerning a plague of dengue fever in Greece. Influenza has also been taking its toll amongst certain groups in Northern Canada.

As these accounts reach us we often wonder as to the "why's" and the "wherefore's" of the great epidemics.

Why is it that resistance to disease is swept aside and whole peoples debilitated and destroyed?

As far as investigation or research has revealed, there is no known, plausible, reasonable cause of epidemics—this, notwithstanding our enormous bacteriological researches.

Today, we are just as helpless as we were five thousand years ago. In the face of an epidemic, our quarantines, disinfectants and fumigations are relatively ineffectual when a great plague sweeps either a geographic or a racial unit.

From the action of plagues there is much information that we may deduce.

Susceptibility and immunity are racial, geographic and climatic. We know, for instance, that those people living high in the mountains are comparatively immune from the endemics or epidemics of respiratory diseases.

On the other hand, there are epidemics such as measles, typhoid fever, and so on, which affect primitive people and from which the civilized or white groups are relatively immune.

When we study the racial, geographic and climatic habits of many peoples, some light at least is thrown on the subject of immunity or susceptibility. We know, for instance, that peoples living in warmer climates lead a great deal more out-of-doors life than those living in colder climates.

Then, when we observe the other habits of the different peoples, more interesting data are secured. Diet, for instance, is a racial, as well as a personal equation. Macaroni and spaghetti are dominant items in Italian life, hot meatstuffs and highly spiced meat concoctions in Mexican life, sauerkraut and sausage meats in German life, dried fish and rice in Chinese and Japanese life, and so on with each country.

There are not only national dishes but national habits.

Alcohol consumption plays a very important part in lessening immunity. The per capita consumption of tea and coffee with their alkaloid depressants affects national as well as individual resistance.

The sex habits of the great peasant groups in many countries often determine their resistive powers.

Each individual nation is a composite of many systems of habit—culture, diet and physical development.

In the complexity of these various equations, I have no doubt but that ultimately we shall be able to trace some of the roots from which epidemics spring. It is my firm conviction, however, that when the entire world knows and understands the common-sense methods of natural simplicity of living in all fields—dietetic, mental, sexual, physical and hygienic—epidemics will be a thing of the past.

In education we find a more fertile field than in the bacteriologist's microscope or in the blood effusions of innocently slaughtered animals.

Constipation

Series No. 5

This week's article on the subject of constipation is one of the most important presented to you this far. In the previous issues the anatomical and physiological distortions were explained. Now I want to take up the commonest method by which most people solve the problem of constipation—the universal custom of taking drug laxatives.

Viewing the problem in its broader sense and ignoring the type of laxative, the mere idea, itself, is illogical and inconsistent.

If constipation is the muscular inability of the digestive tract to discharge waste, is it reasonable to presume that

(a) This muscular inability is restored by the consumption of a foreign drug?

(b) The absence of the drug was the original cause of constipation and thus, by putting in the drug, we restore to the body that which it lacked? Or

(c) The laxative compensates in any way for the various inefficiencies of diet, physical culture, nervous depletion, etc., which are the fundamental causes of constipation?

In a broader sense, even the most enthusiastic user of drug laxatives is bound to admit that he finds in them no cure, that the fundamental condition of constipation persists no matter how long or how faithfully he has taken the purported remedy.

We cannot ignore the fact that the laxative taken now is intended only for the purpose of procuring a bowel action at the immediate time.

If laxatives had, in any sense, a beneficial effect upon a lazy bowel, it would be fair to assume that the longer one took them, the less would be the dosage until one could taper off after normal function was established.

It needs no demonstration to prove the contrary to be true: viz., that the longer we take them, the bigger must be the dosage and the less effective the type of drug used.

Not only this, but where we have started with a simple cathartic of small harm, we must soon change it to laxatives having a more and more vigorous action.

If we were to make a chart or a graph, the laxative tendency would evidence itself in three directions:

(1.) The change of the type of laxative to one of greater and greater potency.

(2.) The gradually increased dosage as the intestines become immunized against its action.

(3.) The increased concentration of each dose as the lighter potions fail to act.

One of the main general objections to the entire class of laxatives is their quasi habit-forming nature. Each dose we take lays the foundation for the next.

With the increased debility of the intestine comes the increased necessity for the artificial laxative.

The Pure Food and Drug Act, in its campaign for honest labels, has ruled that one may not use the word "Cure" in a patent medicine compound unless it can be proved. Consequently, in the literature dispensed, you will never encounter the direct statement of the advertiser—that his nostrum is a cure for constipation. He uses indirect language. He states that it relieves constipation, or it overcomes it, or a score of other words tantamount to the word "Cure" which he is forbidden to use by the Pure Food and Drug Act.

He gets around it, also, by his testimonial plan in which purported cures are exploited and the word is thus attributed to the statement of the user instead of the manufacturer.

The facts nevertheless remain that a medicinal cure of constipation, patented or otherwise, has not yet been discovered, and to my mind, never will be, for it is beyond the domain of chemistry.

Then, may I ask, if the laxative does not cure constipation, why, in the name of common-sense, should we take it?

Perhaps I am unfair in this question, as I doubt whether there are many people of good intelligence who sincerely believe that in a patented drug they will find a cure for constipation.

The problem before most laxative users is entirely that of securing immediate bowel action.

There is not a habitue of purgatives who does not deplore the necessity of taking them and who would not quit if he only could get natural action without them.

Again, viewing the problem from still another light—as to the consistency and the logic behind the use of laxatives.

They are taken in order that the bowel may discharge the waste poisons. Note that I say the "bowel," not the stomach, nor the small intestines, nor the ascending or descending colon, but the bowel. Then again, why in the name of common-sense, should we drug the stomach and the ensuing thirty odd feet of digestive tube in order to have a function performed with the last five or six inches?

Yes, that is exactly what we are doing each time we swallow a laxative, doping

THE VICIOUS CIRCLE

By Fannie Heaslip Lea

No One Doubted Constance's Ability to Take Care of Herself. She Did as She Pleased, and as For Being Lonely—She Never Was. She Had Everything She Wanted

EARLY dusk, in a room with a fire—a small, delightful, intimate room. Flowers, faint-scented roses, in silver and porcelain bowls—the dark gleam of an open piano—the rosy curve of a satin cushion in a slender chair-arm—books, not many, delicately laid upon little tables—pictures, not many, delicately accenting cool green walls. The room of a woman with fastidious preferences and means to satisfy them. The room of a woman with a romantic heart and a not too exacting head. Sophy Gayden's room. Pretty, fragile, wistful Sophy curled in one corner of a palely brocaded Regency couch, staring at the fire with eyes like wind-flawed sea-water . . .

Chopin might have played to her, De Musset made her a poem, Fragonard painted her blond, slim loveliness.

Lacking Chopin, De Musset, and Fragonard, she hummed a snatch of rebellious syncopation, '—Doan' luv nobody . . . cause it ain' wuth while . . ." yawned, with two white arms flung above her head, and frankly endeavored to make an end of the discussion in which she was engaged.

"So that's that!" she said. "Husbands—Bless 'em! When they're not around."

The woman who sat across the fire from her, dark and cool and clear-cut as Sophy was fair and ephemeral, put out a hand of disgusted protest.

"You talk like one of these cheap modern novels."

"Well," said Sophy, unperturbed by her sister's comment, "I am modern, and I dare say I'm cheap, at times. Who isn't? It's an enormous relief. Try it yourself! Do you good!"

"Thanks," said Constance Wyatt curtly. "I retain a few ideals."

"They've never got you anything, have they?" inquired Sophy, with languid disinterest.

Her thrust drew blood. Constance gave battle at once, leaning forward in her chair so that the firelight fell with ruddy distinctness upon the clean, close-grained pallor of her skin, unrouged and unpowdered; upon the dark, smooth sweep of her hair under a small business-like hat; upon her hands, fine, strong, ringless hands.

"Just what do you mean?" she retorted coldly. "I have everything that I want."

"Have you?" said Sophy. "I wonder!" She added, in the face of the other's obvious annoyance: 'Oh, I don't doubt your word, old dear, but aren't you, perhaps kidding yourself—along the line?"

"I don't often 'kid myself'," said Constance coldly. "I flatter myself I have a reasonably clear outlook."

"What a nuisance!" drawled Sophy. "How can you stand it—in that case?"

"Stand what? Don't be ridiculous, Sophy!"

"Oh, things in general. You don't read much poetry, do you? There's a thing of Housman's about clear sight. It goes, 'Could man be always drunken—with liquor, love, or fights . . . Lief would I rise at morning—and lief lie down at nights'."

"Edifying!" was Constance's only comment.

Sophy finished in her soft slow voice, without picking up the gage. "'But men at times are sober—and think, by fits and starts . . . And when they think, they fasten—their hands upon their hearts.' That's rather good—don't you see, Connie? Moral—don't think!"

"The real immorality of life is not to think," said Constance.

"Lovely line!" murmured the younger sister. "And, like most lovely lines, utterly blah. If you'd said 'not to feel,' it would be a little truer—not much."

"You've lost your ability to recognize morality and immorality when you see them."

"Why, Connie darling?"

"Because your whole life is a spineless evasion—"

"Thanks—many thanks!"

"—Of all a woman owes herself."

"Oh, that! Oh, that again!" sighed Sophy. "Meaning Lowell? Connie, you're a pearl without price. You sit on an idea like a hen on a china egg. I should never have talked to you about Lowell, really! I should have let the fox gnaw, and all that, in ladylike silence. I might have known you'd want me to do something about it. And there really isn't anything to do—anything intelligent—anything that would help."

Constance said grimly, "If your self-respect doesn't demand that you do something, when you say yourself you no longer love him—"

"Why, did I say it?" mourned Sophy.

"Why shouldn't you say it—if it's true?"

"But why make such a fuss about it? It isn't possible, Connie, that a woman of your age—and experience—no, sorry! didn't mean to be a cat—a woman of your youth and experience, supposes that there is such a thing as a happy marriage?"

"There've been a good many books and poems written to that effect."

Sophy laughed. Her laughter had a whispering sweetness. It had as well a dissonant edge of mockery. She said gently: "The real conspiracy of silence. We none of us tell all we know on that subject."

"Is there—another man?"

Sophy shrugged amusedly. "No."

Constance said doggedly. "But you admit you're not happy with Lowell."

"I'm not happy with anybody—if you will have it. I've stopped believing in happiness. It's silly to expect it."

The other persisted. "But you are definitely unhappy with Lowell."

"Unhappy?" said Sophy lightly. She began to laugh. All at once she put up her hands and covered her face. "Unhappy? . . . Connie . . . don't be a fool! Can't you tell—without my making a scene about it?"

"Poor child!' said Constance softly.

Sophy dropped her hands in her lap and relaxed against her cushions. "Oh, I dont know. There's nothing new. We row, as we've always done, over the same old things, with the same old results. We're miles apart in everything but actual house-room. I no longer interest him—he jars on me, unspeakably. Sometimes we go along placidly enough for days at a time, then something snaps, and we have the most idiotic, vulgar, cruel scenes. But what is there to do about it? I don't love any one else. I don't even believe in love any more. I'm as well off with Lowell as anywhere. What would I get in exchange, for giving up all this?" She glanced about the room.

"Your self-respect," said Constance—and let the words sink in.

"Self-respect," said Sophy bitterly, "and loneliness."

"Self-respect is worth everything else in the world."

"You're a different sort of woman, Connie. You're not like me. You don't care for the same things that I do."

"I don't care enough for anything to pay for it as you are paying for this."

"No?" said Sophy sweetly. "I wonder! Not to be too feline, dearest—did you ever really have the chance?"

Constance said, with icy control, "I have been too busy to go in search of the kind of man I might have considered as a husband."

Sophy interjected in a caressing legato, "It isn't my experience that one has to go in search of them, dear."

"And as for those who offered themselves," Constance finished doggedly, "I have been unwilling."

"Weighed in the balance and found wanting," murmured Sophy.

Constance reminded her, with an air of austere reluctance: "You may have forgotten—there were one or two men—who used to . . . when you were off at school—There was Robert Wells—"

"Oh, Connie! That old man!"

sent out from Paris that the whole department shall be depopulated. As to the foreign invaders, they have seen a new light; Kosciusko has organized Poland in revolt against partition, and Austria and Prussia have their hands full there, and leave France alone; when the emigres protest they are asked: "Then you really think we are making war to please you?" On December 18, 1793, the French recapture Toulon from the English, through the initiative and bravery of a young artillery-officer called Bonaparte. Everywhere the revolutionary armies are victorious; the Rhineland is held by France, and the states along the river adopt the new institutions of the republic. The news comes to Paris that the invasion is no more, that the counter-revolution is no more; slowly, inarticulately, rises from the people an appeal for order and peace. The Place de la Revolution is tired of the guillotine; the bloody knife must be removed from place to place. "Everywhere," writes a contemporary, "the people are weary of the Revolution."

Camille Desmoulins, with the courage of a poet, is the first to protest. On December 5, 1793, appears the first number of his paper, Le Vieux Cordelier; the fifth number ends with Montezuma's word, "The gods are athirst." It is sold by the thousands. Everybody sees behind Desmoulins, Danton; Desmoulins is "the flower that grows on Danton." In Danton's room underneath Desmoulins's, is held the council that aims to open up the prisons and put an end to the Terror. Hundreds importune the weary lion, now having his claws pared by marriage, to come back into public life, and lead the forces of moderation against Robespierre; and, though utterly worn out, he consents. The thought that the Incorruptible will guillotine him never occurs to him; when some one predicts it he says, "If I thought he had the bare idea I would eat his bowels out."

But Robespierre has the idea. "If we do not guillotine Danton," said St. Just, "we shall be guillotined ourselves." Perhaps he was wrong; there was something gentle in the giant, as there is something ferocious in the microscopic Robespierre; and he is too busy loving his wife to find time to hate even the "sea-green monster." "Danton," Condorcet says, "has that rare faculty of neither hating nor envying genius in others."

On March 30, 1794, Panis, juryman of the Revolutionary Tribunal, comes secretly to Danton at night to warn him that the Committee of Public Safety has decided to arrest him. "Well, what then?" "You must resist." "I am sick of shedding blood; I had rather be guillotined than guillotine." "Then you must leave France." Danton shakes his head. "You cannot take your country with you on the soles of your feet." He goes to sleep, and a few hours later he is awakened by the gendarmes, who arrest him and Desmoulins, and Fabre d'Eglantine.

The giant is dazed. "Messieurs," he says to the men whom he finds in jail, "I hoped soon to have gotten you out of all this; but here I am myself, and one sees not where it will end." Camille weeps, Danton philosophizes. "This time twelve-month I was moving the creation of the Revolutionary Tribunal. I crave pardon for it of God and man. They are all brothers of Cain . . . I leave the whole business in a frightful welter; not one of them understands anything about government. Robespierre will follow me. Oh, it were better to be a poor fisherman than to meddle with the government of men!"

The next morning they find themselves before the Tribunal and crowded galleries, standing in the dock with bribe-takers and thieves. "What is your age, and place of abode?" asks Fouquier-Tinville. "My name is Danton, a name tolerably well known in the Revolution. My abode will soon be in the void; but I shall live in the pantheon of history." "My age," says Camille, "is that of the good Sansculotte Jesus; an age fatal to revolutionists." Camille is thirty-four, Danton thirty-five. As the trial proceeds, Danton takes into his own hands the defense of himself and his comrade; he refutes evidence, catches witnesses in lies and covers the prosecution with scorn. The president of the Tribunal calls him to order, but he roars back: "What is it to thee how I defend myself? The right of dooming me is thine always." The galleries, though filled by ticket with the friends of Robespierre, are moved to admiration, then to sympathy; they begin to murmur. The president adjourns the trial until the morrow.

The Committee of Public Safety is determined that Danton shall die, and instructs Hanriot to arrest Fouquier-Tinville if he fails to convict. Fouquier hears of it, and sends a plea to the Committee to forbid Danton to speak in his own defense. The decree is issued; and on the following morning, without further trial, the jury announces the sentence: "Death this day." The galleries are about to overthrow the Tribunal when Vadier, enemy of Danton, disperses it with the announcement that a large amount of grain and wood have arrived at Bercy.

In the tumbril Camille raves, tears his shirt, and clutches in his fingers a lock of his sweetheart's hair. Danton sings and laughs, being now partly insane. "Vile Robespierre!" he cries, "the scaffold claims you too. I have dug the grave, and you will follow me." At the foot of the guillotine he is heard to murmur "Oh, my wife, my well-beloved, I shall never see thee more, then!"—but, interrupting himself, "Danton, no weakness." When his head falls into the basket the people mutter among themselves: "Is not this a sure sign that the Revolution is nearing its end?"

Exit Robespierre

Perhaps it is some consolation to the people to see their great leaders die, for they themselves are dying, not with heroics, but by starvation. The Law of the Maximum has a strange result: the farmers, forced to sell their wheat at a low price while the prices of all things else are daily rising through the depreciation of the currency, restrict their sowings, and feed their surplus to their cattle; the bakers shut up shop and go away; the factories, shorn of foreign markets by war and the English fleets, and shorn of half the domestic market by the reduced purchasing power of the people, close their doors and throw a hundred thousand workmen out of work. From 1792 to 1796 one million Frenchmen die of starvation or malnutrition; in 1794 a contemporary reports having seen within ten minutes seven persons fall down with hunger in the streets, one child dies at a dry breast, and a woman fighting with a dog for a bone. Many live on garbage, or on the blood that runs out from the slaughter houses, many kill themselves.

Under this stress the Commune in Paris begins to think in socialistic terms. Chaumette suggests that the government operate all factories and farms that have suspended under the Maximum; some sections propose to take over the factories themselves. The Convention, receding from proletarian views, denounces these proposals, and establishes the death penalty for any violation of the rights of private property; war begins between the Convention and the Commune. Jacques Roux, ex-priest, attacks the resurrected dictatorship of the bourgeoisie, calls for the prohibition of unequal wealth, and the confiscation of all surplus goods for the people. The Convention orders his arrest and he kills himself by repeated stabbing.

The Convention refusing to abrogate the salaries of clergymen, the Commune takes the matter into its own hands; in every section it dedicates one church to reason, and issues orders that all other churches be closed. The Convention, impressed with the vigor of the movement, abolishes the Christian calendar, and substitutes for it a calendar planned to disrupt the sabbath-religious habits of the past. The new week is to consist of ten days, the new month of three weeks, the new year of twelve such months, named not after old gods, but after moods of Mother Nature. At the end of the year are added five or six Sansculottides as Revolutionary feast days in place of Christmas Week. The new calendar is adopted October 5, 1793, and lasts fourteen years.

Robespierre does not like it; once in early youth he talked with Rousseau at Ermonville and imbibed the religion of the Savoyard Vicar; in 1792 he proposed a la Contrat Social, that the Convention should make a belief in God and immortality prerequisites to the Jacobin Club. On November 21, 1793, he makes a mighty speech against the worship of reason; on December 6, he secures a decree forbidding all measures against the liberty of religions; at last, in the spring of '94, he persuades the Convention to announce that "The French people recognize the Supreme Being and the immortality of the soul." On June 8 he holds with great ceremony a "Feast of the Supreme Being;" but an ill wind blows away the fire arranged to consume the symbol of atheism, and Robespierre's speech, having more wind than fire in it, fails to inspire his auditors. "You begin to bore me with your Supreme Being," says Billaud.

Nevertheless Robespierre is right; the people yearn for their old gods, and the atheism of Commune leaders draws away from them the popularity which made them a terror to the Convention; when Robespierre secures the decree for the arrest of Hebert and Chaumette on the charge of accepting English bribes, the sections refuse to rise in defense of their captains; and the guillotine cuts them down unhindered. The people stay away from the execution, but the rich pay high prices for seats close to the knife; they understand that this is the end of the proletarian challenge, and thereafter the Revolution is theirs.

It is only necessary to dispose of Robespierre himself. But his own friends will attend to this; for now that Danton and the Commune are gone internal friction breaks out in the Committee of Public Safety; Collot and Billaud turn against St. Just, Couthon, and Robespierre; like a guiding straw in the wind is the resignation of Rebecqui from the Convention because Robespierre had not yet been guillotinad—who would have dared to speak so a month before? Too long Robespierre has made himself appear as the Revolution, as the Terror; now that these have exhausted themselves he, their symbol, remains on the scene only by a violation of that logic which to him is god.

On May 25, 1794, a man named Ladmiral arrives to assassinate the Formula; he sits down in a front seat at the Convention while Robespierre speaks; but the speech lasts too long, Ladmiral goes to sleep and Robespierre lives. On July 26 Tallien received a note from his doomed Marquise de Fontenay, containing a dagger and these words. "Tomorrow they kill me. Are you then only a coward?" On that day Tom Paine escapes from jail and the guillotine. On that evening Collot finds St. Just at the offices of the Great Committee writing something. "You are drawing up our accusation?" "Well, yes," answers St. Just, betraying his youth; "you are not mistaken." And to Carnot, organizer of victory: "I have not forgotten you in it; I have dealt with you in a masterly fashion."

On July 27 (the Ninth Thermidor,) as Robespierre leaves the house, his landlord DuPlay warns him of danger, but Robespierre reassures him: "The Convention is in the main honest—all great masses of men are honest." Apparently he is not quite unlovable, his landlord is devoted to him, St. Just worships him, his brother will die for him.

But it is St. Just who that day opens the door to tragedy. He begins to read, in the Convention, a bitter speech viciously calculated to end in accusations and arrests. Tallien, knowing that his life was at stake, sprang to the platform, brandishing the Marquise's knife; if the Convention dare not strike the tyrant, then I myself dare." The Convention is with him; cries of "Tyranny, Dictatorship, Triumvirate" come from the floor. Robespierre rises, pale and trembling, to defend himself; but the chairman refuses to recognize him. He turns to the Plain: "To you, oh virtuous men of the Plain, I appeal," he begins, but the Plain is as cold as stone. He turns to the Right, but some one cries, "Keep back! Condorcet and Verniaud sat here." The chairman bids Robespierre be silent, but he shrieks: "President of Assassins, I demand speech from you for the last time." He tries to speak, but his lips are dry, and he can only whisper; "The blood of Danton chokes him," cries a Deputy. "Arrest him!" shouts another; and the Convention, but yesterday his slave, rises almost en masse to the call. Robespierre's younger brother stands forth bravely: "I am as guilty as my brother; I share his virtues. I ask that my arrest be decreed with his." The Convention humors him with its consent.

So they are led off to jail—Robespierre, St. Just, Couthon, Le Bas, and Robespierre, Jr. The Commune sends out orders to all prisons to take in no more prisoners that day; the arrested men wander from jail to jail, and at last find themselves at the City Hall. Workingmen from the sections come to their defense, directed by Hanriot, who is dead drunk; other workmen who remember Chaumette and Hebert, come to attack. The prisoners try to escape; bullets fly, and one strikes Robespierre on the mouth; all night through he lies on the floor wounded, covered with dirt and blood, the bones of his jaw filling his throat; cowards insult and bully him in his helplessness.

At six in the morning the tumbril takes him, with St. Just proud and handsome, with Augustin Robespierre dying from his wounds, with Hanriot still drunk. Le Bas has cheated the guillotine with a bullet. Gendarmes point with their swords to tell the crowd which of the prisoners is the tyrant. A woman jumps up on the cart and cries, "The death of these intoxicates me with joy. Criminal, go down to hell with the curses of all wives and mothers." He says nothing.

At the guillotine a fashionable crowd turns out to see him die. Windows are let at fabulous prices; the ladies wear full dress.

On the scaffold Samson wrenches from him roughly the bandage that has held together his shattered jaw; Robespierre shrieks with pain. Four times the knife falls upon four men; and the Terror is no more.

BUILT-IN STEEL ARCH

Modish
AND Comfortable!

For Fall 1928, Dr. A. Reed's MOVABLE ARCH SHOES achieve new triumphs of style. Really, it is refreshing to see how truly smart corrective shoes can be. And Dr. A. Reed's MOVABLE ARCH SHOES are the most advanced scientifically for the successful relief and correction of callouses on the sole, weakened arches, Morton's Toe, metatarsalgia and other foot ills. The illustration showing construction explains why.

"One of the leading men in town," said Constance, with dignity and some annoyance.

"A widower—wasn't he—with four or five children he couldn't manage?"

Constance continued, ignoring the obvious inference. "Then there was John Waters—"

"'Many waters'," sighed Sophy, twisting a large and milky pearl upon the little finger of her left hand, "'cannot quench love'—However, as I remember John, he might have had a chance," She added before the darkening of the other's eyes, "He married, didn't he? John I mean."

"A girl from out west," said Constance briefly.

"Connie, were you ever really—There was nothing between you, was there?"

"An understanding—of sorts," said Constance. "I—changed my mind."

"One does," Sophy admitted, "mostly too late, however!"

She said, a moment later out of a faintly hostile silence leaning forward to stare into her sister's face, white hands clasping and unclasping themselves about the slender knees: "Connie, don't hedge—and don't lie to me about it. I need to know. I'm not asking—conversationally. Are you—happy? Are you—satisfied?"

"Ab-so-lutely!" said Constance Wyatt, without an instant's hesitation. She leaned back in her chair, taut in every line.

"Down there in that apartment of yours—all by yourself—no one but a maid to say good night and good morning to you?"

"It's a very comfortable apartment."

"Very attractive" said Sophy, with muted politeness. "Oh, very attractive. no doubt! But, Connie—alone!"

"Better be alone than with some one you don't love and who doesn't love you," said Connie grimly.

"I wonder!" said Sophy, in her characteristic phrase. "After all, its the loneliness that terrifies me most. And, when I think of living alone—"

"You'd rather be tied to a strange man for life?"

"Ibsen's a bit out of date, old dear," returned Sophy, with the ghost of a smile. "Anyhow, we're strange men—and strange women—to each other, at best ,aren't we? That's something you don't know, you see. Never having tried it."

"At least, I possess my own soul," said Constance coldly.

"At least, you can pretend that you do," corrected Sophy. She drew a long, tired sigh. "Well, I may be on your doorstep, yet."

"When you do," said Constance quickly, "you'll be welcome. And there'll be a place for you and a job for you."

"Don't be too explicit, old dear!" suggested Sophy. She added, obviously startled, "I hear Lowell, I think."

Lowell, one inferred, was not given to appearing thus early. He came into the room on the heels of his name, a slim, dark young man of irreproachable grooming and carriage, but with something sullen and stubborn in the heavy lines about his mouth, the level, dark line of his brows.

"'Lo, Connie!" he said pleasantly enough. "Didn't know you were with us. 'Lo, Sophy. I'm going out to the club. Came home to get my things.'

"Back for dinner?" inquired Sophy, without moving.

"Haven't decided—don't wait.

She said, still without turning her head to look at him. "There's a letter on the table for you."

Lowell retrieved it without a word.

"Nice letter?" inquired Sophy presently.

"Very nice, indeed," said her husband, putting a slender gray missive back into the envelope.

"Don't you think," said Sophy languidly, "you might suggest to her—that she send her—effusions—to your office? In a little better taste, perhaps."

She got up and crossed the room to him, trailing a mermaid tail of gray-green chiffon. There was an interlude of low-voiced conversation that Constance felt, rather than heard. At the end of it, lifting here eyes inopportuntely, she glimpsed a final bit of pantomime. Sophy smiling a rather cruel, yet a wistful, little smile, all at once put up her hand to Lowell's hair. Constance had a swift-stabbing intuition that Sophy's gesture was an old one. Then that feeling faded before a sharper one of embarrassed compassion for her sister. Because Lowell winced. Incontestably he jerked away from contact with those mocking, seeking fingers.

"Well, got to change!" he said abruptly, and was out of the room and mounting the stairs before the words were cold.

Sophy came back to the fire. Constance sat there staring at her own neat patent-leather toes.

"Must you go, ducky?" said Sophy. "He isn't getting off as easily as that!" She was trembling with anger. Under its faint glamour of rouge, her face was startlingly white.

"I'll be running along," said Constance. She added, irrepressibly, "Nobody has to stand this sort of thing who doesn't want to."

"Oh, yes, I know!" said Sophy. "Thanks, old girl! It's all been done before, you know."

"That doesn't make it—decent," said Constance.

"Life isn't decent!" said Sophy. "Whatever made you think it was? Oh, Connie—you've got a place to yourself—and nobody to hurt you—why don't you clear out and leave me alone?"

So Constance cleared out.

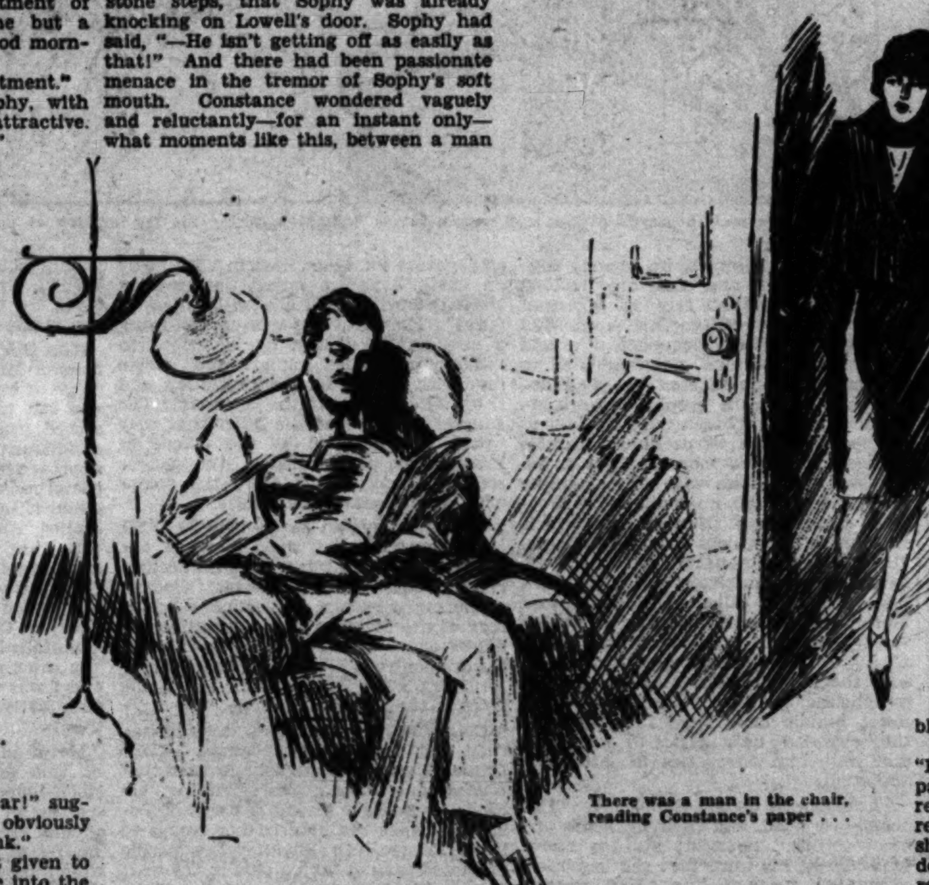
She knew, as she went down the gray stone steps, that Sophy was already knocking on Lowell's door. Sophy had said, "—He isn't getting off as easily as that!" And there had been passionate menace in the tremor of Sophy's soft mouth. Constance wondered vaguely and reluctantly—for an instant only—what moments like this, between a man and a woman, might mean. Flame that seared the living flesh—wounds that went to the bone—but flame and wound, both, baring the heart of life. At least, in such a moment, the blood must run hot and the pulse beat hard. At least there must be the blinding intimacy of conflict.

Constance's mouth took on a rigid line. She said to herself "It's all too disgusting!" She hailed a taxi and got into it. She had remembered, in what connection was not quite clear to her and she did not trouble to trace it, that she had not in several days seen Irene Smith, and Irene, since her trouble, depended rather pitifully upon Constance.

Sunset was flushing the end of the street. There was in the clear cool air an intangible whisper of autumn, the unseen, unspoken hint of sadness that only an October dusk can bring.

Constance gave the brim of her hat a tug and shook the fur about her shoulders closer. An utterly irrelevant line of Browning sang through her mind—something about Venice, its dear, dead beauties. "What's become of all the gold, used to hang and brush their bosoms? . . . . I feel chilly and grown old!"

Chilly and grown old—a ridiculous feeling. Constance decided sharply that she would not again have lobster for luncheon. One had only oneself to thank for a gloomy outlook afterward. She sat erect and unsmiling while the taxi lurched eastward, one unbeautiful block after another.



There was a man in the chair, reading Constance's paper . . .

Irene Smith was at home—up four flights and down one step into a small, dark room of naked ugliness, a room with a cheap phonograph in a golden-oak case, with a sleazily-covered pink and purple cushion on a couch that was also a bed. A room with greasy little jars of cosmetics on a rickety dressing-table and a picture of Irene herself, in a rose gown and a veiling of tulle.

Irene was huddled by the window, in a golden-oak rocker of doubtful lineage, regarding the sunset.

A rather appealing young creature, Irene Smith, with a pallid, pointed little face, a mop of untidy pale hair and a wry, hurt twist to a mouth formed obviously for more enjoyable uses.

"Oh—Miss Wyatt!" said Irene, with a little gasp of pleasure. "I'm sure glad to see you. I was thinkin' about you, just this minute."

"Then I'm glad I happened along," said Constance cheerfully.

She took the other chair the room afforded and sat down. Irene sat down as well—once more in the rocker—her hair a smudgy nimbus about her small, drawn face, her not too clean little hands more clenched than folded in her lap.

"Been feeling any better?" inquired Constance briskly.

"A little," admitted Irene. "Not much."

"Get out for a walk every evening?"

"Some evenings—when I got the strength—and the nerve."

"Don't be a goose!" said Constance. "Strength for what—and nerve for what? To walk around and get the exercise you need—once a day!"

"It ain't so simple as it looks—to you."

"I thought I'd talked you out of all that."

"Well, you have," said Irene Smith reluctantly. "Only—sometimes, I kind of slip back."

"Don't!" said Constance firmly. "You mustn't! If you're going to get on your feet again—and put things behind you. I've been quite proud of you, Irene, for the way you took this—hard luck."

"You been awful good to me," said Irene Smith gratefully.

"I like to keep an eye on all the girls in my department—as you know," said Constance, dismissing with a slight, but friendly, gesture the question of her goodness to Irene.

"The priest was here today—Father Sebastian." Irene laughed, nervously, and put the hair away from her darkly-circled gray eyes with a restless little hand.

"The priest—what did he want?"

"He came to tell me—he says—he's got Mike to agree—to come back to me."

"Irene!" said Constance sharply.

Irene leaned her head against the soiled red and white tidy on the top of the ugly rocker. She shut her eyes, and slow, painful tears welled out from under the closed lids. Her soft, pale mouth quivered. "It'd be kind of nice," she said. "And—not so lonesome."

(Sophy's cry, as well—exquisite, languid, unhappy Sophy! "But Connie—alone?")

Constance stood up.

"You don't really love Mike," she said.

"It ain't—love—exactly," said Irene Smith. "I can't tell you just what it is that makes me want to do it, Miss Wyatt, I got sense enough to see your way is fine—and—noble—and all that. A woman—standin' up by herself—without fallin' back on the man that makes her trouble. Only thing is, somethin' keeps pullin' me in the other direction. I don't exactly love Mike—but he's kind of cute—that black-eyed grin of his and all . . . and it's like I—belonged to him—somehow."

"Race tradition," said Constance mordantly, "race memory. We're chained hand and foot by it."

"I'm sorry, Miss Wyatt. You been awful good to me. Only, Father Sebastian says—we could have a little flat, Mike and me—with a little bit of a kitchen—"

"Where you could cook Mike's meals, I suppose?"

"Oh," said Irene Smith, with an irrepressible leap in her voice. "Think of havin' somebody to do it for!—I've et delicatessen junk off that table yonder—by myself—till I've thought I'd go outer my head. You don't know, Miss Wyatt. You never lived all alone."

"My maid sleeps in the apartment," said Constance. Then, for no reason at all, she squared her shoulders, lifted her chin, and said good-by to Irene, tragic little figure that she was in her rocking-chair, against her smoky window and left her to her dreams—if any—of Mike Benito—his "black-eyed grin, and all." Dusk was on the stairs; dusk drooping like a veil upon the street below. In the sky, slow fires burned themselves out along a dim horizon.

Constance walked until she found a taxi—taxis were not too common in Irene Smith's neighborhood—flung herself back in it, shut her clear cool eyes over something incredibly like tears.

"My whole life's no use," she thought. "I've no influence, even, over that pathetic little fool back yonder. I was ready to help her every step of the road, ready to make a free woman of her, and she chucks it away—for a husband who doesn't really want her, whom she didn't really choose in the first place. What weak things women are—sickeningly, hopelessly weak!"

She paid the driver at the door of her apartment-house. She realized, going up in the elevator, that she was cruelly tired. A curious lassitude weighted her legs and arms. Her head felt heavy. Her eyelids burned. She turned the key in the lock with a hand that felt chill at the finger-tips.

Jessy, her neat English maid, would have dinner waiting, the table daintily set—for one—flowers—and candles—a quiet room . . . One liked it quiet, of course.

With the key grating as it turned, Constance remembered sharply—Jessy wouldn't be there at all. This was Jessy's night off. There wouldn't be any one in the apartment, except Constance, herself—only herself. A salad in the icebox, perhaps—cold chicken or something of the sort—an empty room—four empty rooms . . .

"I wish I hadn't let Jessy go tonight," she thought unhappily. "I hate an empty room. I must be horribly tired. I can hardly bear the thought of—no one—on the other side of this door. What is the matter with me? I wonder if I'm going to be ill."

She lingered unaccountably, for her, through a motion appointing a Committee of Public Safety, with Danton as its leader. "A temporary despotism of liberty," said Marat, "must be established to crush the despotism of kings." On May 29, Paris learned that the middle-class authorities of Lyons had arrested eight hundred radicals, and had put them to death at once. Marat, defying the law that made this punishable by death, slipped alone in the quiet night into the belfry of the Hotel de Ville, and rang the tocsin that called the sections to arms.

The next day the Convention found itself surrounded by armed men; their leader, Hanriot, sent in word that the Convention would be imprisoned till it had expelled every Girondist of prominence. Some tried to escape, but they were driven back by guns. Many Girondists resigned; other, selected by Marat, were expelled. They went back to their provinces, and roused the departments against Paris. Some of them lived hunted lives in miserable hiding places. Guadet was captured and guillotined; Buzot and Petion were found dead in a cornfield, their bodies half eaten by dogs; Barbaroux, seeing a crowd advancing toward him, mistook them for Jacobins coming to arrest him, shot himself, and dying, found that they were country people going to a wake—he had shortened their journey. At Caen an assembly of delegates from twenty departments voted to march upon the Convention and overthrow it; in the great manufacturing and shipping centers—Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Nantes—revolution brewed against the Revolution.

At Caen a young woman of noble lineage, Charlotte Corday, had heard Buzot and Barbaroux, and had learned from their lips of the infamies of Marat. On July 9 she took the diligence for Paris, leaving her father a note that she had gone to England, and wished to be forgotten. Arrived at the capital she went directly to the Convention to find Marat; he was not there. She went to his room, asked admission to him, and was refused; she sent him a note saying that she came to reveal to him a conspiracy against France; she would "put it in his power to do France a great service." She was admitted, and found him in his bath, trying so to reduce a fever; she spoke with him for a moment; then, as his back was turned, she plunged a knife into him. He called to his wife "A moi, chere amie"—"To me, dear friend!" and died. Five days later Charlotte Corday died too, on the guillotine, silent, and not unhappy. Of such stuff our kind is made.

Very soon after, the Committee of Public Safety brought to trial twenty leaders of the Gironde, including Brissot and Vergniaud. Hebert, released from jail, led some radicals into the courtroom to protest that the trial was taking too long, that the court was too much "shackled by forms of law." On October 30 the twenty-two were condemned to death. One of them, Valaze, stabbed himself on the spot. Lasource defied the court: "I die," he shouted, "on the day when the people have lost their reason; ye will die on the day they recover it." In jail that night Vergniaud was about to poison himself; but finding that there was not enough poison to go around, he reflected that he was bound in honor to wait for the guillotine. Danton tried to save them but found himself powerless.

The next morning the tumbril took them, with Valaze's dead body among them; to the last they sang the "Marseillaise," the song growing weaker with every head that fell. Even Valaze was decapitated lest the guillotine feel cheated. "The Revolution," said Vergniaud as he died, "is like Saturn; it is devouring its own children." Ten days later Mme. Roland had her turn on the scaffold; and seeing a statue of liberty in the distance, she apostrophized it: "Oh, Liberty, what things have been done in thy name!" Roland, hearing she was dead, fell on his sword like a Roman. Condorcet hid for a while, wrote, in his attic, a paean to progress, announced the indefinite perfectability of mankind, and then, caught by the gendarmes, poisoned himself.

We pity them; they were gentlemen, eloquent, honest after their own light. But they died by the laws of the war they had declared, and with a fate they would have meted out to their fallen foes. C'est la guerre.

The Convention was frightened almost to dissolution. For four months after the fall of the Girondin the Assembly hall was one-half or three-quarters empty. The Right and Center were still in the majority, but they did not dare to vote against the Mountain; some of them when vital issues came to the floor, stealthily left the room. Two hundred votes elected the Committee of Public Safety, fifty votes elected the judges of the Revolutionary Tribunal. Every member tried to look like a proletariat; pantaloons succeeded knee breeches in all walks of life, and set the style in Europe and America until the reign of golf. Good manners were carefully concealed, lest they should betray one's origin and lose one's head.

Even Danton was growing suspect; he had favored mercy for the Gironde, and had just married a pretty girl of aristocratic lineage. Robespierre put through a bill reorganizng the Committee of Public Safety, and in the election of the new personnel Danton's name fell short of the required number of votes. Danton announced himself "sick of humanity" and went south for a honeymoon.

The "Great Committee" was now headed by Robespierre, St. Just, Barere, Collot d'Herbois, and Billaud-Varenne. St. Just was just a handsome boy of twenty-five, distancing even Robespierre in loyalty to logic, incorruptibility, and Rousseau; "posing like the Holy Ghost," said one; "he carries his head as if it were the Holy Sacrament being borne to a communicant," said Camille Desmoulins, and went to the guillotine for the phrase.

The Committee, fitted out with spies, funds, and absolute power, set itself the double task of meeting a united Europe on the battlefield, and at the same time meeting disaffection and rebellion within France. On July 28, 1793, Valenciennes fell before the Allies; the Spanish had crossed the Pyrennees, the Piedmontese had crossed the Alps, the English had taken Toulon; five foreign armies were on French soil. In La Vendee counter-revolution marched on; and throughout France aristocrats were plotting against the capital. The middle classes, having lost sympathy with the Revolution, were giving all their attention to profiteering, even in the matter of army supplies. "In the Army of the South there are 30,000 pairs of breeches wanting—a most scandalous want." The peasants were going on a production strike; the national paper currency, the assignats, had lost 80 per cent of their purchasing power, resulting in an automatic tax of 80 per cent on all incomes; the peasants refused to sell their grain for such paper, and the cities began to starve. Industsy was dying through the shyness of frightened investors; transportation was harassed with unrepaired roads and unpunished robberies; food speculation was running up the price of all commodities, and in Paris people were dying in the streets.

Bread lines evervwhere; people sleeping all night on the sidewalks before bakers' shops in order to get bread, the next day, before the daily supply of the shops should be exhausted; prostitutes plying their unhappy trade in the bread lines; industrial workers deserting Paris for the villages, industry for agriculture; street lamps out for lack of oil, and thievery flourishing; leather lacking, and shoes all out at the toes; soap lacking, and washerwomen invading the Convention to ask, not for bread and circuses, but for "bread and soap." The city is unable to pay for the collection of garbage; refuse, even offal, piles up in the streets. The bread lines, increasing daily in length, decreasing daily in hope, break out into fighting for place; the strongest carry off the food, and many women are hurt in the scrambling. A boat laden with wine is seen at a wharf; hundreds rush upon it to drink the wine; the boat sinks, and scores are drowned; scenes of the same kind occur every day. Twelve hundred stores are looted; storage men and "monopolists" are assaulted; some of them are hanged.

The Terror begins with the guillotining of profiteers. On May 3 the Convention passes the Law of the Maximum, fixing the maximum price for bread, and decreeing death to all violators of the enactment. Terror, says a member, "is the only resource left against conspirators, monopolists and traitors." It is also a decisive way of refuting an opponent; a dead man can do no mischief. "You had your neighbor guillotined to prevent him from guillotining you," says a Barere. When a leader dies in bed, every one is surprised; of Marat one feels: No matter; he would have died on the guillotine in a little while if Charlotte had not stabbed him.

The powers of the Committee of Safety are almost limitless: it may enter homes at will, it censors all publications, it suppresses operas, it employs spies to report private conversation; the resolve to make men free has for a while destroyed all their liberties. "It is necessary," says Billaud-Varenne, "that the people to which one desires to restore freedom shall in some way be created anew, since old prejudices must be eradicated, old habits changed, depraved affections improved." "We will make France a cemetery," says Carriere, "rather than not regenerate it in our own way." So, stringent laws are passed to catch the disloyal; the Law of Suspects makes all men suspect, and a wit describes the situation by conjugation "I am suspect, thou art suspect," etc. Couthon has an acid test of loyalty: "What hast thou done to be hanged if counter-revolution should arrive?" The Law of Prairial, which is the work of Robespierre, names the death penalty for advocating royalty, calumniating the republic, or seeking to discourage the people; the accused are to have no counsel, and the hearings may be secret. "As for myself," says a member of the Revolutionary Tribunal, "I am always convinced. In a revolution, all who appear before this tribunal ought to be condemned." The chief prosecutor, Fouquier-Tinville, wishes to try one hundred and fifty at a time, and to establish a private guillotine in a back room.

It is only what the Bourbons have taught them. Death—even death by torture—has been for centuries part of the French law; only recently Bouille has punished disobedience in his soldiers by breaking every one of their bones on the wheel while they are still alive. The Terror of a thousand years, as Mark Twain will say, was worse than the Terror of a year.

Nevertheless this is bad enough. In fourteen months (April, 1793, to June, 1794,) 2607 are abbreviated in Paris, after the Law of Prairial, sixty-five go under the knife every day, and in the provinces, hundreds. People are arrested almost indiscriminately; 132 prisons are crowded in the capital, despite generous subtractions for the guillotine; on the fall of Robespierre there are 400,000 in jail.

How many months ago did little Dr. Guillotin demonstrate to the still secure aristocracy his delicate mechanism for capital punishment? "With this machine, ladies and gentlemen, I make your heads leap into the air." They laughed; but now they dress like paupers lest their titles be remembered. Every rich man lives in fear of his life, for it is law that the property of the guillotined belongs automatically to the state. Philippe d'Orleans, Egalite, is arrested, condemned; "Is it not horrible," he protests, "after my loyalty to the Revolution—but he has made the mistake of remaining rich. Generals are guillotined for losing battles—it is not permitted to lose battles; so goes, among many, Beauharnais, leaving his Josephine for Napoleon.

Josephine herself nearly goes; she is arrested, in strange association with Mme. Du Barry, mistress of Louis XV, and Marie Antoinette. She escapes, but Marie is guilty; no one thinks the Queen-that-was has suffered enough, jailed with her son, separated from her son, and now asked by Hebert, has she not corrupted her son sexually? She goes to the knife proudly, and the people look on apathetically as she dies; death has lost its novelty. She is no better, surely, than the great chemist Lavoisier, who is condemned because he held office under the old regime, nor than the finest poet of the time, Andre Chenier. Lavoisier asking for two weeks more of life to conclude an experiment, the president of the Tribunal refuses, saying, "The Republic has no need of chemists."

One by one the aristocrats are brought to "the national razor;" emigration is their only hope, and that is difficult; some of them go insane with worry, some kill themselves, one writes to the Revolutionary Tribunal: "Have the goodness to free me from existence. This is my address." "La guillotine va toujours," say the people—"The guillotine goes on always"; A modern adding-machine works with no more efficiency than this shining instrument for expeditious subtraction. At Meudon a tannery is established for drying and selling the skins of the beheaded; the hair of guillotined women is sold for wigs.

The provinces are not to be outdone; every township has its revolutionary Committee of Twelve—there are 44,000 of them in France; and the Committee of Public Safety comes to their aid with portable guillotines and traveling guillotineurs, "representatives on mission" like Vandamme and Carrier, graduates of the Revolutionary Tribunal. "When I am lucky enough to catch an aristocrat," says Vandamme, "I do not trouble the military commission to try him . . . My sabre and pistol do the business." Carrier sentences 4000 in four months; the executioner dies of horror after killing some boys of fourteen and a girl of seventeen; Carrier calmly appoints a successor. Carrier enjoys seeing people die; "I never laughed so much in my life as I did at the faces they made in dying." The guillotine is too slow for him; he puts eighty priests on one barge, one hundred and thirty-eight condemned men on another, nails them up under the hatches, and sinks the barges. Reflecting later that barges are costly, he improves his method by throwing prisoners, their hands tied, into the river, while his soldiers have a merry game shooting at the heads that bob up. A still further improvement ties a man and woman together and flings them into the Loire; this is called "Republican Marriage." The river is swollen with corpses, which the changing tides toss back and forth, while ravens and vultures circle about them. At Brotteaux 273 young men are stoood up beside a trench and mown down by grapeshot. At Arras mothers are compelled to stand by while the guillotine beheads their children and a band plays patriotic airs. At Lyons, Fouche and Collot 1682 are guillotined.

It is horrible and people begin to protest; but St. Just justifies the Terror on the ground of external invasion and internal treason. However, the internal treason, at least of La Vendee, is now thoroughly suppressed; the Vendeans are defeated at Le Mans; 2000 men, women and children are drowned at Nantes by the victorious revolutionists; orders are

TRAGEDIES OF CHINATOWN

Then his father told his side. Soon he must die. His only hope of heaven in the hereafter would be the knowledge that his descendents were burning punks to his memory. Otherwise he would endure the eternal torment of disgrace on "the other side." It was for that he had lived. For that his ancestors had lived back into the mist-strewn mysteries of the past—thousands of years. They had had plural marriages; many wives to assure them that the life-thread would not be broken.

It was a plea that no son with a heart in his breast could deny. Moon Quan surrendered and told his father to find the bride. He never saw his wife until he stood with her at the altar.

After the wedding he had a plain talk with her. He told her he did not believe in the old customs or the old gods and he was sure she could not.

"I am going back to America," he said. "If, while I am gone you find somebody you love, let me know; and if I find a girl back in the States with whom I fall in love, I will let you know. We will be divorced and each go our own way."

The eyes of the little Chinese girl filled with tears.

"Very well," she said. "If you fall in love with an American girl back in the States, let me know; and I will use the scarlet cord (their high-bred method of committing suicide by strangling themselves.) But there will be no divorce. When I married, it was until death."

Moon Quan, deeply touched, took her away with him. He showed her the American ways. Their apartment had no hall of the ancestors. But it had a radio and a snappy phonograph. She tried pitifully and earnestly. She tore the old gods out of her heart.

But one day Moon Quan went up the river on a business trip. The boat had an accident. Down the river the false rumor came that it had been seized by pirates; and that all on board had been put to the torture.

When Moon Quan returned, he found his tearful bride burning punks in every temple in Shanghai and imploring all the myriad gods of the high Chinese heavens for mercy for him.

What's the answer for him—and for her?

THE STORY OF CIVILIZATION

Robespierre and the Terror

By Will Durant, Ph.D.

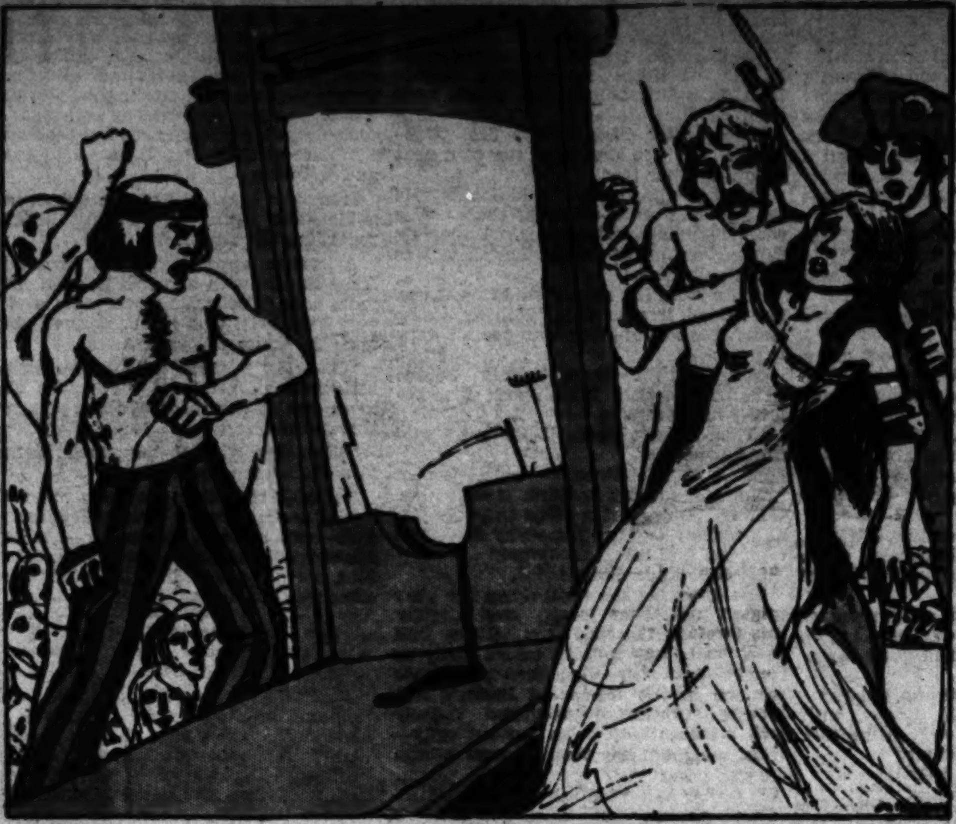
"RABAUD ST. ETIENNE, who believed the Revolution ended, and said so quite aloud, gave anxious attention to Robespierre, who did not believe it had begun and said so quite low. The present demolishers of the monarchy trembled before the future demolishers of society."

But who was Maximilen Francois Marie Isidore de Robespierre? He was a little man five feet two inches tall; thirty-three years old in 1792; of provincial origin, accent and morals; complexion dull and often livid ("sea-green," says Carlyle;) hair powdered, clothes immaculate; eyes weak and small, hiding behind glasses; agreeing with Danton and Mirabeau only in smallpox; Rousseau come back to life, shorn of all mercy, and endowed with all power. "That man will go far," said Mirabeau; "he believes every word he says." Nothing could be more dangerous.

At twenty-three he was a lawyer, at twenty-six a judge. He resigned to avoid passing the death sentence on a murderer; ten years later he sent men to the guillotine at the rate of nine hundred a month. His native Arras elected him to the States General as Deputy for the Third Estate; he distinguished himself as an orator, and was re-elected to the convention. After the Champs-de-Mars massacre he was concealed by the carpenter DuPlay in his home in the Rue Saintonge. Robespierre was so grateful that he lived there till the end of his life, content with one small room on the third floor, while all the world was asking him to dine. Part of his vanity came from his consciously modest life, and from his seclusion with simple people whose adoration intoxicated him. He was a god in a furnished room.



Robespierre sent thousands of men and women to the Guillotine during his few months of power.

Solitary and reserved, he became dogmatic, tenacious and obstinate, devoted to logic rather than fact, to Rousseau rather than to reality. His power was due primarily to his eloquence, of a cold but impassioned kind, not calculated to impress the sophisticated but well designed to please the people, who are infatuated with phrases. He sweetened his speeches with words like humanity, justice, virtue and morality, and as he adjusted his glasses with statesmanlike deliberation he left no doubt of his first-hand experience of these qualities which we find so convenient in our neighbors. "He was meant by nature for a Methodist parson of the strictest sort," says Carlyle. Condorcet called him a priest, and Morley said of him: "Ladies of wealth vainly entreated him to accept their purses, for women are quick to recognize the temperament of a priest, and recognizing, to adore." The people of the lower middle class were fond of him; they crowded the galleries to hear him, and sent him thousands of letters of adulation.

In return, he deified the people. "The people are good, and their delegates are incorruptible," he said; and so many took him at his word that the name incorruptible stuck to him. He proposed that the Legislative Assembly should hold its meetings in "a vast majestic edifice open to twenty thousand people," and wished that legislation might be debated in the presence of all the people. He assures the public that it is infallible, whilst every one else is subject to mistakes.

All his weaknesses were intellectual; an inflexibility of thought, and a hunger for applause. His passion for popularity grew by what it was fed on; he lived on praise as others lived on the luxury he scorned. When the bourgeoisie was supreme his speeches were bourgeois; when the proletariat came to power his speeches put on overalls; he could not bear to be unpopular. Backed by a majority, he never doubted the absolute correctness of his own views; he became as sure as a theologian, and as ready to kill. He particularly hated Danton, for genius was written all over Danton's carbuncles, and "only the greatest love can make us bear without hate the superiority of another." By an alliance with Danton he might have stopped the Terror when it was begetting madness and reaction; instead, he sent Danton to death. "That b——d there," said Danton of him, "doesn't even know how to boil an egg." But, as D'Artois might have said, he could make a good omelet.

"Devil take this war," wrote a Prussian officer from the Allied lines in 1792; "why on earth have we mixed ourselves in these quarrels which are no business of ours?" The invaders were encountering a new sort of enemy, not described in military manuals; soldiers and people fired with passion for the Revolution, and ready to defend it to the last man. The emigres had assured the Allies that they would be welcomed by the people of France; on the contrary the people scorned them, and infected the troops with revolutionary sympathies.

So at Valmy, on September 20, 1792, the French fought singing, while the Prussians, suffering from doubt and dysentery, could hardly stand. Goethe, gathering osteological specimens in the rear of the Prussian lines, witnessed the defeat of his countrymen, and expressed the opinion that this victory of the Revolutionary army would mark a turning point in the history of Europe.

Confusion, treachery and division had their way in the Allied campe. While Prussia fought at Valmy she learned that Austria and Russia were planning, behind her back, a second division of Poland; at once she ordered her troops to leave France. In England the people protested against taking part in the war; they mobbed the carriage of the King, filled the streets with cries of "Bread!" and "Peace!" Erskine's pamphlet against the war went into thirty-three editions. Pitt retaliated with treason and sedition bills, limiting English liberties as hardly ever since the Middle Ages; at the same time he engaged a Newcastle printer to forge thousands of assignats (French currency,) and flooded France with them in an effort to ruin the finances of the Revolution.

Danton, now master of the Mountain and of Paris, persuaded the convention to issue a decree conscripting, by lot, 300,000 men between eighteen and twenty-five. Carnot, "Organizer of Victory," worked eighteen hours a day as head of the Department of War, dining on crusts and lemonade; at Wattignies, having ordered Jourdan to attack, he shouldered a musket and marched into battle with the infantry. A committee of forty-eight (sections) was formed to make Paris an army, every citizen of either sex, was ordered to report for service; 250 forges were set up in the Luxembourg Gardens and around the Tuileries, to make gun-barrels before impressionable eyes; veterans were wheeled into public places to inspire the people; the women made uniforms and tents, the children folded bandages, married men too old to fight undertook the work of transport and supply. All France was on the march, with the battle-cry, "Le Peuple Francais contre les Tyrans"—"The French People against the Tyrants." "We lived," wrote Marmont many years later, "in an atmosphere of light; I can feel its heat and power now."

Patriotism united all but the delegates at the Convention. The Gironde, representing the "respectable washed Middle Classes," realized that Danton's leadership of the war was making the proletariat supreme and sent emissaries to the provinces to rouse them against the "dictatorship of Paris." The Mountain, dominated by the Commune, agitated for the nationalization of commerce and the equalization of property. "The food necessary for the people," said Robespierre, "is as sacred as life itself. All that is necessary to preserve life is property common to the whole of society. It is only what is in excess of this that may become private property, and may be given up to the industrial activities of the traders."

The Gironde was split by the love affairs of Mme. Roland; her confession of "fervent but platonic" affection for Buzot was not intelligible to Roland, who resigned from office and devoted himself assiduously to brooding. When Danton approached the Gironde with an offer of compromise to avoid bloodshed, she resisted it; and one of her group, Guadet, replied "Anything but impunity for murderers and their accomplices." "Guadet," said Danton, "you know not how to forgive; you will perish." Lasource attacked Danton with charges culminating in treason; Danton "descended from the Mountain like a lava-flow," and shouted, "Ye are right, friends of the Mountain, and I was wrong; there is no peace possible with these men. Let it be war, then!"

Marat demanded "complete destruction of this accursed brood of capitalists, stock-jobbers, and monopolists;" and despairing of seeing the legislators take any effectual measures, he recommended "the looting of a few shops, at the doors of which monopolists should be hanged," as the best way of "putting an end to these malpractices, which reduce 25,000,000 people to despair, and cause thousands to perish of want." The Gironde answered by putting through a motion for an investigation of the Commune; the Commune leaders, Varlet and Hebert, were arrested; and the Girondist Isnard announced fiercely that if any attempt were made on the Convention, "Paris would be destroyed, yes, the whole of France would avenge the outrage, and men would soon be wondering on which bank of the Seine Paris had stood."

On March 14, 1793, came the news that the Province of La Vendee had revolted against Paris; the threat of Isnard seemed ready for execution. La Vendee was Catholic, and hated the Revolution for exiling nonjuring priests; La Vendee was human, and hated conscription. If their sons must die, said the fathers, why not die in defense of their church? The rebel army grew rapidly to 30,000 men; led by brave and capable generals it won victory after victory against the forces sent to subdue them. "Nothing could be more tragic; Europe attacking France, and France attacking Paris."

A month later came the news that France's ablest general, Dumouriez had gone over to the Allies; he tried to take his army with him but they answered him with bullets. The Mountain put

THE VICIOUS CIRCLE

[illegible] the key, twisting the door-knob. The room would be dark, by now—dark and quite empty—with the evening paper neatly folded on the table beneath the lamp. Only the evening paper, waiting. If just Jenny were there! Even Jenny—

Constance pulled herself together and jerked open the door. Then stopped on the threshold, frozen.

The room was not dark—and the room was not empty. Down the little hallway flowed a warm stream of light. She could see the table in the middle of her living-room, could see the lighted lamp upon that table and the chair beside it. There was a man in the chair, reading Constance's paper. He got to his feet, as the door clicked, and came forward a little hurriedly, and as he stopped before her with his hand out and a smile overspreading his large, kind, clean-shaven mouth it occurred to Constance, fleetingly, that he wore also an indisputable air of relief.

"Well—well—well!" he cried. "Here you are at last! How are you Constance! No need to ask! You look simply splendid—not changed a particle! I hope you're glad to see me. I was beginning to be a little doubtful of the propriety of waiting here for you any longer, but your maid said, before she left, that you might be in at any moment."

Constance dimmed the flow of his welcome with a single smothered word "John!" She took off her hat and dropped it in the nearest chair. She dropped her fur and gloves upon the hat. "John—" she said again, dazedly. "Where on earth—and how—and . . ."

Excitement of a new, but not unpleasant, sort twitched at the corners of her steady mouth sent a startling ripple along her veins. She gave her hand—both hands—to be warmly engulfed, and found herself oddly comforted by that human contact.

"Come back," she said, with a queer, unsteady little laugh "and sit down—and tell me what this means! Last time I heard of you—ten years ago—you were somewhere out west."

"Los Angeles" said John, beaming upon her happily.

Then he put her into the deep-cushioned chair beside the table, drew up another for himself, and facing her returned once more to beaming.

Constance limp, for once, against her cushions gazed at him, defenseless. "But John—Los Angeles—what are you doing here?"

"Ah—" said John. "Of course—that puzzles you—doesn't it? Well—I was passing through, my dear girl—been up in Connecticut on a bit of business there last two weeks—and I saw your name in a paper I bought on the train, last night—your name—and your photograph."

"Oh, that!" said Constance. She added with amazing incoherence, "The Girls' Welfare thing?"

"Precisely," said John. "Well, after I'd seen the picture, I had to see you."

"Why?" asked Constance ingenuously. "Did you—like it?"

"Like it! It was marvelous! It brought to my mind at once the lines—you may remember them—'A perfect woman nobly planned—To warm, to comfort, to command!' Yes, that's what it made me think of—instantly! So I decided as I had to stop over a day or so here, in any case, to look you up and see if you had forgotten an old friend."

"I don't forget—readily," said Constance.

"That's good! It makes me very happy to hear you say that," returned John, with honest significance. "We were friends, indeed, in the old days weren't we Connie. What happy days those were!"

Constance's dark eyes lifted with a touch of delightful self-consciousness. She inquired abruptly "How is your wife, John?"

"My poor wife!" he said regretfully. "She died, Connie, about three years ago, leaving me with two of the sweetest little girls you ever saw."

"I'm sorry—I'm so sorry John! Tell me about your little girls."

"Darlings!" he said, with genuine enthusiasm. "Lillian is eight, Rosalind, six. Both fair with eyes like mine. My wife was dark—you remember?"

"I knew her so slightly," murmured Constance.

"Of course—of course! The faintest tinge of jocular understanding crept across John's paternal rhapsodies. "You didn't take to each other—somehow."

Constance said, with unbelievable recklessness, "I—missed—my friendship with you—after she came."

A moment of pleasurable awkwardness ensued. Constance looked off into space. John looked earnestly at Constance.

"Do you find me—much changed?" he asked her presently.

"Yes," said Constance, "I do. But in an—interesting way. You used to be—shyer, I think, less certain of yourself. One has a feeling now of—authority, John. The inevitable manner of success. I can see the west has altered you."

"But you don't dislike it, Connie?"

"On the contrary."

She made an unconsidered move to rise. The largeness of him, the ripe, genial, possessive masculinity of him, were very close. It startled Constance oddly.

"This is a charming little place of yours," said John.

Constance sank back, reassured. "I'm fond of it. I have an excellent English maid who looks after me, here. This is her night out."

(But the room had not been empty! The room had not been dark—and cold—and lonely! Exultation rose in Constance, curiously, like the tide along a thirsty shore.)

"I suppose you were going to get dinner by yourself, then—some sort of trifling female meal?"

Constance said, almost meekly, that there would be something in the ice-box.

"Well—let it stay there!" said John, rising suddenly, catching both her hands and drawing her to her feet. He was terribly strong, of course; a big man—those shoulders—she had forgotten how big he was—his deep-chested laugh—a vague scent of tobacco hung about him when one stood so near—tobacco—and some nice soap. A clean, big man—his blond hair was thinning—he had a fine forehead—and nice, straight-forward eyes—she hadn't remembered he had such nice eyes . . .

What was there about the faint bluish shadow on a close-shaven chin that made one want to put up one's hand?—(Sophy, putting up her hand to Lowell's head!)—What was there in the touch of big, warm fingers that comforted—and quieted—no, not quieted, exactly, either, but . . . .

"Tired?" asked John.

"No—not in the least!" said Constance. Queer—she had been horribly tired. She felt new, somehow.

"Then put your hat on again, while I 'phone for a car and seats for a show. We're going to have a party, just the two of us."

"Oh, John!" Constance couldn't keep a touch of excitement out of her voice. "That would be delightful—but—shan't I change my dress?"

"You couldn't look any better than you do—to me," said John bluntly.

"Really, John?"

"Really, Connie!"

"Let me put on a better-looking hat!"

"So long as you don't take too long about it. I hate to let you out of my sight, now I've got hold of you again. Isn't this like old times, Connie?"

"Only—much better!" She drew away her hands to cover the boldness of that.

He was standing very near her again. The tweed coat he wore had a rough, dark weave. Why should the flesh of one's cheek prickle to look at it, so near? —A deep voice, lowered—and huskier—than before . . . . what a queer effect it had—on one's eyelids—heavy—but sweet! . . . . She moved away from him a step. He followed—like destiny.

"Connie—you haven't said you're glad to see me again!"

"Oh, John!"

"Why won't you look at me?"

"I do, John. I would, if you'd—not so near!"

"You'd love the west, Connie."

"Would I, John?"

"And those two kids of mine—they'd just about worship you."

He had her two hands again, snuggling them against his shirt-front, drawing her by them, compelling her even nearer. A tremor went through her, like wind over the grass.

"John—please!"

"Connie—please!"

Then, like a sword-blade across a silken thread—the telephone on the table, shrilling clear. Once, twice, three times—before he let her hands go free—with a muttered word that stirred her, proudly and sweetly.

"Just a minute, John—I'm sorry!"

"Tell whoever it is you're going out."

"I will, John."

She caught up the instrument with [illegible] suddenly [illegible], his eyes [illegible].

"Constance Wynn speaking."

Out of humming, whirring space—static, silence—and then a voice—a thin drawling voice whipped to urgency and stumbling—a sweet voice, languid—a gay voice with its laughter ripped away. "Connie—it's Sophy! Connie—can you hear me?"

"Yes, Sophy. Very well—what is it, dear?"

"Connie—can you put me up—for the night? Can you?—I'm coming down to you!"

"Sophy—one minute—I can't quite hear. Is—anything wrong?"

"(Tell 'em to make it short!" urged John beside her, affectionately.)

"Everything," came sharp and broken across the wire. "I've had a horrible time—I've quarreled dreadfully—with Lowell. I'm leaving him."

"Sophy!"

"Yes—I am!—I've had enough—I'm through! I'm coming down to you—right away!"

"Sophy—where's Lowell? Is he there?"

("Nothing wrong, I hope?" put in John anxiously, laying his hand on her arm. Constance lifted her eyes to his—breathlessly—gently shook her head.)

"No—Lowell's gone—to the club. He doesn't think I meant it. He thinks I'll be here, still, in the morning. He'll see!"

"Sophy, my dear, listen to me—you must listen!"

"I'm listening."

"Sophy—wait! I want you to wait—and—think it over. Don't do anything—until I see you—in the morning!"

"In the morning!"

"Tomorrow morning. I'll see you—first thing. Don't do anything—until then!"

"I can't come to you—now?"

"No—not now—not tonight. Don't do anything—until I've seen you," Constance repeated nervously. "In the morning. Sophy! What did you say?"

There was no answer—beyond a smothered unintelligible sound . . . .

"Sophy!" cried Constance—heard the snick of a closed connection, and hung up her own receiver with automatic promptness.

Sophy's acceptance of tomorrow morning—a sob or a laugh? Only Sophy herself would ever know!

"Well!—I was afraid somebody was trying to take you away from me—now, get your hat and come along!" said John.

Constance turned obediently. As she went into her bedroom, a slow painful flush rose, along her throat, across her cheek, above her eyes . . . . How lovely she had been! And never known!

CHEN YUNG RETURNS

Reading's main hope was to arrive off the southern end of Vancouver Island at approximately the same time as the plane which he believed carried Chen Yung and a party of Russian Communists. At best, it was a slim hope, he reflected. If their plane landed first it would be difficult to find its hidden airport before it could take off on the return trip to Vladivostok.

Heavy fog was encountered south of the Aleutians. Burke finally climbed above it. Flying lower as the heavy mist cleared after sunrise of the second morning, south of the Gulf of Alaska, they cruised along in a bumpy wind for more than eight hundred miles.

Both Reading and Burke were feeling the strain of the long chase, but were now cheered by the sight of an occasional steamer. They had been flying the greater part of the distance thus far covered considerably north of the Oriental Mail steamer lane, but were now in its path.

Reading found, late in the morning, that he was able to communicate by radio with steamships, but got no news of the plane he was searching for.

Before leaving Tokio he had instructed the American Embassy to forward to Washington a request that a strong patrol of scout seaplanes be dispatched to the vicinity of the entrance to Puget Sound. He began to wonder now whether the Russian plane had shown up off Cape Flattery and escaped the patrol or been captured.

Shortly before noon a mail steamer relayed to him a message from Seattle reporting that a squadron of naval seaplanes were patroling the coast.

If the Russian plane were sighted in fairly clear weather it was doomed to almost certain capture, for it could not turn back with depleted fuel tanks, and must eventually be forced down.

Early in the afternoon Reading and Burke caught sight of the Olympic Mountains. The long chase, whether it failed or succeeded, was nearly over.

Suddenly, dead ahead and at a slightly higher altitude than theirs, Reading saw a dark spot against a white fleecy cloud. It might be one of the patrol planes. He indicated it to Dan, who, without waiting for instructions, opened wide his motor, increasing the speed of the plane to more than 150 miles an hour.

Fortunately, the sky was blue and clear except for a few lazy clouds. Visibility would be excellent all the way to the coast.

In five minutes a radio message came through from the flight leader of the patrol, not yet visible:

"We have sighted a strange plane flying toward Puget Sound, but don't know yet whether it is yours or the other fellow's."

Reading's reply was:

"We have seen it. It is the plane we are pursuing. Don't let it get away."

In hardly more than ten minutes more of flying Reading and Burke caught sight of the patrol, a score of planes strung out several miles apart. Ahead, the detective saw the single plane ahead veer toward the north. It was trying to escape from the trap which evidently its crew now saw.

Burke had "given her the gun" for all the three motors had in them, and saw that he was gaining rapidly. Farther ahead, the northernmost plane of the naval patrol turned out to the north, and the trapped plane veered slightly south again to its former path.

Chen Yung, seeing that either flight or fight was now useless, brought his plane down conveniently in Seattle Harbor, where Reading and Burke landed a few minutes later to find Chen surrounded by the naval patrol.

He smiled wearily but blandly when he, Kai Ling and three Russians were handcuffed and taken ashore. All were almost exhausted and made no struggle.

"Eagle-hunting will be tame business after this job," remarked Burke.

TRAGEDIES of CHINATOWN

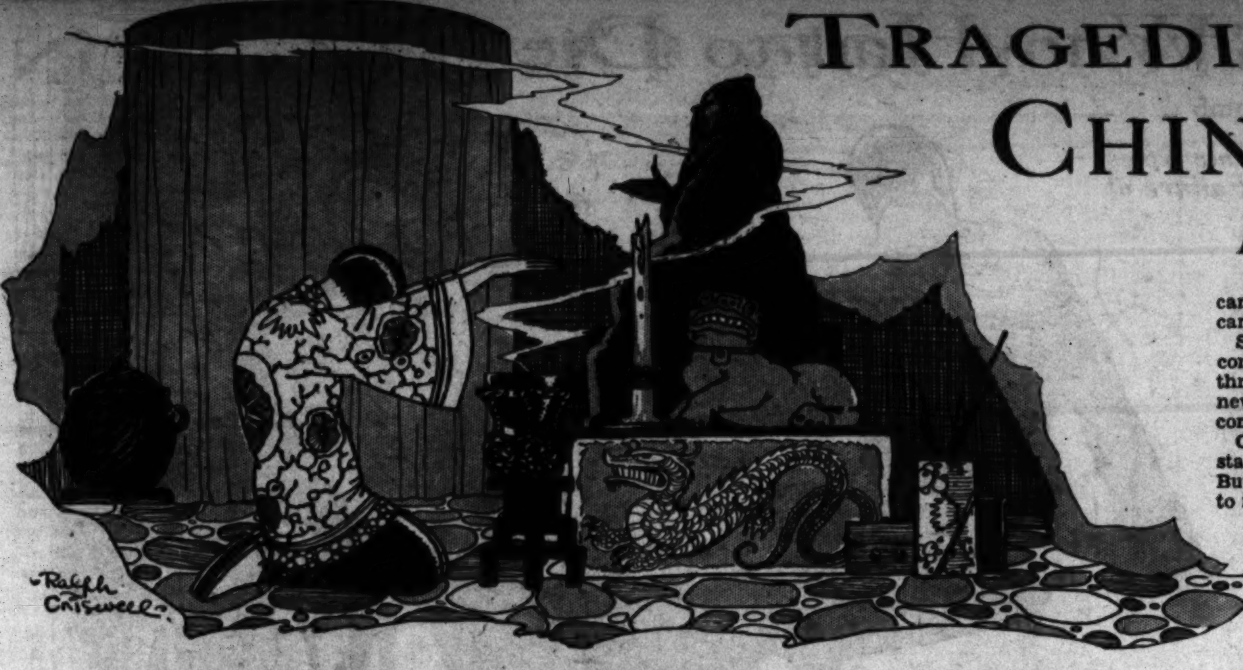
By Harry Carr



When Moon Quan returned, he found his tearful bride burning punks in every temple in Shanghai.

This is the first of a series of articles which Mr. Carr is writing for the Times Sunday Magazine.

BOBBIE LEE gave her life for a pair of pitiful little red shoes.

At least she had the courage. Other Chinese girls have chosen, instead, to eat their hearts out in the dim whispering alleys of Chinatown. Still others—and perhaps they are in the majority—beat their souls to death with one foot caught in the old China, the other wildly floundering for freedom in the new. Bobbie Lee chose a pair of red shoes and a dagger in her heart.

No one seems to have known Bobbie's Chinese name; she took on "Bobbie" with the life of an American flapper; and the red shoes.

Hers was a typical case. Born in the settled conventions of a Chinese family, she went to an American public school; and struggled her way half out of the shell.

When she was old enough to be married, her husband was selected for her—a middle-aged stolid, indulgent Chinaman. She moped in loneliness around his dark house.

One day, she came to him begging to be allowed to start a little curio shop of her own; and the husband good naturedly consented. And with that, she slipped out of his life; and into a world half in the pastel shades of the Orient; half the raucous blaze of American jazz.

One day, in her new little red shoes, she started on an auto ride. No one knows with whom. They found her body lying by a roadside, stabbed to the heart.

No one knows the answer to the riddle. It was a two days' sensation. And then the mystery sank back into the whispering shadows of Chinatown.

I have known so many—boys as well as girls.

Strangely enough, our Chinese quarter in Los Angeles has witnessed more of these tragedies than any other place in the world.

I had one little friend who ended in the struggle as tragically as Bobbie Lee; but in a way that showed that the roots of his soul were still in the yellow mists of old China. He died to get freedom; yet the manner of his death was Chinese.

He had tried to struggle free of the old traditions, went to College, cut off his pigtail and threw away the clothing of his forefathers. He was one of the first.

When I knew him, he was a telephone operator in the Chinatown exchange. He saw that he was struggling out of a deadly morass of dead ideas into a barren future.

One night there came a telephone call. It was a warning. A voice told him that his father had offended one of the highbinder tongs. They were going to kill him when he went home from work—out of vengeance against his father. He must, by all means, avoid passing August Alley.

The boy finished his work for the night. When he went home from his switchboard, he deliberately chose August Alley. He died on the sidewalk. No doubt he was glad the struggle had ended.

My old friend General Homer Lea did more to set young China free than any other force in the world. As I have said elsewhere, the revolution which ended the imperial power of the old Empress of China began in Los Angeles.

Homer Lea was then a young fellow, just graduated from Stanford. He came back to Los Angeles; and there began a series of visits from distinguished mandarins, fugitives from the chopping blocks of the old Empress. Liang Ky Chew, Kang Yu Wei—and others. They conferred with Homer Lea.

The next we knew all the young pigtails of Chinatown came off at one fell clip; and all the young Chinese boys appeared in military uniforms; and began drilling in Chinatown. I will not trace the growth to power of the Wo Wong Wui Society. Enough to say that this queue snipping marked the coming of a new era. Since then, young China has been American. The old traditions went out with the pigtails.

On the whole, it began a period more poignant with unhappiness than the old era. These young souls had no spiritual home. They were aliens in Chinatown; aliens out of it.

For instance, there was my young friend, Chew.

He had become to all intents and purposes an American boy. Even to the Christian religion. Attending the mission school, he had fallen in love with an American girl. She too. It happened to fall my way to give advice. I told her she was in for a tough session, whether she lived in China; or whether she stayed here. But if she cared enough for the boy to marry him . . . She did. She had a tough time in China—where she found herself immersed in an atmosphere where the bride was all but a slave to her mother-in-law. But her husband was brave too. I had a letter from her not long ago. She said that they have been happy—with two children. I feel sorry for the children. They will be more hopelessly alien than the revolting parents.

Take the case of Miss —; call her Low Sing. She is a beautiful girl; highly educated. Her father was a Chinese physician; her mother an Irish girl. They sent her to the university. She promptly forgot all the Chinese she knew. A naval officer fell in love with her—under the influence of the tropic moon. They became engaged. He went away. He never came back.

She tells me that she feels the proud consciousness of a great race running through the blue veins of her body; but nevertheless, her navy officer did not come back.

Girls like Anna May Wong, the movie star, have a hard time in many ways. But her parents have been wise enough to recognize the inevitable. They are sad in seeing her renounce the old ways; but they do not attempt to force her into a loveless marriage; like the parents of Bobbie Lee.

Anna is a little American flapper with a heart outwardly gay—a girl without a country. She speaks a little Chinese; but knows nothing of the great traditions of China. And cares a darn sight less. She has to snatch up happiness where she finds it.

The attitude of the Chinese parents is interesting—and sometimes tragic. One of the most remarkable men I have ever known is an old Chinaman who came to California as a peasant laborer; grew rich and is the head of a corporation operating several ranches.

In his old age, he became the father of a man child. He simply adored the little chap. You never saw him without the child in his arms—a grave little slant-eyed baby with gorgeous clothes, bedecked with all the colors of the rainbow. One day old Sing patted his little face for the last time. And sent him away. He told me that he never expected to see the child again. He had sent him to an American family to be raised in our ways; and he wanted him to forget the China of his ancestors. Tears ran down the old man's cheeks as he told me: it was the greatest act of self sacrifice that had ever come into my ken.

There is another side of all this. Take the case of my friend, Moon Quan.

He is one of the most charming boys I have known. His mind is a subtle delight. He is a dramatist and poet. But he is unique in this: that, while taking all that the American schools had to offer, he acquired also the education of a cultivated young Chinese gentleman. He steeped himself in the ancient lore of the Orient.

He was born in China; but came to Los Angeles as a child. He became, in thought, an American. He dressed like a college senior; understood jazz dancing and bridge and all the rest of it.

A few years ago, he went back to his old father and mother in China. He found a house that should have given him warning. There were a few tiny bedrooms; a kitchen and a pill box dining-room. But at least seven-eights of the establishment was devoted to the "hall for ancestral worship." A great bleak ceremonial hall with an altar upon which the punks never went out.

One day his father talked to him. It was time for him to be married. Moon Quan was horrified. He didn't want to be married; at least not in China and settle down to a life of ceremonious calls and punk burning to gods in which he did not believe.

GOOD SHORT STORIES

Compiled for The Times Sunday Magazine

Being Polite

When little Jane Nies returned to St. Louis, after visiting her grandmother in Altadena, her father said to her:

"I hope when it came to extra helpings, that you had manners enough to say 'No,' once in a while?"

"Yes, daddy, I said 'No,' several times.

"You did!" exclaimed her father.

"Yes, I said 'No,' every time grandma asked me if I had enough."

Matchless Fire

When Jim Bachelor, now a member of the L.A.Y., joined the Boy Scouts, he came home and asked his father to lend him his cigar lighter?

Father gazed at his young son in wide-eyed amazement. Did the Scouts well-come their tenderfoot with a smoker. He opened his mouth to start the well-known and popular lecture but Jim saw it coming and beat him to it.

"You see, dad, you have to make a fire without matches so I thought your cigar lighter would be handy. That is, if it still works."

Food For Thought

The young wife was heartbroken.

"What's the matter?" asked a friend.

"Oh, my husband is so absent-minded. After breakfast he left a tip on the table, and when I handed him his hat and coat he gave me another dime."

"Well, that's nothing to worry about. Just force of habit."

"That's just what worries me. He kissed me, too, when I gave him his coat and hat."

Hopeless

In these days when wisecracks command a price in the motion picture and magazine market, a pearl was wasted on the desert air, or rather, the unsympathetic police court of Los Angeles where a middle-aged man was facing a vagrancy charge.

He had explained to the court how he had tried and tried to get work and the story was so long and so harrowing that it soon lost its ring of truth. So much so that when the man had finished, the court remarked sarcastically: "It seems that you are a very unlucky man."

"Unlucky!" exclaimed the vag. "Why your honor, if I was starving to death and there was a shower of soup, I'd be standing in the middle of it with a fork in my hand!"

Be Cool

A few days ago, while he was fuming around in his pile of brushes, Uncle Eben, who shines shoes down near the new City Hall, waxed philosophical:

"Yassir," he declared, "there am two times when frien'ship ceases. One is when you kotched foah aces in a poker game an' the other is a week ob hot weather."

"It is my wish that all the party should hang together," said the politician on the platform.

"Hear, hear!" came a voice from the rear, derisively.

The speaker glared at the owner of the voice.

"I don't mean in the sense in which that idle scoffer would have you understand," went on the speaker with dignity, "but that they may band together in concord and accord."

"I don't mind what kind of cord it is," came the voice again, "as long as it is a strong cord."

Beryl: I said he didn't know how to kiss.

Generally Do

During a visit to Hollywood, Irving Cobb was asked by one of the big studios to attend a private preview and give them his opinion on a picture of doubtful merit. After the showing, he was asked what he thought was wrong.

"The story isn't true to life," declared Cobb seriously. "The wife is always asking for money."

"What's wrong with that? It's perfectly natural, isn't it?"

"But she always gets it!" protested the great humorist.

The Hotel Clerk Goes Crazy

"No, madam, we don't allow guests to keep horses in their rooms the cashier will give you a one-cent stamp and change for a thousand-dollar bill something with a bath and southern exposure yes sir I'll change your room if you wish but I can't have that man thrown out of the hotel because he owns the hotel you want the bath-tub put where the dresser stands and a piano moved into the bathroom yes miss the eight o'clock train leaves the Union Station at eight o'clock you want something for about four dollars a day on the top floor not too high up away from the street on the ground floor facing the street you'll have to hire a room Mr. Bloch I'm afraid you can't display samples of steam-rollers in the lobby."

On Top

When Art Goebel, who is well known here in Los Angeles as a stunt flyer in motion-picture thrillers, completed his famous nonstop flight from here to the Atlantic Coast, a young woman reporter exclaimed: "Don't you feel as happy as a king when you're flying?"

"Higher and happier!" laughed Art. "I'm an ace!"

All Settled

Raymond had just begun to go to school. One morning his teacher was trying to impress upon her pupils the idea of self-reliance. It so happened that a certain small boy had been late on that particular morning. His excuse was that his mother had overslept, forgotten to call him, and breakfast was late. Hence the lecture on self-reliance.

"You have fathers and mothers to work for you now," concluded the teacher, "but what will you do after you're grown up? Who will work for you then?"

Raymond's hand shot up.

"Our wives, of course," he replied.

Burning Issues

Senator Johnson was asked by a political friend if he thought Al Smith had put enough fire in his speech of acceptance.

"Oh, yes," laughed Johnson. "The trouble was, he didn't put enough of his speech in the fire."

Agreeable

"The world has gone mad over 'easy money," said Henry Ford, recently. "People seem unwilling to work for what they get. They take delight in attacking rich men, never stopping to think that most of these rich men started poor and earned what they now have.

"Too many young people of today are like the chap who applied for work at one of our assembling plants. 'I don't know as I can use you, I'm afraid we haven't enough work for you to do, right at present,' said the foreman.

"'Oh, that will be all right!' said the young man promptly. 'The lack of work wouldn't bother me, so long as the wages are satisfactory.'"

Gentle Roast

Alan Dale, New York dramatic critic for two generations, was noted for his sarcastic wit. On one occasion, in his daily column of theatrical comment, he said, regarding a new play: "I strongly urge that the hero, instead of taking poison in the last act, should shoot himself."

That afternoon he was called up on the phone by the puzzled playwright, who demanded the meaning of the cryptic criticism.

"Plain as the nose on your face," snapped Dale. "It will serve to awaken the audience and let them know the play is over."

Hay! Hay!

It was during an argument about diet that Frank Arnold of Walnut Park remarked:

"There's only one way to settle the diet question and that way was adopted by a certain very rich man I knew of. He went right to his physician and after many consultations and examinations, it was decded that he should undergo an operation.

"In due time the operation was performed, the rich man's stomach was removed and a nice new sheep's stomach put in its place. The man's recovery from the operation was rapid. Before long he began to clamor for food.

"'Ah!' cried the doctor, rubbing his hands, 'it is evident that the operation is a complete success. The sheep's stomach is working fine!'

"'Ba-a-a!' cried the rich man. 'Why bring beefsteaks when I want grass!'"

In the Hole

Malcolm Ames, the great economics student, was grinding his teeth over both the Hoover and the Smith farm relief planks. "There would be no need of all that guff," he declared, "if the farmers followed the example of the California fruit growers and co-operated in the marketing of their products.

"Yet, in spite of their present method of cutting each others' throats, the country is teeming with farmers like Jenkins.

"'I hear tell that Jenkins is cutting out the dairy end of his farming,' remarked Watkins at a meeting of the grange. 'Didn't it pay?'

"'It paid all right,' replied his friend, 'but it interfered with his golf.'"

Stubborn

A southern city recently conducted a campaign whose object was to protect ignorant people from injuring their health through the misuse of patent medicines. The theory was that most of these people could not read, took strong medicines in copious quantities and an ordinance was sought compelling the attendance of a doctor in all cases of serious illness.

The measure fell through when Medical Agent Winston Haig said to the committee:

"The measure would interfere with legitimate business and do no good whatever. Too many of these people are like a patient of my own:

"'Mandy,' I said, 'did you give Eben his medicine the way I told you to?'

"'Yassir, yassir,' averred Mandy. 'You done said to gib him one ob dese heah pills t'ree time a day till gone, but Ah done run out o' pills yesterday an' he ain't gone yet.'"

Interested

"You Americans are a mercenary race," declared the Marquise L'Hgnue at a Newport luncheon. "You place money above all things, even love. You do not believe me and yet it is true. Only yesterday while sitting on the beach with some of your adorable young matrons, a servant approached and said to Madame Blank: 'Your husband has been seriously hurt in an automobile accident but reports from the emergency hospital say that he will recover.'

"'How much?' demanded Madame Blank."

Speedster

While the papers were filled with the latest matrimonial escapade of Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Louis Mayer declared that M-G-M ought to engage her for pictures. "I think she's a wonder girl," he declared.

"Yes," agreed Irving Thalberg, "you wonder what she's going to do next."

The Spy Who Had to Die

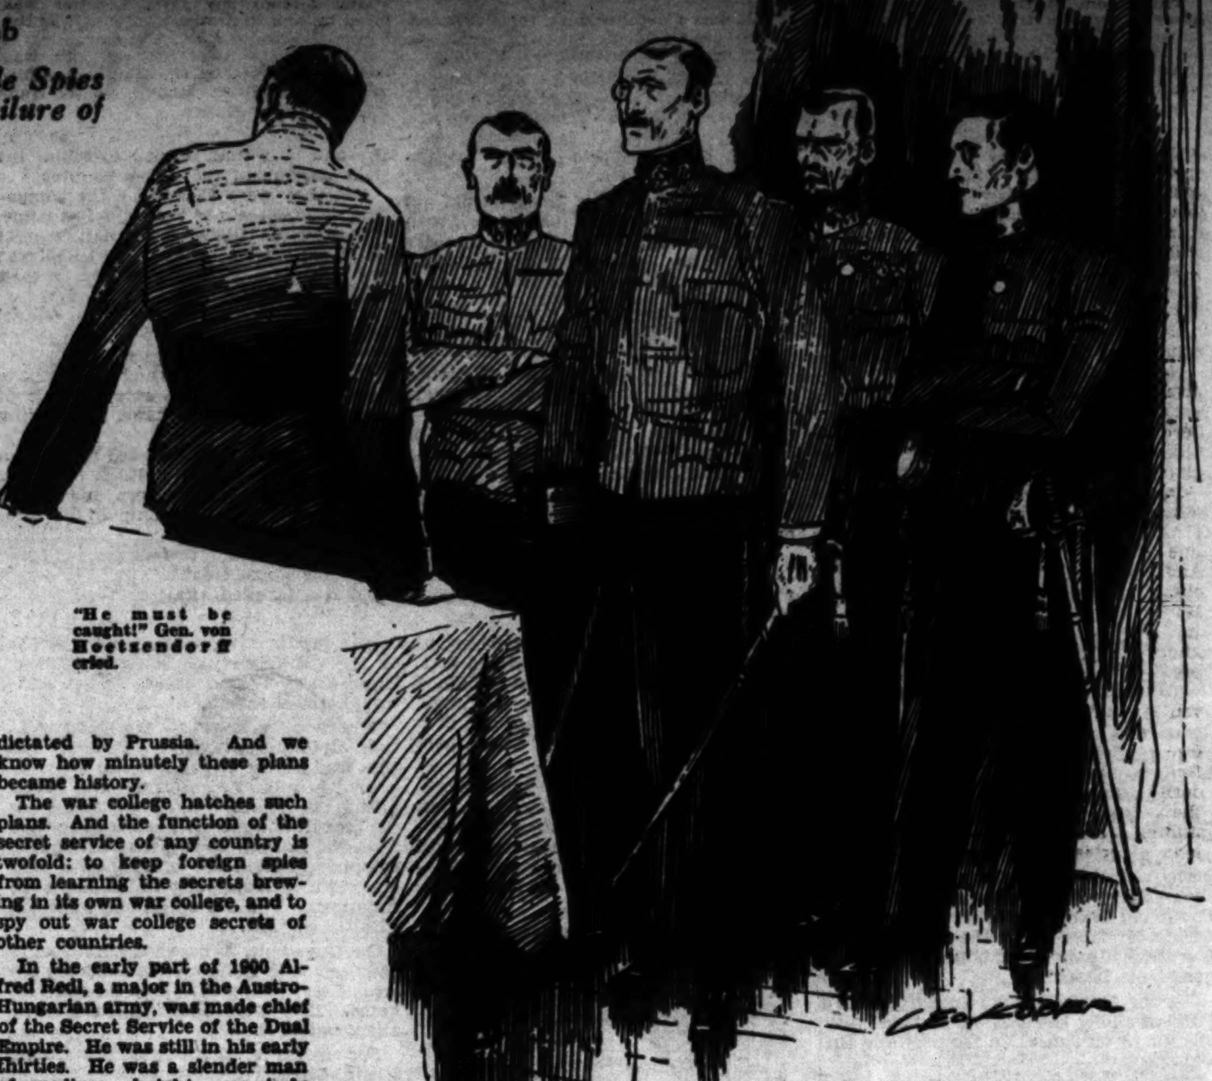
A Story of the Vital Role Spies Play in the Success or Failure of a War College



"He must be caught!" Gen. von Hoetzendorff cried.

EVERY government, without any exception worth noting, conducts a "war college."

I don't mean academies where fresh-faced cadets are taught the ABC of war; youths who unfold to the first sympathetic listener their plans, their hopes, their dreams; whose dress parades are pleasant public functions.

A "war college" such as I refer to is not attended by cadets but by a picked handful of army and navy chiefs. They are crafty pastmasters of the science of war who study there.

The public emphatically is not invited to their sessions. And the last thing in this world these students are likely to do is to divulge to outsiders the least syllable of the plans about which their studies center.

What is it that they study in a war college?

Briefly, how to win wars against any and every other nation on the globe.

It will be remembered that when, in 1870, Prussia declared war on France, an officer went to the bedroom of Gen. von Moltke, head of the Prussian war college, and, waking him, told him the news.

"Go to Cabinet No. 3 and take down File No. 7," Von Moltke said. "Follow the directions you find there."

Then he turned over on his other side and went to sleep again. But "the directions there" were plans for the conquest of France from the first moment of war down to the terms of armistice to be dictated by Prussia. And we know how minutely these plans became history.

The war college hatches such plans. And the function of the secret service of any country is twofold: to keep foreign spies from learning the secrets brewing in its own war college, and to spy out war college secrets of other countries.

In the early part of 1900 Alfred Redl, a major in the Austro-Hungarian army, was made chief of the Secret Service of the Dual Empire. He was still in his early thirties. He was a slender man of medium height, precisely groomed. His black-brown eyes, when he thought he was unobserved, had a greedy look; otherwise they were inscrutable. His nose was sharply pointed. His mouth, though thin-lipped, was vivid and sensual; but a carefully curled and pomaded mustache hid it.

His office in Vienna at the Kundschafts Stelle—"Information Department"—or, as it was familiarly known, the "K. S."—was a remarkable room. It was furnished as if it were to be used only as the living room of an exceedingly sociable, luxury-loving man. Major Redl was all that.

But although he entertained there frequently and lavishly, such occasions were not always what they seemed.

Take, for instance, the case of Ito Onaki, a suave young Japanese. Major Redl struck up a drinking acquaintance with him one afternoon at the Central Cafe. On parting Major Redl said:

"If you like a good glass of Tokay, drop in to see me tomorrow, say, about noon."

He gave Onaki a number and a street. "Charmed," said Ito.

Neither Major Redl nor Ito had told the other his real business. But each had a shrewd idea of it. And Ito recognized the address as that of the office of the Secret Service of Austria-Hungary.

Nevertheless he showed up there next morning and was ushered into the room, where Major Redl rose to greet him.

"What a delightful room!" Ito exclaimed.

Under foot were thick silken rugs. The daylight was subdued by heavy brocaded window draperies except where a sharp shaft of sunlight fell athwart a luxurious armchair by the side of Major Redl's flat-topped writing desk. The air was heavy with incense. On the walls were old paintings in curiously carved ebony frames.

Major Redl, with a gesture of invitation, indicated the armchair by the desk. Ito sat down with the sunlight on him. His host went to a cabinet inlaid with mother-of-pearl and precious woods. From it he took an age-incrusted bottle of Tokay and poured a glass for his visitor, another for himself.

Then he sat down in his own chair at the desk, and, as if unconsciously, tapped together the edges of a pile of important-looking papers.

"Your health, Herr Onaki!" he said, raising his glass.

"And yours, Herr Korngold!" Major Redl had given that as his name.

They drank, and Onaki was sincere in what he said about the wine.

"A cigaret?" Major Redl said, nodding at a gold cigaret box which stood at Onaki's hand. The top was incrusted with jewels of barbaric splendor, but the gold at the sides was smooth.

Ito declined, with the apologetic smile of the nonsmoker.

"Then you'll find some delicious bonbons inside that dish."

Ito raised the cover of a bit of exquisite Sevres; and the bonbons were delicious.

The visit had lasted agreeably for about ten minutes when Major Redl's toe, unseen by Ito, pressed a slight bump under the thick rug where he stood chatting. Whereupon his desk telephone rang. Major Redl "answered." A short "conversation" followed. Then the host turned to his guest.

"A neighbor wants to see me urgently for about ten minutes," he apologized. "I'd hate to have you leave so soon. Won't you make yourself at home here till I come back?"

"Thank you, I will," said Ito.

Ito heard the door close with heavy dignity. His eyes craftily made sure that he was alone in the room. And outside the windows a wide city square made it unlikely that any one could, even with a spyglass, see Ito.

For some moments he seemed contented to rest comfortably in his armchair. Suddenly he stood up over the desk and, with swift expert fingers, went through the pile of papers lying there.

In a large envelope marked "Very Confidential" he looked at a sheaf of reports. Each was marked with the name of some country. He glanced at each only long enough to note what land the report covered. But the paper marked Serbia held him.

His eyes, no longer suave, darted over the contents. In his eagerness to read, he thrust the paper full into the shaft of sunlight.

When, ten minutes later, Major Redl returned, the papers on his desk were exactly as he had left them, and his guest looked up from a volume of Persian poetry.

Some casual talk followed, sophisticated anecdotes, comments on women and wine. Then Ito rose and made a graceful little speech of appreciation. Major Redl escorted him to the door, and the guest left.

No one hindered his leaving. And in the street Ito's training told him, after several tests he made, that no one was shadowing him.

But he had, so to speak, left a broad trail behind him. It was true he had not touched the gold cigarette box whose smooth sides were covered with minimum; but there were his finger-prints clearly retained by the minimum on the Serves bonbon dish, and an expert was already photographing them.

When Ito sat in his chair the shaft of sunlight was on his face, as I have said. In the scrollwork on two of the elaborately carved picture frames on the walls were openings, in the depths of which camera lenses had been focused on Ito's face. Now two photographs were laid before Major Redl, Ito in full face and in profile.

In the cabinet from which his host had taken the bottle of wine a phonograph had silently recorded Ito's voice.

Each sheet of the specially faked reports Ito had examined had been treated with a sensitive substance that responded to the action of light. By comparing them Major Redl knew now that it was the report on Serbia which had the longest engaged Ito's interest.

All this data on Ito, unconsciously contributed by him, was filed away in Major [illegible] the people of the countryside and the captives from Bokhara to aid in the work.

The swift and methodical preparations of the Mongols alarmed the Muhammadans, who beheld in the distance the vast multitude of captives, and thought the horde much greater than it was. The garrison sallied out once—was drawn on into one of the usual Mongol ambushes—and fared badly. The losses in this battle disheartened the defenders and the imams and judges went out, on the morning the Mongols were preparing to storm one portion of the wall, and surrendered the city.

Thirty thousand Kankali Turks on their own account went over to the Mongols—were received amiably, given Mongol military dress and massacred a night or two later. The Mongols would never trust the Turks of Kharesm, especially those who turned traitor.

At Samarkand, after he learned that Muhammad Shah had forsaken the city and gone south, Genghis Khan determined to make the Shah captive before new armies could be raised against him. Now he sent for his chiefs, Chepe Noyon and Subotai, and gave them orders.

"Follow Muhammad Shah wherever he goes in the world. Find him, alive or dead."

A strange task, to hunt down an emperor through a dozen kingdoms. It was a task, indeed, for the most reckless and most infallible of the Orkhons. They were given two tumans, twenty thousand men. With these instructions and with this cavalry division, the two Orkhons set out at once toward the south. It was then April, 1220, the Year of the Serpent.

Muhammad had gone south from Samarkand to Balkh, on the edge of the lofty ranges of Afghanistan. Hesitating between varied counsel and his own dread, he turned due west, crossing the barrens to the mountain region of Northern Persia, and arrived at Nisapur, putting, as he thought, five hundred miles between him and the Mongol horde.

Leaving the caskets containing his jewels at a fortress—where the Mongols found them later—he decided to journey to Bagdad. To Bagdad, where ruled the very Kalif with whom he had quarreled in other days.

But at Hammadan the Mongols appeared at his heels. His men were scattered and ridden down, and a few arrows shot at him—the Mongols unaware of his identity. He escaped and doubled back toward the Caspian. Some of his Persian warriors grew discontented and rebellious, and Muhammad saw fit to sleep in a small tent pitched beside his own. And one morning he found the empty tent filled with arrows.

"Is there no place on earth," he asked an officer, "where I can be safe from the Mongol thunderbolt?"

He was advised to take ship on the Caspian and go out to an island where he could be hidden until his sons and atabegs could collect an army strong enough to defend him.

This Muhammad did. Disguising himself, with a few nondescript followers, he passed through the gorges, seeking a small town on the western shore of the Caspian—a place of fishermen and merchants, tranquil enough. But the Shah, weary and ill, deprived of his court, his slaves and cup companions, would not sacrifice the prestige of his name. He insisted on reading the public prayers in the mosque, and his identity did not long remain a secret.

A Muhammadan who once suffered oppression at the hand of the Shah betrayed him to the Mongols, who had scattered another Persian army at Kasvin, and were questing after Muhammad through the hills. They rode into the town that had sheltered him, as he was preparing to enter a fishing skiff.

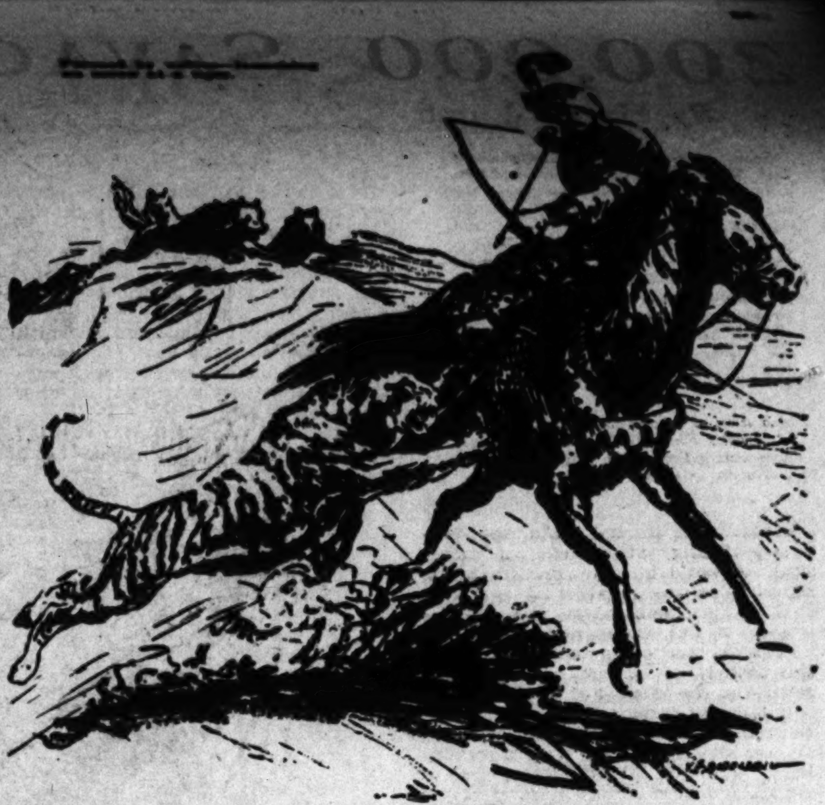
Arrows flew, but the boat drew away from the shore and some of the nomads in their rage urged their horses into the water. They swam after the skiff until the strength of men and beasts gave out and they disappeared in the waves.

Although they never laid hand on the Shah, they had slain him. Weakened by disease and hardship, this overlord of Islam died on his island, so poverty-ridden that his only shroud was a shirt of one of his followers.

Meanwhile Genghis Khan withdrew his warriors from the lowlands during the heat of the summer—a burning, sultry heat that distressed the men accustomed to the high altitudes of the Gobi. He led them up into the cooler ranges beyond the Amu.

To keep them occupied while the horse herds grazed—and with an eye to discipline—he issued an order for the favorite pastime of the horde, a season's hunt.

A Mongol hunt was no less than a regular campaign, against beasts instead of men. The whole horde shared in it, and its rules had been laid down by the Khan himself, which means that they were inexorable.



Juchi, the Master of Hunting, being absent on duty, his lieutenant galloped off to survey and mark several hundred miles of hills. Streamers were planted for the starting points of the various regiments. Beyond the horizon the gurtai, or closing point of the hunt, was chosen and likewise marked.

Witness, then, the squadrons of the horde, in high fettle, moving off to right and left, bivouacking under the orders of the hunters, waiting the arrival of the Khan and the fanfare of horns and cymbals that would start them off. They were thus arranged in a shallow half-circle, covering perhaps eighty miles or so of countryside.

The Khan appearing with his higher officers, and princes and youthful grandsons, the riders mounted, forming a close-knit line, sometimes two ranks deep. They carried all weapons and equipment used against human enemies, with the addition of wicker shields.

The horses surged forward, the officers dropped behind their commands, and the rousing of the animals began. The warriors were forbidden to use their arms against the animals, and it was a real disgrace to allow any four-footed thing to slip through the line of riders. They crushed through thickets, beat up gullies and climbed hillocks, shouting and clamoring when a tiger or wolf was seen sliding out of the brush.

Matters went a little harder in the night. After the first month of the hunt, great numbers of animals were massing ahead of the half-circle of humans. The warriors went into camp, lighted fires, posted sentries. There was even the usual password. Officers went the rounds. No easy matter to keep a line of pickets when all the four-footed life of the mountains was astir in front of them—eyes glowing from the ground, the howling of wolves and the spitting snarl of leopards breaking through the silence.

Harder still a month later, when the circle had drawn in a bit and the multitude of animals began to feel it was being driven. No relaxing the rigor of the hunt. If a fox went to earth it must be dug out again with mattocks; if a bear trundled into a hole in the rocks, some one must go in after it—without injuring the bear! Many a chance here for the young warriors to show their skill and fearlessness. Especially if a solitary tusked boar—or a herd—turned and rushed the line of riders.

Here and there appeared the old Khan, watching the behavior of the men, and the way the officers handled them. He said nothing during the hunt, but he remembered such details.

Guided by the huntsmen, the half-circle closed its wings, nearing the gurtai. The beasts began to feel the pressure—deer leaping into view with quivering flanks, tigers turning this way and that, heads lowered, snarling. Out of sight, beyond the gurtai, the circle was closed, tightening around the game. The brazen clamor of cymbals and the roar of shouting grew louder; the ranks formed two and three deep; the Khan, riding up to the mass of men and frantic beasts, gave a signal. The riders parted to let him through.

By old custom the Khan was to be first among the cornered beasts. He carried a bare sword in one hand, his bow in the other. It was permissible to use weapons now. The chroniclers say that he picked out the more dangerous of the brute antagonists, launching his arrows at a tiger, or reining his horse against wolves.

When he had killed several beasts, he withdrew from the ring, riding up a hill overlooking the gurtai and sitting there under a pavilion to watch the exploits of the princes and officers who next entered. It was a Mongol arena, the gladiatorial games of the nomads, and as with the gladiators of Rome, not a few who entered the arena were carried from it mangled or lifeless.

When the signal for the general slaying was given, the warriors of the horde surged forward, taking what lay in their path. A whole day might pass in this slaughter of game—until the grandsons and boy princes of the horde came, as custom required, to the Khan to beg that the surviving animals should be allowed to live. This request was granted, and the hunters turned to gather up the carcasses.

This hunting trained the warriors, and the closing in of the ring of riders was used in warfare against human beings as well.

In this year and in an enemy country, the hunt lasted no longer than four months. The Khan wished to be ready for the autumn campaign.

Until now the Mongols had marched almost without interruption through Islam. They had crossed rivers, and taken cities, as swiftly as a modern traveler with servants and a caravan might pass from place to place.

Meanwhile, as he hunted, the population of Islam was arming against him. Their Shah lost to them, they began to muster under their natural leaders, the Persian princes and the sayyids, the descendants of a warrior prophet.

Genghis Khan was quite aware of his situation. He knew that the real test of strength was before him—that perhaps a million men, good horsemen and exceedingly well armed, were now ready to move against him.

Then Genghis Khan ordered the horde forth, no longer to maneuver and pillage with half-indifferent contempt of their foes, but to destroy the manpower that existed around him.

Redl's "Who's Who" among foreign spies operating in Austria-Hungary.

And what began as a pleasant visit to sip Tokay ended soon after for Ito with an enforced stay behind prison bars.

That room at the K. S., as well as many other scientific and psychological traps for foreign spies, were only part of Major Redl's equipment, the mechanical part of it. Even more effective was the deftness of his personality.

The illustration I select may seem curious, in so much as it shows Major Redl getting the best of a child. But spies and detectives have told me it is easier to fish in the well-stocked, if guarded, minds of adults than in the unformed rambling and shy mind of a child.

For decades there had been bad blood between Austria-Hungary and its neighbor, Serbia. Peace and war between the two were in a state of delicate equilibrium.

Now Serbia by itself would not have given the "war college" of Austria-Hungary any great concern. But behind Serbia was its powerful ally, Russia. And allied to Russia was France, with England as another probable ally.

In back of Austria-Hungary, on the other hand, was the German Empire.

As every schoolboy now knows, this line-up of powers made the Great War. And even in 1900, when Major Redl had charge of the Secret Service of Austria-Hungary, in every war college in Europe there was uneasy knowledge that trouble was brewing.

Taking the German General von Moltke's degree of preparedness as model, the war college of Austria-Hungary, with General Conrad von Hoetzendorff, commander-in-chief of the army, as "professor," studied particularly how best to invade Serbia at the instant of war. It takes years to mature such a plan.

"Plan Three," for the invasion of Serbia between Drinamundung and Savemundung, was the slowly maturing pet project of the war college of Austria-Hungary.

And it was Major Redl's duty to see that no one outside of the war college learned a syllable of Plan Three.

He succeeded apparently so well as chief of the Secret Service that he won promotion after promotion, until he became Colonel Redl and was made a member of the Prague Army Corps, and as such was a participant in the formulation of Plan Three.

At about this time Redl took stock of himself. As a brilliant and quickly rising Austrian army officer he commanded a respectable salary. But Colonel Redl's lust for luxury was anything but respectable, in proportion to his income.

From his own country Redl could count on only a colonel's salary. From Russia—if he chose—he could confidently expect the income of a prince.

One day there came on a visit to gay Vienna a Russian nobleman who held the purse-strings of the Secret Service in his country. Colonel Redl, as a sort of "friendly enemy" colleague, helped to make Vienna still more gay for the visitor.

Then one day the two, apparently to recuperate from too much Viennese night life, went out into the country for a stroll.

Colonel Redl led to a hilltop from which there was a fine view to be had in every direction. There was not a soul in sight. Whereupon Colonel Redl and the Russian began to talk business.

Then the visitor went back to Russia and Colonel Redl went back to work.

Not long after this the heir to the throne of Austria-Hungary, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, visited Russia, where he was so lavishly entertained that he felt grateful.

Like most royal princes, he was rather out of touch with hard reality. As a graceful gesture he asked Colonel Redl that Austro-Hungarian espionage in Russia be reduced.

But just about this time a Russian colonel privately came to see an Austro-Hungarian military attache in Warsaw. The Russian colonel, like Colonel Redl, had appetites too rich for a mere colonel's salary.

So he quietly offered to sell to Austria-Hungary something that had been carefully matured by the Russian war college.

This was a detailed plan for a Russian military invasion of Germany and Austria-Hungary at the outbreak of war.

The military attache knew, of course, of Archduke Francis Ferdinand's desire to reduce his country's spying on Russia. But these plans were far too important to pass by, the Crown Prince notwithstanding.

The military attache therefore did not disturb Archduke Francis Ferdinand with the consideration of the Russian colonel's offer, but took the papers and the terms of sale directly to Colonel Redl.

The colonel read them.

"Did you examine these plans?" he asked sharply.

"No, but I have an idea of how important they are," said the military attache.

Col. Redl went to his private safe—this was in the living-room I have described in the K. S.—and securely locked up the papers.

"I shall cite to your superiors—discreetly, of course, but to your benefit—your keen judgment in this matter, Lieutenant," Colonel Redl said softly. "You did exactly the right thing not to trouble the Archduke and to come straight to me.

"I am sorry to inform you, however, that your Russian colonel is not a traitor, as you hoped, but a charlatan. These plans for which he asks a fortune were drawn up not by the Russian war college but in his own none-too-brilliant imagination. Tell him we will have nothing to do with him."

The lieutenant was disappointed. But he need not have been. For the plans were of the highest importance. They were returned quietly and safely to the archives of the war college whence they had been stolen.

And not long after that Colonel Redl anonymously bought a house in Vienna; two shining motors; and luxuriously furnished a private apartment—very private, indeed—in Prague.

But the Rusian colonel who had offered the plans for sale was visited one night by several of his fellow-officers. As regimental comrades they accorded him the privilege of blowing out his own brains with a revolver. Which he did.

There followed, for Colonel Redl, a long period of prosperity. Financially he flourished far beyond the knowledge of his colleagues. But he also won rapid promotion for his apparent services to his country.

One foreign spy after another was lured by him to destruction, much as the Piper of Hamlin lured the rats.

It was true that this success was somewhat offset by the number of distressing fatalities among Austro-Hungarian spies in Russia.

Colonel Redl's men were bewildered by the bad luck that seemed to follow his field workers in the Czar's country.

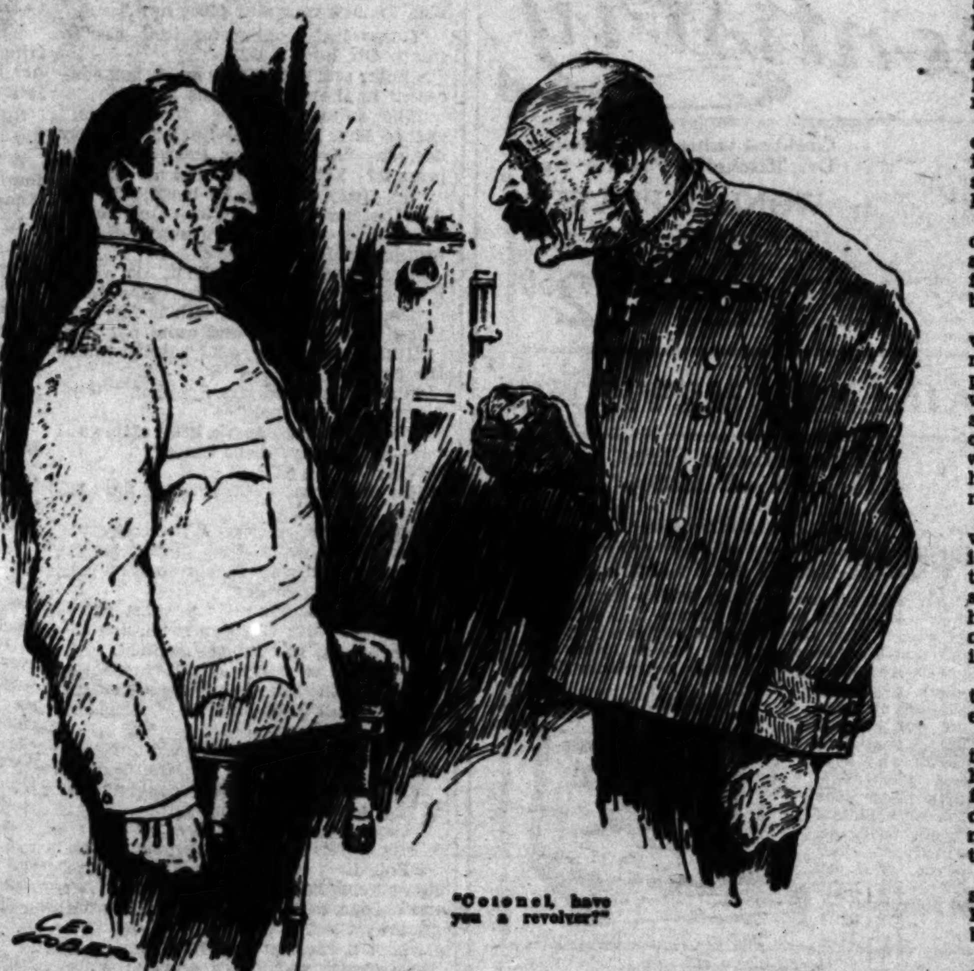
But they were dazzled by the competence and success of their chief at home.

Finally, the Austro-Hungarian General Staff began to feel that Colonel Redl was too brilliant a man to be wasted on even such an important position as head of the Secret Service. He was promoted to be chief of staff of the Eighth Army Corps stationed at Prague.

This was the corps which would have most to do with the carrying out of "Plan Three" when it came to invading Serbia.

Colonel Redl was succeeded by Captain Ronge as Chief of the K. S. Captain Ronge was a sterling officer, and almost sentimental in his worship of his predecessor's genius.

"I shall attempt to follow worthily in your footsteps, colonel," he said. This was at a farewell affair to Colonel Redl.



"Colonel, have you a revolver?"

"But I am afraid I cannot fill your shoes."

Colonel Redl put his hand on Ronge's shoulders and looked proudly at others of the K. S. staff.

"Captain Ronge and colleagues!" he said. "My greatest achievements are the men I leave behind me at the Kundshafts Stelle!"

It was a graceful speech and perhaps a true one. But Colonel Redl himself did not realize how truly he had spoken—until it came home to him years later.

In addition to the organization he had raised to superb efficiency, Colonel Redl left behind him several books written by him. They were all in manuscript and were not in the least for general circulation. They were manuals on how to trap foreign spies; and how to keep from being trapped while spying on foreign soil.

Then he took his new and lofty place in the war college of Austria-Hungary.

We come now to the year before the world-wide explosion of 1914. The studies in the various European war colleges were ripening with their devastating projects.

The atmosphere of Europe, as the world learned only too soon—and too late—was as dangerous as a vast storehouse of dynamite. A spark, a revolver shot would set the whole thing off.

In Vienna the Secret Service was watching the mails. The postal authorities were told that the government was on the lookout for a great organization of smugglers.

This was the reason given why Secret Service men opened private letters in the general postoffice, read them, and, sealing them up again, let the mail proceed.

What was really going on was a hunt for foreign spies.

One day the Secret Service men opened an envelope addressed rather oddly:

Opera Ball, 13,
Poste Restante,
General Postoffice,
Vienna.

Inside was found about two thousand, eight hundred dollars in Austrian kronen—and not a word of explanation.

The postmark was Eydtkuhnen in East Prussia, a tiny town on the Russian frontier. Eydtkuhnen! Known to the Secret Service as the corridor most favored by spies of half a dozen countries for passing from one country to another.

The envelope was sealed up again and put back in its place to await its owner.

An electrician was called. Under the ledge over which the letter would be handed by the postal clerk to the person who should call for "Opera Ball, 13" a push-button was installed. From it a wire led across the street to a branch police station in the Fleishmarkt.

"The moment this letter is called for," the postal clerk was instructed, "push this button and be as slow as you can in handing over the letter."

In the police station two Secret Service detectives were assigned to do nothing but wait for the newly installed electric bell to ring.

They waited. They waited a week; two weeks; three; a month. Not a ring from the postoffice. April passed. May was almost gone. Still not a sound. And there in the postoffice still lay unclaimed an envelope with two thousand, eight hundred dollars in it. Had news of the trap leaked out?

On the eighty-third day of waiting one of the Secret Service men was negligent enough to go out for a cup of coffee several doors from the station house. The other was also out of the room washing his hands in the corridor.

But to his ears came a sound that shocked him. The little electric bell was ringing.

Dashing back into the room to make sure he snatched up his coat and hat and started for the general delivery window of the postoffice. But he made a slight detour to call out to his partner at the cafe.

Both hurried breathlessly to see who had called for Opera Ball, 13. They found no one but the clerk at the window.

"You've missed your man!" exclaimed the clerk. "He left by that door about half a minute ago."

The detectives rushed to the street just in time to see a taxi turn the corner. And not another taxi in sight!

The two men looked at each other in dismay. Assigned to such a simple task, with so much depending on it, they had bungled and failed!

The fact that they had caught the number on the taxi's license plate cheered them but little. The fox would know enough to double on his trail at the first convenient corner. What would Colonel Redl have said to such bungling! What rotten luck!

But it turned out that the two men had little reason to complain of their luck that day. As one of them later expressed it when I talked to him in Innsbruck, "We had hunter's luck that day—Jagergluck!"

For, twenty minutes later, a taxi rolled by them and there on the license plate was the number they had noted.

They hailed the taxi. "I saw you driving by with my brother-in-law twenty minutes ago," said one of the detectives to the driver. "Where did you take him?"

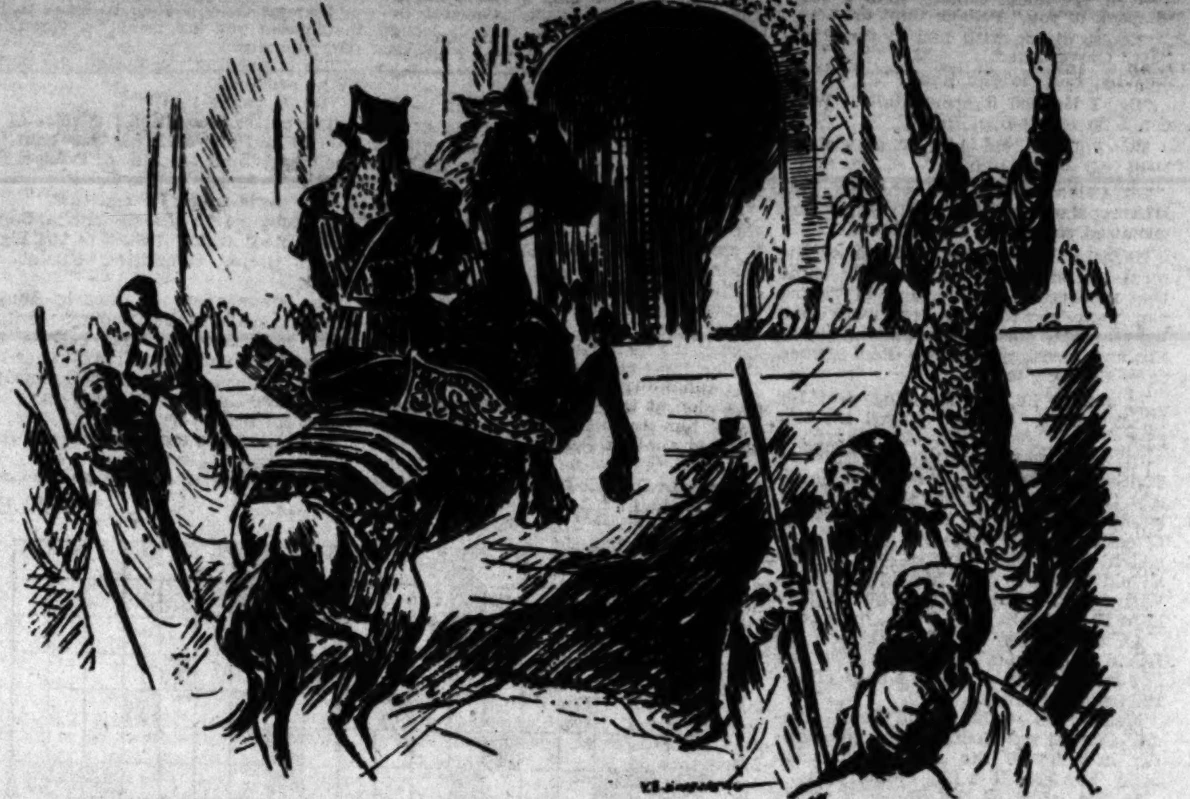
200,000 SAVAGE NOMADS

By Harold Lamb

Seven hundred years ago, Muhammad Shah, the War Lord of Islam, inquired curiously, "Who is Genghis Khan?" He was told that Genghis Khan was the Mongol chieftain who had led his horde of wild men from the steppes of the Gobi Desert to the conquest of Cathay. But that meant little to the great Muhammad, whose domain was then the greatest in the world. Indifferently he put to death some Mongol traders. Genghis Khan, from his desert camp, sent this message to the surprised ruler: "Thou hast chosen war. That will happen which will happen."

What happened is told below in the fifth of a series of articles dealing with the career of Genghis Khan, a leader whose conquests were more extensive than those of Napoleon, Alexander or Caesar.



He rode his horse up the steps of the mosque—the mullahs expected fire from heaven to blast him.

The Mongols Sweep Down 2000 Miles Through Snow and Ice to Destroy a Whole Population—How Genghis Khan Trained Men to Hunt and Kill Enemies as They Did Beasts

ISLAM was a martial world, appreciative of song, with an ear not unmusical. A world beset by inward throes, slave-ridden wealth gathering, and more than a little addicted to vice and intrigue. It left the management of its affairs to extortioners and its women to the custody of eunuchs, and its conscience to the keeping of Allah.

It followed various dogmas, and it interpreted the Koran in different ways. It gave alms to beggars, washed scrupulously, gathered in sunlit courtyards to gossip, and lived largely by favor of the great. At least once during its lifetime it made the journey to the black meteorolite under a velvet curtain within Mecca, the stone that was the Ka'aba. Upon this pilgrimage the men of Islam rubbed shoulders, renewed their zeal, and came home rather awed by the immensity of their lands and the multitudes of the believers.

Centuries ago their prophet had lighted a fire that had been carried far by the Arabs. Since then all the various peoples of Islam had been united in a common cause—conquest. The first waves of warriors had spread to Granada, in Spain, and all Northern Africa, Sicily and Egypt. In time the military power of Islam had passed from the Arabs to the Turks, but both had joined in the holy war against the mailed host of Christian crusaders that came to wrest Jerusalem from them.

Now in the beginning of the thirteenth century Islam was at the height of its martial power. The weakening crusaders had been driven to the coast of the Holy Land, and the first wave of the Turks were taking Asia Minor away from the soldiery of the degenerate Greek empire.

In the center of Islam, Muhammad Shad of Kharesm had enthroned himself as war lord. His domain extended from India to Bagdad, and from the Sea of Aral to the Persian Gulf. Except for the Seljuk Turks, victors over the crusaders, and the rising Mamluk dynasty in Egypt, his authority was supreme.

The core of his host of four hundred thousand warriors was made up of the Kharesm Turks, but he had besides the armies of the Persians at his summons. War elephants, vast camel trains, and a multitude of armed slaves followed him.

But the main defense of his empire was the chain of great cities along the rivers: Bokhara, the center of Islam's academies and mosques; Samarkand, of the lofty walls and pleasure gardens; Balkh, and Herat, the heart of Khorassan.

This world of Islam, with its ambitious shah, its multitudes of warriors and its mighty cities, was almost unknown to Genghis Khan.

Two problems had to be solved before he could lead his army forth. When he had moved to the conquest of China he had taken most of his desert confederacy with him. Now he must leave a vast empire behind him for several years—an empire newly knit, which must be governed even from the other side of the mountain ranges.

With this problem he dealt in his own way. Muhuli was keeping Cathay occupied with fire and sword, and the princes of Liao were busy enough restoring order behind him. Genghis Khan combed over the rest of his empire for notables in the conquered countries, men of family and ambition who might cause trouble in his absence. To each of these a Mongol courier was sent with a silver tablet and a summons to the horde. On the pretense of needing their services the Khan took them with him out of the empire.

There remained the greater problem—to transport the horde of a quarter-million warriors from Lake Baikul over the ranges of Mid-Asia into Persia. A distance of some two thousand miles as the crow flies, and a country wherein travelers today only venture with a well-equipped caravan. A march impossible for a modern army of that size.

He had no doubt of the ability of the horde to make the march. In it, he had fashioned a fighting force that was able to go anywhere on land. Half of it never saw the Gobi again, but some of his Mongols marched over ninety degrees of longitude and back again.

In the spring of 1219, he gave orders for the horde to rendezvous in the pasture lands of a river in the southwest. Here assembled the tumans under the different marshals, each man bringing with him a string of four or five horses. Great herds of cattle were driven to the pastures, and fattened comfortably during the summer. The youngest son of the Khan arrived to assume command, and in the first crisp days of autumn the Khan himself rode over from Karakorum.

Slowly, the horde moved through the smaller ranges, driving the cattle herds. It was about two hundred thousand strong—too great a number to keep together, as they must live on the herds and the country. Juchi, the eldest son, was detached with a couple of tumans, to join the fiery general, Chepe Noyon, on the other side of the T'ian-shan. The rest spread out, keeping to the valleys.

The march began when the dawn drum-roll sounded, the herds being started off first, and the warriors following with the carts. At evening the herds would be overtaken, the standard of the officer commanding pitched, and the camp would rise around it, the warriors taking their yurts from the camels or carts.

Rivers had to be crossed. The horses, roped together by the saddle horns, twenty or more in a line, breasted the current. Sometimes the riders had to swim, holding to the tails. A branch would be thrust into the leather kit, and the lacing tightened, so it would float, tied to the warrior's girdle. Before long they could cross rivers on the ice.

Snow covered everything, even the sand dunes of the wastes. Withered gray tamarisk danced under the wind gusts, like the ghosts of old men. The trails were marked by antelopes' or wild sheep's horns projecting through the drifts.

The main body of the horde moved slowly westward, dropping through gorges, and over frozen lakes to the icy floor of the Sungarian gate, the pass from which all the nomad clans have come out of High Asia. Here they were buffeted by winds and chilled by a cold so great that whole herds might be frozen if caught in the pass during a buran, a black windstorm. By now most of the cattle had died off and had been eaten. The last stores of hay had vanished; the carts had been left behind, and only the hardiest of the camels had survived.

Forging ahead in the utter cold, two hundred thousand men endured hardships that would have put a modern division into hospital. The Mongols did not seem to mind it particularly. Wrapped up in their sheepskins and leather, they could sleep under drifting snow; at need, the round, heavy yurts warmed them. When food failed, they opened a vein in a horse, drank a small quantity of blood, and closed the vein.

On they went, scattered over a hundred miles of mountain country, the sledges rolling in their wake, the bones of dead animals marking their trail.

Before the snow melted they were out on the western steppes. By the time the first grass showed, they were threading into the last barrier of the Black Range. On lean horses, they finished the first twelve hundred miles of their march.

Now the various divisions closed up, liaison officers began to gallop back and forth between the commands; nondescript-looking merchants rode off in groups of two or three to hunt information. A screen of scouts was thrown ahead of each column.

Through the forests, they could see below them the first frontier of Islam, the wide river Syr, now swollen by spring freshets.

Muhammad the Warrior, called by his people a second Alexander, had been twice defeated by the advance forces of the Mongol horde before Genghis Khan appeared. Then the Khan hastened out of the desert—so eager to make haste that he did not linger to molest the little towns in his path, and asked only water for his horses. He expected to surprise Muhammad at Bokhara; but when he arrived he learned that the Shah had fled. He was confronted by one of the strongholds of Islam, the city of academies, by a wall twelve leagues in circuit, through which ran a fair river, lined with gardens and pleasure houses.

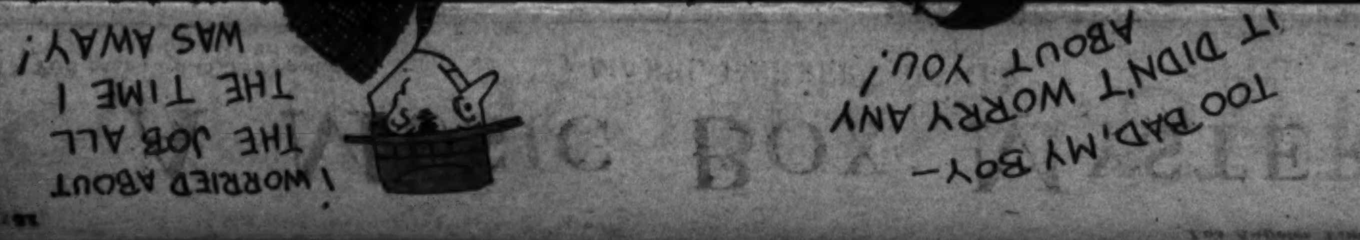
Genghis Khan had said, "The strength of a wall is neither greater nor less than the courage of the men who defend it." In this case the Turkish officers chose to leave the townspeople to their fate and escape to join the Shah. So they went out, with the soldiery of the Shah at night, by the water gate, and headed toward the Amu.

A flood of Moslem horsemen soon filled the wide streets of the city, breaking into the granaries and storehouses, stabling their horses in the libraries, to the frantic sorrow of the Muhammadans, who beheld more than once the sacred leaves of the Koran trodden under the hoofs of the ponies. The Khan himself drew rein before an imposing building, the great mosque of the city, and asked if it were the house of the emperor. He was told that it was the house of Allah.

At once he rode his horse up the steps and into the mosque, dismounting, and ascending to the reader's desk, with its giant Koran. Here, in his black lacquer armor, and leather-curtained helmet, he addressed the assembled mullahs and scholars, who had expected to behold fire descend from heaven to blast this ungainly figure in strange armor.

"I have come to this place," he said to them, "only to tell you that you must find provender for my army. The countryside is bare of hay and grain, and my men are suffering from want. Open, then, the doors of your storehouses."

Genghis Khan stayed only two hours in Bokhara, hastening on to seek the Shah in Samarkand, the strongest of Islam's cities. The Shah had fled, but he left twenty armored elephants and one hundred and ten thousand warriors, Turks and Persians, to guard the city. The Mongols were less numerous than the garrison, and Genghis Khan made preparations for a long siege—as-



I WORRIED ABOUT THE JOB ALL THE TIME I WAS AWAY!
TOO BAD, MY BOY—IT DIDN'T WORRY ANY ABOUT YOU!

A MUSIC BOX MYSTERY

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

"IF YOU hadn't led to their spades—" Mrs. Hall rose from the bridge table with a martyred air. "You knew the Queen wasn't out!"

"I'm sorry—I know I played wretchedly," Helen's flush deepened.

A blunder in the first hand—Then growing more and more nervous under her partner's patronizing coaching.

Oblivious to her humiliation, Warren still talking shop with Mr. Sheldon.

Helen's first visit to the Sheldons' pretentious apartment—all strangers. Her out-of-things disconcertion.

Longing to escape. Dreading the rest of the evening—forced conversation with the superior Mrs. Hall, whose game she had spoiled.

Refreshments now. Retreating to a window seat with an ice she didn't want.

"Mrs. Curtis, you look lonesome way over there! Come join us," the hostess dutifully polite.

She shouldn't have withdrawn—more conspicuous. Her embarrassment aggravated, Helen rose. Stooping for her dropped napkin—almost spilling the ice.

Knowing she was crimsoning. Her awkward, self-consciousness!

"Laura, you must show us your collection," urged Mrs. Hall, when the maid removed the tray. "Any new ones I haven't seen?"

"Yes, Ed gave me one for my birthday," Mrs. Sheldon opened an antique cabinet.

Three shelves crowded with old-fashioned music boxes. Most of them miniature. French, Swiss, Viennese.

"I love this one," winding a satinwood box that tinkled a gay little polka.

Some with a repertoire of several airs—ornately inscribed inside the lid.

A fascinating collection. Helen forgetting her mortification. She might play atrocious bridge, but she knew these old music boxes. She had one bought in Vienna—the painted case dated 1803.

Eager to speak of it. Waiting for an opening—not just drag it in.

But no break in Mrs. Hall's monologue. Dilating on two she had bought in Geneva—starting a rival collection.

Attracted by the jingled tunes, the men sauntered over.

"Where's that seal, Laura?" Mr. Sheldon obviously proud of his wife's collection. "That's your star piece now."

"I was just looking for that—it's so small—Oh, here it is."

A letter seal with a tiny music box concealed in the coat-of-arms base!

"That's too adorable for words!" gushed Mrs. Hall, as it tinkled a dainty minuet. "And it plays every time you press it? You never showed me this."

"No, that's the one Ed bought for me—at the Anderson Galleries. Only forty-five dollars—wasn't that absurdly cheap? And it's gold!"

"Don't want to sell it, do you?" laughed Mrs. Hall. "I'd give twice that."

"Oh, I wouldn't part with it for anything! It's unique—and quite old."

"I have one dated, 1803," Helen seized the chance.

"A seal?" amazed Mrs. Sheldon. "Why, I never saw another."

"No, not a seal. Just a little satinwood box—but it plays three tunes."

"Oh!"

Her announcement had fallen flat. Ill-timed after all.

Several other oddities in the collection. A ponderous watch that played on the hours. An old book on chiromancy with a tune-playing cover.

But the seal plainly the most prized possession. Mrs. Sheldon rewinding it—trilling again the delicate minuet.

"I'd love to carry it off!" enthused Helen, for the sake of saying something. "Where shall I put it? Here?" replacing it in the cabinet.

Shrinking back in resigned insignificance. Ignored—even by Mrs. Sheldon.

After eleven—surely they could go now. Trying to catch Warren's eye.

"I hate to break up the party," she ventured finally. "But it's past eleven."

"You don't call that late?" Mrs. Sheldon putting back the music boxes. "We're such night owls—Now what'd I do with that seal?"

"Isn't it there?" Mrs. Hall jumped up. "Mrs. Curtis, you had it last—"

"Why, yes, I laid it right there," flustered Helen. "On the second shelf."

"Well, it's not there now!" after a lorgnetted inspection.

"It's here somewhere, of course," Mrs. Sheldon sliding out all the shelves.

A flurried search of the cabinet—futile!

Looking on the rug now. In the corners of the couch—

"Checking-out time," Warren striding over. "What's wrong—something lost?"

"Oh, dear, that lovely seal!" quivered Helen.

"Just mislaid," Mrs. Sheldon still searching the cabinet.

"Mrs. Curtis had it last," volunteered Mrs. Hall. "She says she put it back—"

"I'm sure I did!" protested Helen, with unnecessary emphasis. "What else could I have done? Why, I'm positive! I put it right here!"

Growing more confused. Still explaining. Her unconvincing repetition!

They didn't doubt her? They couldn't think—

Then catching Mrs. Hall's accusing gaze. Yes, she did!

"Please don't worry. It'll turn up, I know," reassured Mrs. Sheldon.

"Couldn't walk off," shrugged Warren. "You'll find it tomorrow."

"I hope so," Mrs. Hall's I-doubt-it air.

Everyone anxious to go now. A departing stir.

In the bedroom, Helen hurriedly getting on her things. Trying to think of something to say—something casual, convincing. But wretchedly, guiltily dumb.

When she put back the seal—her silly remark about wanting to carry it off. They should know she wouldn't have said that if—But no, they might think she had done it purposely—to throw off suspicion!

Flaming indignation. A primitive desire to fly at Mrs. Hall—strike her—scream at her!

The men with their hats and sticks waiting in the hall.

The usual parting insincerities. "Enjoyed it so much"— "We must have another game soon."

The Sheldons seeing them to the elevator. Helen wincingly conscious of her flushed confusion—more noticeable under the bright hall lights.

Would that car never come? Frantic to escape. Almost in tears.

"Oh, wait, Harold—hold still!" the fringe on Mrs. Hall's bead bag caught on her husband's sleeve button. "No, don't jerk it!"

Still waiting for the car, all idly watching her untangle the fringe—

A tinkle! The faint silvery tinkle of a familiar minuet.

The lost seal! The music box—
In Mrs. Hall's bag!

A stunned silence until the last rippling note.

"Why—why, of all things!" Mrs. Hall's shrill laugh. "How could it have got in there?"

Her face beet red, she fumbled in the incriminating bag.

"I—I must've picked it up with my handkerchief!"

"Yes, it's so tiny," hastily conceded Mrs. Sheldon. "You'd hardly notice it."

"It—it might've dropped in—" producing the now subdued seal. "I—I remember I had my bag open. It could so easily have dropped in—"

"Oh, easily. But it really didn't matter—I'm sorry we were so disturbed."

"Yes—no—of course not!" stammering. "But I wouldn't have you lose it for worlds."

"Glad it's found," brusqued Warren. "Well, here's the car."

"Mrs. Curtis, I'd love to see your music box," Mrs. Sheldon now atoningly cordial. "1803, did you say? That is early. I hope you'll ask us over soon."

"We'd love to have you," murmured Helen, accepting the indirect apology.

"Well, good night! Good night!" the final chorus.

A moment later in the cab. Helen's hot face snuggled against the consoling roughness of his coat.

"Here, now, none of that! Nothing for you to get worked up over."

"Oh, what a ghastly evening!" still tremulous. "You know what they thought—"

"Can't blame 'em," dryly. "Way you floundered around—Almost had me thinkin' you'd swiped it!"

"Warren!"

"Aw, can't you ever take a joke!" lighting a cigar. "But why in blazes didn't you shut up? Why all the protesting? Kept bleatin' you'd put it back—who said you hadn't?"

"I had it last—and the way Mrs. Hall looked at me—But of course I'd be the one to feel guilty—I always do! Oh, it makes me wild—I'm always putting myself in the wrong!"

"Got the gift, all right. But never mind, Kitten," tossing out the match. "Better than being in the wrong! Did you see Hall's face? Jove, tough on him."

"Dear, she must be a kleptomaniac! Her best friend, too."

"Huh, just plain crooked. Some of these female collectors would loot their grandmother. Couldn't buy it—so she annexed it! Talk about your embarrassing moments! When that darn thing chirped up in her bag—Well, next time she swipes antiques—she won't pick the tune-playin' kind!"

Pollack then called up police headquarters and found his man there.

"You're working late today, my friend," Pollack said.

"Important case," Gayer said cautiously.

"Well, it's about Colonel Redl I want to speak to you," Pollack went on.

"You're dining with him at the Riedhof?" Gayer asked.

"Why, how do you know?"

"Oh, I learned it accidentally. What can I do for Colonel Redl?"

Dr. Pollack told him what Colonel Redl had said to him.

But Colonel Redl's face, when Dr. Pollack reported to him what Gayer had promised, showed no sign of relief.

He said little during the rest of the meal. An orchestra—and it seems to me that nowhere in the world as in Vienna can orchestras woo the heart with such light-hearted charm—was playing one of Strauss's ravishing waltzes. Redl seemed to be listening to it.

In reality he was brooding over his latest failure, He had played his last card.

His hope had been that the Chief of Police would send him a detective as escort that night; that the Secret Service, seeing this, would be content to let the detective be the sole but unsuspected watch over the Colonel—until they should decide to take him into custody. With only a city detective to outwit, perhaps there might have been a chance.

At eight-thirty Dr. Pollack saw his friend to his room at the Hotel Klomser and left him apparently in a more cheerful frame of mind.

Meanwhile, at the Grand Hotel, General Conrad von Hoetzendorff, commander in chief of the Austro-Hungarian army, was host to a gay dinner party.

In the midst of the dinner a waiter brought him the card of General August Urbanski von Ostromiecz. "May I speak to you privately?" was written on the back. "I am in the office of the hotel manager."

General von Hoetzendorff excused himself to his guests.

In the manager's private office he found General Urbanski pacing agitatedly

"As serious as that?" Van Hoetzendorff asked, with a bit of banter.

"General—"

The head of the united secret services of Austria-Hungary then told his commander in chief his news. He told it with the brevity of a soldier making his report. He told it in so low a tone that the strains of the orchestra drifting into the room seemed at times louder than his voice.

General von Hoetzendorff seemed to be aging as he listened. His face turned livid. A fine dew broke out on his forehead.

"He must be caught!" he cried hoarsely when the other had finished.

"He's under surveillance!"

"He must be made to reveal the extent of his treason!"

'It shall be done!" grimly.

"Then he must die!"

General Urbanski saluted.

"And under no circumstances must the manner or reason of his death be made known!"

"I understand, general!"

"If Russia should learn that we have discovered Redl's— Oh, why doesn't that hellish orchestra stop!" Then a thought struck him. "Good God, if Plan Three should be known— General, everything must take place tonight!"

"At your orders, General!"

"You, Captain Ronge, Major Hofer and Wenzel Vorlicek will see to it. Then report at once!"

At the Hotel Klomser Colonel Redl was writing in his room when, at midnight, there was a sharp knock at the door. Without invitation four officers in full uniform entered.

Colonel Redl, white-faced, immaculate, holding himself very straight, rose as they entered.

"I know why you come," he said slowly. "I have written it all in these letters."

"Any accomplices?"

"None."

"Your activities, how long and to what extent?"

"In my apartment in Prague you will find all the proofs."

"Colonel, have you a revolver?"

"May I borrow yours, Major?"

He was handed a revolver.

"Thank you," Redl said. "Good-night, gentlemen!"

The officers left without a word.

One of them posted himself across the street from the hotel. The others went to the Central Cafe and waited.

At five in the morning one of the two Secret Service men who had shadowed Colonel Redl was summoned to the cafe.

"Go to Colonel Redl's room at the Klomser with this letter," General Urbanski ordered. "If his door is locked use this pass key. No matter what has happened in his room you are to raise no alarm. Report back here."

The Secret Service man went to the hotel and showed the night porter his badge of office. "Colonel Redl expects me to deliver this letter in person," he told him.

But there was no reply to his knock on the colonel's door. The detective found it unlocked and, entering, closed the door behind him.

The lights were on. The silk shades of two of them were so tilted that strong illumination must have fallen on the face of the man who had stood up before the ceiling-high mirror in the room.

It was by this light that Colonel Redl had put the muzzle of the Browning revolver to his right temple. He lay now at the foot of the mirror, dead.

The Secret Service man left the hotel quietly and reported to his superiors in the cafe.

A quarter of an hour later the telephone bell at the reception desk of the Hotel Klomser rang. The night porter answered it.

"Request Colonel Redl to come to the instrument you are using," a voice said over the wire.

"He is sleeping," protested the porter. "Who are you?"

"Do as you're told!"

The porter recognized the voice of authority and obeyed it. It was thus that the "regrettable suicide" of Colonel Redl was made known to the world.

The world was informed that "following a long period of melancholia, Colonel Alfred Redl, Chief of Staff of the Eighth Army Corps, committed suicide last night."

The newspapers of Austria-Hungary gave top space to the announcement, but made no comment. First, because they knew of no comment to make other than obituary praise. Second, the newspapers of Austria-Hungary in those days were under the heel of the military.

A special train took General von Hoetzendorff, General Urbanski and Captain Ronge to Prague, where they went at once to Colonel Redl's apartment. Strong, specially constructed locks on the doors halted them.

Captain Ronge went in search of a locksmith and found a young fellow by the name of Wagner. "Come with me!" he ordered.

"But I don't work on Sundays," Wagner protested. "And I'm fullback on my football team, which plays Union V this morning!"

Then the young man found that he had no choice; he was drafted for "temporary military service."

He broke open the locks on Colonel Redl's doors and others in various strongboxes and desks. The three military men pounced on the contents. Wagner caught glimpses of maps, sketches, photographs, blue prints, reports of all kinds. He heard the oldest of the group exclaim with horror:

"How was it possible?"

And he caught several times the murmur of the word "Russia."

Wagner was a good locksmith and as good a fullback, but lacked curiosity or imagination. What he had seen impressed him but little.

Because of his absence his team lost that day. His captain, who during the week was assistant sporting editor on the Prager Tageblatt, lectured him next day for not showing up to play.

"I couldn't," Wagner explained. "The military made me break open some locks for them. It was Colonel Redl's apartment. They must have been looking for his will."

And he told his captain as much as he knew of what had happened.

The assistant sporting editor was no fool. Putting together the official account of Colonel Redl's suicide with what Wagner told him the captain realized that he had a sensation in his possession.

He took it to his editorial chief. There was no mistake, they decided. Colonel Redl must have been unearthed as a spy for Russia.

But it was a dangerous bomb for a newspaper in Austria-Hungary to handle; truth would not protect the paper from the explosion that was sure to follow. And yet the story was too big to let go. So this is what appeared in the Prager Tageblatt on Tuesday morning:

> We are asked by a high authority to contradict rumors which have been spread, particularly in army circles, about the Chief of Staff of the Prague Army Corps, Colonel A. Redl, who, as already reported, committed suicide in Vienna on Sunday morning. The rumors are to the effect that the colonel had been guilty of betraying military secrets to a foreign power, believed to be Russia. As a matter of fact, the commission of high officers who came to Prague to carry out a search in the dead colonel's house were investigating quite another matter—

An uproar followed; for, of course, every one read between the lines. Reporters mobbed news sources of the story. In Parliament there was commotion. And telegraph wires and cables fairly burned as the story spread throughout the world.

A year later a Serbian student, backed by high Serbian authorities, emptied his revolver in Serajevo at the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Austria-Hungary, and killed him and his wife.

The rest is schoolboy history. The Great War broke out.

Hoping against hope that his Plan Three was still a secret, General von Hoetzendorff hurled the Austro-Hungarian Army across the border into Serbia.

And at every point of attack, the Serbians, under Marshal Putnik, were there mysteriously prepared. Three times Von Hoetzendorff tried variants of Plan Three—and each time he met catastrophe.

If ghosts ever meet, thousands of Austrians killed on Serbian soil will have something to say to Colonel Redl.

But I traveled a hundred miles to Salzburg to ask one of the principals in this story a single question:

"Suppose Colonel Redl had refused to obey your order to blow out his brains?"

The man looked grimly across the vista of time and great change and obviously was back to the hour of which we have been speaking.

"It would not have done him any good!" he growled.

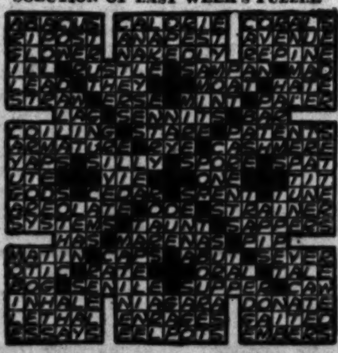
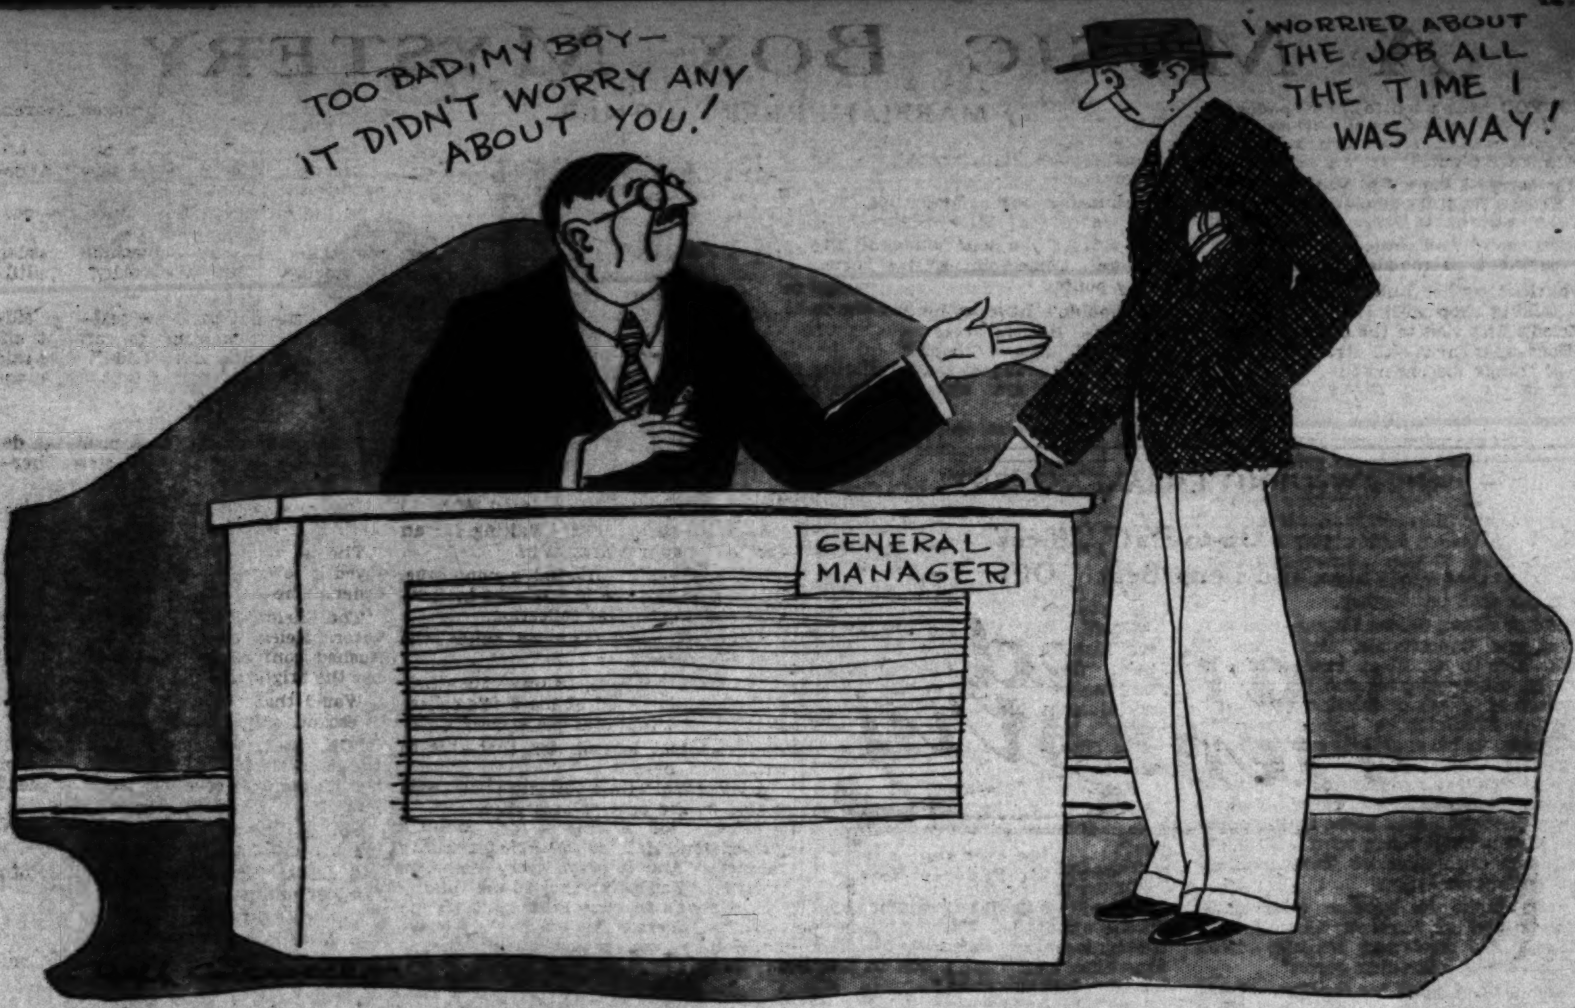
SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE





TOO BAD, MY BOY—IT DIDN'T WORRY ANY ABOUT YOU!
I WORRIED ABOUT THE JOB ALL THE TIME I WAS AWAY!
GENERAL MANAGER

Back on the Dear Old Job

By ALMA WHITAKER

GOOD-BY, nice old summer holidays. Labor Day has come and gone again—and that means we are all getting back to normal. Mind you, the summer holidays are all right. They seem the nicest thing in the world—at the end of springtime, when we have all been a bit restless and touchy.

And there is nothing like summer holidays to make us love our jobs. Even the children look forward to September and school days. In fact, holidays are only jolly when one is temporarily playing hookey from work. The most unhappy people in all the world are those who haven't any jobs, any real work to do, nothing depending on them.

Our work, our job, is the real business of life. We pretend to envy the leisure classes, but we know jolly well that the leisure classes envy us.

That hoary old joke about working harder on our holidays than we ever do at our work isn't really a joke at all. It's a human pose. Most of us are utterly wretched just loafing and trying to have a good time. We can manage it for a couple of weeks, but after that we are bored and discontented. We want to get back into the current. The halcyon backwater is just plain dull.

Besides, it disturbs us to discover that the business world, the labor world, the active world can get along so well without us. I, for instance, am never quite happy to discover that The Times continues to come out every day as usual whether I'm there or not. Mothers who are sent off on holidays for a "nice long rest" are quite disgusted to find how well the family gets along without them—it is really a little indecent of the family to have been so cheerful. Even bank presidents and gentlemen in "responsible executive positions" rather resent finding everything normal and prosperous when they return. Any hint that we are not absolutely necessary to our jobs is most disconcerting.

For which reason holidays are a sort of discipline, when one comes to think of it. Little reminders that we have jolly well got to be good if we expect to be missed.

So, no matter what kind of a fizzle our holiday was, we always insist that we have returned "like giants refreshed" and pitch into work flamboyantly grateful that our job hasn't slipped away from us while we were gone. If we really had a successful holiday and rest, so much the better . . . now we can work twice as well and be thrice as valuable to our precious job.

But a holiday and a rest that just sets us up in health and buoyancy so that we can enjoy more holidays and more rest isn't a holiday at all. That's like playing football without goals, or playing bridge without keeping score. The whole be-all and end-all of a successful holiday is to recuperate, mentally and physically, so that we can go back to work more capably and enthusiastically.

All work and no play may make Jack a dull boy, but all play and no work makes Jack a useless parasite. Useless people are far, far more tiresome to themselves and everyone else than dull ones. I once worked four years without a holiday, and played for two months without work . . . and the latter was much the hardest. After the first three weeks of it, I longed for work far more passionately than I had ever longed for a holiday.

Witness all our returning travelers these days, who have been working so hard at loafing in various parts of the world. Not one of them that isn't sighing with relief to be home again—and aching to get back to work. If there isn't some real job waiting for them, they start right in creating jobs for themselves . . . joining themselves to committees and causes and crusades, making themselves necessary to organizations and promotions, something, anything that will give them an honest raison d'etre in life, an excuse for living.

When wealthy, pampered people haven't another thing to work at, they make themselves responsible for the social and artistic life of the city, or plunge into philanthropic work—and often work harder at it than the rest of us do at our plain, ordinary jobs. When they don't, they become wretched wasters, and die early, of fatty degeneration of the heart. Even the wasters work desperately hard at being wasters . . . nothing so utterly wretched as an unoccupied existence.

The happiest people in all the world are those who have a good job and can believe themselves necessary to it—preferably a job that shows tangible evidence and reward in the pay check. But above all a job that really needs doing, that takes a capable, bright person to do it.

Our sense of reproach and contempt toward the people in the United States is perfectly reasenable. We haven't bred the sort of "leisure class" that can lend distinction to a country over here yet. This "leisure class" that we hear so much about in Europe isn't really a leisure class at all—because it is understood that when they no longer have to work for money, they will apply their time and talents to countless activities for the benefit of the state—like breeding prize cattle, raising prize vegetables, directing great public movements, managing great estates for the happiness and prosperity of their tenants, serving on national committees without pay, etc.

Critics of our colleges are of two kinds—those who say that we are not preparing our young people to fill jobs and earn their living when they graduate, and those who say we are too commercial and are not turning out sufficiently intellectual and literary students. They cannot both be right, one would suppose. But if we must err on one side or the other we are really safer in providing for the most future happiness by training these youngsters to fill jobs and earn their living—and in hoping that the intellectual interests will take care of themselves.

So now we have arrived at that attractive time of year when the summer holidays are all over and we are all set for plunging back into our beloved work. Quite significant, Labor Day coming at the close of the vacation season, with labor seeming more attractive than ever. With all the supposed glamour of the summer holidays, I doubt whether many of us would wish them prolonged another month. We have all had all the holidays we can stand for the present, thank you. By Thanksgiving Day in November, we shall be ready for a brief day's frivol, perhaps, but we cannot even look forward to Christmas yet with any enthusiasm. Any discussion of next year's holidays lacks interest. The only really exciting, thrilling idea at the moment is that we are back at work on our dear old jobs, and maybe all sorts of new, entrancing work awaits us.

Of course, we shall reserve the right to grouch about our work, and complain that we are being worked to death, and predict that we are on the verge of nervous prostration—but that is all really bragging. That is our little way of telling the world that we not only have a job, but a large, long job that requires our hardest exertions all the time . . . that we are terribly necessary and performing arduous and essential duties that no one else could do quite as well.

We never can quite resist bragging about how hard we work . . .

down the ages, turned and was making praiseworthy speed toward the starting point, for he had felt demoniac influence in the region of his ankles.

The rabble on the Cestian bridge was enchanted with this unexpected turn to the water carnival. "Ya gotta swim," they yelled. "Make yer royal legs go."

Apparently the gods from whom his clan claimed descent were on the job that day. Whence else could have come that small but serviceable log that came speeding down the current? Nero hurled himself at it and the two went on their way like a pair of well-matched wrestlers, now the Emperor on top, now the log. The latter was ahead on points when a patriotic garbage scavenger, breast deep off the Tiberine dockyard, added a Caesar to a collection already including almost everything else.

Celia had not joined the down-river parade. Her main concern was not with Nero; quite otherwise. What she wanted to know was where Drusus had gone. The waters at her feet were troubled and the head of her admirer appeared.

"And where have you been?" demanded the girl. "I thought a water devil had got you."

"The sapient Plato tells us," began Drusus after getting his breath, "that there is always room—"

"Yes; I know all about that. But what did you do to Nero?" There was a dawning suspicion in her eyes.

"Not a thing in the world," he disclaimed. "Do you think I would lay impious hand upon his sacred person? Boeotians, though," he added thoughtfully, "are very ticklish. Where is our revered sovereign, by the way?"

"They've just fished him out."

"Then I win the race."

"It looks so."

"And the prize."

"What prize?"

"You." He hauled himself up onto the barge and stood, expectant.

"Go away," said Celia severely. "You're a mess. Besides, you're rocking the boat."

The young man's expressive face fell. "D'you mean to say that I don't—that you aren't—"

"I don't believe it was a fair race, anyway," asserted the girl perversely. "To my mind, there's a strong smell of witchcraft about the thing."

At the word, "witchcraft," something clicked in the brain of the young finder-out. Witchcraft—Harpinia! Treat her rough! With one swift, sweeping motion he lifted the willful beauty from her throne and strained her to his palpitating if soggy bosom, imprinted upon her astonished lips a series of deep-sea kisses.

"Drusus!" wailed Celia. "You're ruining my new peplum. Dru—"

When she next recovered breath she said in a totally changed and somewhat awed voice: "I never knew you to act like that before. You—you seem like a different man."

"Wrong again!" jubilated Drusus. "I'm no man. I'm the swell young river-god that you Caelii are always bragging about. Now, what do you think of that?"

Not being sure but what there might be something in it, the girl didn't commit herself as to her opinion. 'Nero will be furious," she murmured.

Celia jumped up on her chair. "I do believe he's coming back."

"What for?"

"Me, probably."

"He doesn't get you," growled the self-appointed river-god.

"He will unless you do something about it. Quick! Devise something."

"All right. Can you throw a fit, Celilla mea?"

"What are you going to do?" came her anxious query.

"I'm going back to the bottom and wait. Get him as near the edge as you can, and then signal me. Make it snappy. It's close down there, and I'm getting short of fish breath."

Nero lumbered out upon the narrow craft.

"I declare this no contest," he growled.

The girl's eyes were fixed in an unearthly stare upon the swirl of the Tiber. She made no answer.

"Didn't you hear me?" demanded the ex-swimmer petulantly. "It's got to be swum over again. My thrice damned slaves—I'll send you a card to the crucifixion as soon as they're caught—went queer on me."

"Reason enough," whispered the girl, stiffening in her chair. "The daimons! The deadly water daimons!"

"What's the matter with the wench?" said Nero nervously.

"Beware," she chanted. "Beware how you trespass upon the domain of the puissant river-god."

"But I'm a sort of god myself," pointed out Nero, somewhat shaken, nevertheless. "All my family are. We're descended from a lot of gods."

"Let not the scion of the gods of earth tempt the might of the spirits of the depths."

"Well, I don't want to tempt anything," disclaimed the thoroughly uncomfortable Emperor. "Don't be so—so crawly."

He moved back from her toward the edge of the barge, just as she had a fresh access of trance and stamped violently on the deck, thrice.

Then magic. Black, wicked magic. Up rose the deck upon the crest of a submarine convulsion that seemed to be composed of equal parts of earthquake and tidal wave.

They got Nero out a quarter of a mile below and took him home in a blanket. Upon his recovery he gave utterance to that mighty thought for which he has never received due credit:

"Saltis sufficit," said the Emperor of the World. "Enough is enough."

Up from the watery depths by the barge's side thrust a grinning face.

"Have they got him yet?"

"Yes, Drusus," said Celia gently.

"Is he coming back?"

"No."

"Anybody up there with you?"

"Nobody. They've all gone."

"Get down on the deck."

"What for?"

"Get-down-on-the-deck!"

"Yes, Drusus," assented Celia sweetly, and the young man resolved to give Harpinia a golden talent at their next meeting.

"Put your face over the edge."

"Here I am."

"This," said Drusus explanatorily, is what for. Also this. And this." And after a suitable time he said: "About the race. Do I win?"

"You win," admitted Celia softly.

High on the Cestian bridge the beggar looked down and beheld a tableau in which the principal figure was familiar.

"Well, if it ain't my young friend, the fisher-laddie!" quoth he. 'And I'm the goat that told him he'd never catch anything in this part of the Tiber. Wrong again, Scorbutus!" He mounted the parapet and sent a hail ringing down the reaches of the river. "Hey, old pal! I could drink the lady's health in a coupla denarii-worth of rich, red Falernian wine."

"To the Kaiserhof Cafe," the driver said.

"Take us there."

On the way to the Kaiserhof the two men searched the taxi. They were products of Redl's system of training detectives, and though they had little reason to hope for results in this case, they burrowed between the cushions of the taxi largely from force of habit, the habit of minute search.

They found the sheath of a pocket knife, a little sack of gray suede.

But at the Kaiserhof Cafe they found no one but the waiters. And no one had come there within an hour and a half.

Again the detectives bewailed their luck; and again luck favored them. Near the cafe was a taxi rank. An old man who got small coins for opening carriage doors remembered that a gentleman had taken a taxi there some twenty minutes before and Hotel Klomser was where the gentleman told the taxi driver to take him.

To the Hotel Klomser, therefore, went the two detectives.

One of them sat down at a table of periodicals near the door and pretended to read. The other approached the dignitary who presides at the entrance to every continental hotel, the portier.

Had any one arrived at the hotel within the half-hour? asked the detective.

"Yes, several people," replied the portier. "The couple for Room 5, Herr Womser of No. 11 and the young lady in No. 2. Oh, yes. Colonel Redl also arrived. He has his usual room, No. 1."

"Do you mean the Colonel Redl?" one of the detectives asked.

"Colonel Redl of Prague is all I know of him."

The detective almost blushed as he thought again of what Colonel Redl would say if he learned how he and his partner had blundered that day.

He stooped and pretended to pick something up from the floor.

"Some one seems to have lost this little pocket-knife sheath," he said, giving it to the porter. "You might ask whose it is."

Then the detective leisurely strolled out of the hotel and crossing the street gave himself over to an idle study of the weather.

His partner inside seemed to be as idly engrossed in a copy of Simplicissimuss, smiling at what he read.

From the interior of the hotel a dappersly dressed gentleman strolled over to the portier's desk and laid down the key to No. 1. The portier touched his gold-braided cap.

'Pardon, colonel, but have you perhaps lost this pocket-knife sheath?" he asked.

The gentleman looked at it and took it. "Yes, thanks, I must have dropped it—" There was only a look of idle speculation as he began. His leisure, his whole manner was that of a man very much at ease in this world.

But suddenly the detective over the top of his Simplicissimuss, saw the face of the gentleman grow deathly white.

He remembered now where he had lost that sheath—in the taxicab where he had used his penknife in opening the envelope he had called for at the postoffice. Later, when in the second cab, he took out his penknife again he found that he had lost the sheath.

If now the portier gave it to him, what did it all mean? Who was it knew enough to bring the sheath to the Hotel Klomser after such pains as he had taken to throw possible shadowers off his trail by changing to another cab near the Kaiserhof Cafe?

His posture, perhaps a little too stiff for one who was trying to appear at ease, the gentleman strolled out of the hotel.

With the alertness of the born detective, he had noted the stranger reading Simplicissimuss. He would have wondered, had he noted the further fact that the reader of the famous satirical weekly had himself turned pale.

As soon as the gentehnan had left the hotel this detective hurried to the telephone booth and tightly closed the door.

"1233408!"

He was given his telephone number quickly, for it was that of the Kundschafts-Stelle.

Captain Ronge, successor to Colonel Redl, himself answered the telephone. What he heard made him snap.

"Blockhead! Do you realize what you are trying to make me believe?"

Nevertheless, it was Captain Ronge himself who rushed in a taxi to the general postoffice. Here he secured the receipt signed by the man to whom had been delivered the envelope marked "Opera Ball, 13."

The name signed was unknown to Captain Ronge. That didn't matter; a false name was to be expected. Back to the Kundschafts-Stelle Captain Ronge drove.

From a well-hidden file he took down several handsomely bound little books in manuscript—the books written in Colonel Redl's own hand.

Captain Ronge opened one of them entitled, "Organisation der Auskundschaftung fremder Militarverhaltnisse und die Abwehr fremder Spionage im Inlande."

On a leaf of this book telling how to guard Austro-Hungarian military secrets and at the same time ferret the secrets of other war colleges, Captain Ronge laid the signed receipt for "Opera Ball, 13."

There was no evading the conclusion. The handwriting on the receipt and the handwriting on the manuscript were one!

"Good God!" Captain Ronge whispered.

Meanwhile Colonel Redl was strolling, apparently in a mood of leisure, down the Herrengasse. At the corner of Strauchgasse he looked into a haberdasher's window.

Yes, he reflected in the mirror he saw, half a block behind, coming in his direction, the man who had been reading the Simplicissimuss in the Hotel Klomser and another he had observed standing across the street from the hotel entrance. No wonder his face was ghastly.

He, Colonel Redl, chief of staff of the Eighth Army Corps, had been trailed from the general postoffice; to the taxi rank where he had changed vehicles; to the Hotel Klomser. The pocketknife sheath had been traced to him.

And now he was being shadowed in his own city with a technique he had himself taught his men in the Kundschafts-Stelle.

He must gain a little time to think. He must throw the men off his trail, if only long enough to catch a train for Prague and destroy the contents of his desk in the apartment there. Whether even lack of documentary evidence would now save him, he did not allow himself to speculate. He was drowning, and one catches at straws at such a time.

Down the Wallnerstrasse he turned; and the men in his wake also turned the corner. Colonel Redl put his hand into an inside pocket and taking out some papers he tore them into bits.

He did not look to see what he was tearing up. It did not matter; additional evidence could not increase his peril. Time, a little time, a few minutes' gain on his shadows, was all he could hope for.

If they stopped to pick up the bits of torn paper—he had trained his men to do that—he might shake them off long enough to escape into the Old Exchange Building, which had exits on three streets.

Only one of the men stopped to pick up the bits of paper. With these in his pocket this man rushed in a taxi to the Kundschafts-Stelle. There Captain Ronge pieced together the papers Colonel Redl had torn up.

They were receipts for registered letters sent to Brussels, Lausanne and Warsaw. The addresses of the letters registered were all familiar to Captain Ronge.

One was the joint office in Brussels of the Russian and the French Secret Services. Another was the foreign headquarters of the Italian Secret Service. The third was that of one of the principal offices of the Russian Secret Service.

"My greatest achievements," Colonel Redl had said, "are the men I leave behind me at the Kundschafts-Stelle."

One of them was now dogging his steps; and in a little while there were again two.

Tricks seemed useless now; escape hopeless. Colonel Redl turned to go back to his hotel.

A hearty "hello" arrested him. It was Dr. Victor Pollack, a close friend of Colonel Redl's and one of the leading prosecutors in Austria in espionage cases.

"We dine at the Riedhof, Alfred!" Dr. Pollack exclaimed.

Redl nodded acceptance. "I'll go home and dress and meet you at the Riedhof at seven," he said.

As yet no one interfered with him, and at seven o'clock exactly he entered the dining-room of the Riedhof immaculate and glittering in his uniform. But as he sat down his friend noticed that Redl was profoundly distressed.

"What is it, Alfred?" Pollack asked.

Redl did not have to exert his considerable talent as an actor on this occasion; the depression he felt was genuine. Nevertheless he was playing a game, perhaps his last.

He leaned over the table and began to confess to his friend. He confessed moral lapses, degeneracy, a strain of insanity in his family, and a fear that he was himself going insane. He confessed enough to justify gloom in any man, but he said not a word of the real reason for his depression.

"Do something for me, Victor, my friend!" he entreated softly. A waiter was hovering about, and without consciously suspecting him Colonel Redl spoke only when the man was away.

"I fear for my sanity at this very moment. I want to go back to Prague. To my little apartment. I shall feel quiet there. Then you can come and take me to any sanatorium you wish.

"But I don't want to go to Prague alone tonight. You know Chief of Police Gayer. Ask him to send one of his detectives with me as escort to Prague!"

Dr. Pollack arose. "That's easy, Alfred," he said. "I'll be back in a few minutes."

He went to the telephone booth and called up the Chief's home. Herr Gayer was still at his office, he was told. Dr.

SWIM ROMAN, SWIM

SEVEN a.m. had just dripped off the big water-clock at the end of the atrium. Half of fashionable Rome was crowding the great room and the other half was trying to get in past the over-worked announcer, for this was one of the social innovations of the season, the third of the famous dawn parties given by Celia, daughter of Poppaeus Caelius.

In the smart argot of the day, Celia was no ortolan. Close upon her eighteenth birthday, she had swayed and scourged the hearts of men in the five brilliant years since her debut, without evidence of any reflex action upon her own. Now she gazed out over the throng of Rome's gilded youth and painted middle age and wondered whether it was her fault or theirs that everything seemed so unexciting. She decided that it must be theirs. In Celia's comfortably adjusted young mind it was always somebody else's fault that things were not one hundred per cent satisfactory.

At her elbow, Cneius Pupius, rich and obese and importunate, was trying to make love to her in an undertone, and on the other side, Marcus Flamen, organizer of a cult of intellectuals called Frontae Prodigiosae*, was screwing a flat topaz in his eye while carrying on a whispered colloquy with the architect, Fabius Duplex, inventor of a bachelor apartment which was to carry his name down the ages. At a niche in the opposite wall a long, young man with a detachable expression of thoughtfulness was boiling an egg.

Celia broke in upon a particularly tasty dactyl of Horace's with the displeased and irrelevant remark: "He's always doing something queer."

The poet stopped his reading. "I beg your pardon," said he in an injured voice.

"Not you," she said wearily. "Go on. Sorry."

He proceeded, but without the moral support of his hostess' attention, which remained fixed on the young man opposite. Fabius Duplex leaned toward her.

"Jove's finger has doubtless touched young Drusus," he murmured.

"With fire, perhaps," she retorted. She did not like Fabius with his mincing ways.

"They say he practices strange arts. Look at him now."

"I'll say it's a strange art!" broke out the girl in indignant appreciation of a situation which she had only just perceived. "If he isn't actually cooking something over the sacred altar flame of the household! Go and ask him what he means by it."

The emissary made his way through the throng and returned with his report. "He says he forgot his own brazier, so he's using the next best thing."

"Indeed! Didn't you tell him to stop?"

"Certainly."

"What did he say?"

"He said he was busy, and could I use a nice little sock in the eye this morning or would I go away."

"So you came away. You would!"

Polite applause broke out and spread, marking the close of Horace's recitation.

"Superb, ay-wot?" murmured Marcus Flamen.

"Putridus! Rotten!" declared the girl.

"But," the highbrow protested, "the greatest and most godlike critical intellect of the day has set the seal of approval upon Horace."

"Who? Nero? I don't care an obol what Nero says. I choose my own poetry," announced Celia, while those within earshot looked nervously around for court spies who might report the treason. "I'm bored with all of you. What's coming now?"

"Gabbius Stentor's got a new story."

"It had better be new!" Celia prided herself on being always just a little ahead of the vogue in everything from fashions to fabulae. "Hail, Gabbius!"

Drusus absent-mindedly made some notes and was about to settle back to his pursuits when a voice broke in on him and he looked up into Celia's softly amused eyes.

"Do you think that's a nice way to act at a party, using my sacred household fire to boil your breakfast egg? What'll the Lares and Penates think?"

"It isn't a breakfast egg."

"Never mind. What was it I wanted to ask you? Oh, yes! How'd you like to be assassinated?"

"Not particularly. Why?"

"Cneius Pupius was kindly offering to arrange it for me. He's very nice and obliging. Cneius."

"I'll slap him on the wrist and ruin him if he doesn't look out," returned the young man indignantly. "What does he want to get disagreeable like that for?"

"Because you're so rude to me," explained Celia.

"I? Rude to you?" The guest colored angrily.

"Well, you never seem to pay any attention to me."

"Would you want me always under your feet like Cneius?" His ire rose again. "Assassinated, huh? I should be assassinated by a stuffed shirt (his exact and injurious phrase was "tunicus nihilo plenus") like him!"

"He doesn't like you any better than you like him."

"Absit omen! I should worry."

"You see," she pursued, with an air of great candor, "he thinks I'm partial to you."

"Does he? I mean, are you?"

"Of course not."

"No, you wouldn't be," said he gloomily. "It doesn't matter. Nothing matters to a true philosopher," he explicated. "I keep forgetting that when I look at you, but it's true, just the same."

She tapped his head lightly. "Ivor solida! Nothing will ever reform you."

"You might, if you'd break the sacred bread with me."

"Thank you I'm not marrying this year. Not unless my river-god comes for me. Or I meet up with an authentic hero." She drew up her shapely white arms in a dramatic gesture. (The fair Celia was rather given to playing to the gallery.) "Where, oh where are the heroes of Rome's mighty days?"

"Where are the snows of yesteryear?" melodiously sighed Horace, and was so pleased with the way it sounded that he made a note of it for a poem.

"I'm serious," protested the hostess. "What is Rome today but a tiresome bunch of cooky pushers and triclinium lizards?" She used the latest smart slang. "Aediiones et officiosi," none too flattering to her guests. "Where is the breed of great men of yore?"

"Search me!" said Fabius hastily, feeling the bright fervor of her look upon him.

"And find a flea," smirked Dynaster, who was trying to make a reputation as a wisecracker. (S. Fabricator used the Greek form, "sophomoron.")

"What do you wish us to do, inspiration of our dreams?" Cneius Pupius had strutted up.

"Yes, give us a test of valor," begged Marcus Flamen. "Whether it be a journey to the wind-swept Syrtes or to such far wilderness as—"

"Wait! Wait!" begged Horace, fumbling in his apparel. "Let me put it into immortal verse." He declaimed, impromptu;

"Sive per Syrtes iter astuosus
Sive facturus per inhospitalem—er—er—jussaminnit—er—
Caucasum velque loca—"

"Oh, hire a hall, Horace," said the hostess maliciously. She was cross because this was all meant as an incitement to Drusus, who hadn't so much as flickered an eyelash.

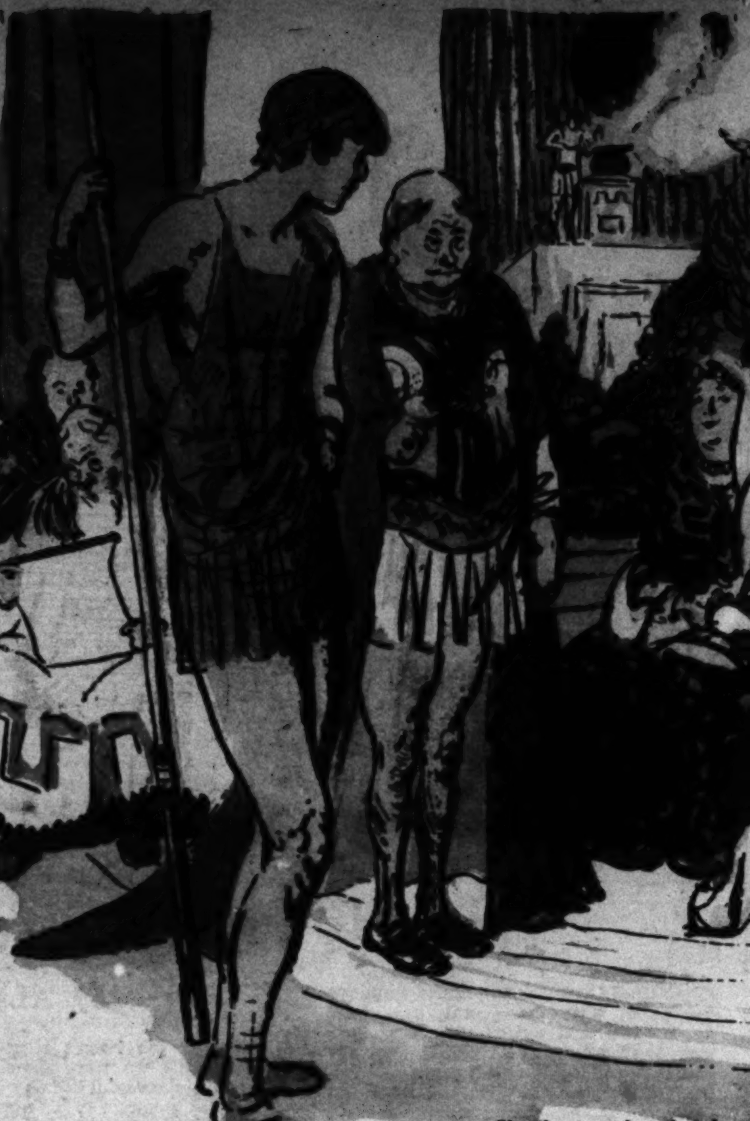
"We yearn to prove ourselves in beauty's cause," declared Dynaster. "Tell me but what to do and it is as good as done, fair goddess."

Drusus, not even interrupting his anxious scrutiny of the fowl's egg which had suffered in the blow-up, inquired absently. "What's a thought?"

"Horatuis is. Which of you would brave the Tiber as he did?"

Uneasy looks passed around the circle. "The river's kinda high just now," hinted Fabius.

"And chilly," shivered the plump Cneius.



She threw up her shapely w

"The Weather Augury Bureau sacrificed a ram yesterday and report's more rain coming."

"If," suggested Dynaster, "the lovely Celia would but wait until the Ides of June when the omens are more propitious—"

"I suppose Horatius but waited until the Ides of June," retorted the sardonic beauty. "Come on! Who'll take a chance? With me waiting on the further shore?"

History—interpolates Secundus Fabricator—has painted the Emperor Nero in colors by no means flattering, but has passed over, possibly in charity to the dead, his most profound defect of character, beside which his little murders, lecheries and arsons were mere peccadillos. Without doubt he was the most persistent and pestilent butter-in* that ever complicated the social atmosphere of a long-suffering metropolis. No function was safe against his intrusions (invariably incognito and in the guise of a private citizen,) whether social, where he always expected to be the center of attention; athletic, where nobody dared win against him, or artistic, where any genuine competition was perhaps preferable to jumping down the crater of Vesuvius in a nightshirt—but not much. Which explains, so our historian opines, why for years after his highly popular funeral his grave was kept decorated with fresh-cut goats' horns.

Bowing before Celia the newcomer said with a slight, affected lisp: "The simple citizen, Appius Sporus, presents his respects to the flower of Roman maidenhood.

"Well, fellow Romans, what was going on when I came in? Don't let your Emp—hum—your humble fellow citizen interrupt the amusement."

Gabbius Stentor rushed forward with a verbose explanation of the maiden's challenge.

"Ah! Exactly, I see; I see. A channe hair-clad and blue-bellied Britons practiced some such manly sport, but I di not know—hum! Not a bad idea. I—ah—may consider competing myself."

"Can he swim?" whispered the youn

"In the palace tank they say he always has two Boeotian slaves, one o

"That'd be a help," murmured Drusus white arms in a dramatic gesture, e heroes of Rome's mighty days?"

Harpinia, the graduate witch, was well primed for Drusus when he arrived. But, rather than pass up my bets, she ordered him anointed, as a preliminary, with the sacred oil, and while this was being done, frisked his tunic, after which she threw a spasm and did some very creditable foaming at the mouth.

"Impart nothing to me, for I read your soul without speech and see your thoughts written in letters of fire on the scroll of fate. You have fell for a frail down on Aurelia street."

Drusus gasped with wonder. Harpinia rolled over seven times, all but squashing her third assistant toad.

"I know that skirt (feminine toga,)" she continued, "and she's no violet.

"Them high society dames. There's just one way to handle 'em."

"And how?" asked Drusus eagerly.

"Treat 'em rough."

"But she treats me rough," ruefully pointed out the young man.

"Treat her rougher."

Drusus gazed at her with a dawning respect. "By Castor and Oilus, twin gods of my happy childhood days! I never thought of that. Have you any more wisdom up your sleeve, oh, Harpinia?"

"Give the toad a denarius . . . bow to the gentleman, Scortho. It is written that you prepare for the great Tibes swim."

"I am practicing every day."

"Nero is the rival whom you must beat."

"You may perchance recall the apothegm of the sagacious Plato, "There is always room at the bottom?"

"Listen! If you bear consistently in mind that there is always room at the bottom, it is written that you will win the contest."

"At the bottom of the Tiber? I've been there several times lately. It's very close."

"Because you weren't properly prepared. Do you see this magic phial?"

"Yes. It doesn't seem to have anything in it."

"Not to the uninstructed eye. But," said Harpinia in impressive tones, "actually it is full of fish breath."

"It looks like air," observed Drusus doubtfully, a remark so unworthy of serious consideration that she ignored it and presented a charge of five denari for the outfit. By attaching a tube to the phial, which he could conceal beneath his bathing tunic, she explained, he could remain beneath the surface for five minutes or longer with practice.

"Maybe you can tell me something about Nero. Do his Boeotians always go into the water with him?"

"Of course. He can't swim a stroke without them."

"Could you throw a scare into them about Tiber swimming?"

"For ten sestertii additional I'll throw such a scare into them that Numidian stallions couldn't drag 'em to within ten parasangs of the river."

"No, no; don't overdo it. Just suggest to them that April is a bad month for river-daimons and that if they should happen to feel a queer sensation in the water they'd better look up a high and dry mountain climate for their cough. Eh?"

Harpinia chuckled. "I get you, Estexius! All those Boeotians are superstitious. And don't forget about your frail. Treat her rough."

A week passed, largely devoted to submarine practice on Drusus's part, before he saw his innamorata again. He had gone to her dawn party full of good and harsh intentions, but the first sight of her dispelled them all. How could he treat her rough when she came over to his corner, after dismissing the thronging aediliones and officiosi, and smiled so deliciously at him? Instead he showed her his newest invention, two lobes of highly polished glass.

"They're very pretty," said she courteously, and with intent to please.

"That isn't exactly the idea," he explained patiently. "If you hold this one close to you thus, and the other at a stated distance, so, and point them like that, the tower of Sulpicius will move forward and jump into your eye. I am the finder-out of this device and I call it teleskopos because—"

"But why should I want the tower of Sulpicius in my eye?" she inquired sensibly enough. "Don't you like it as it is?"

"I like it extremely. In fact, I might go further and say that I—"

"I heard a queer story about you the other day," Celia broke in. "I heard that you tried to commit suicide."

"Is it likely? What could I find in any other world as desirable as you, Celitta?"

"You aren't altogether a loss," she admitted, dimpling, "when you get your mind off your troubles. But the talk is that two of your slaves found you lying under six feet of water in your natatorium and pulled you out."

"There's always room at the bottom," he returned with dark irrelevancy.

The girl looked at him with real concern. "Don't you think you'd better have your head examined, my dear? A friend of mine in Zacynthos has just sent me a swell phrenologist in a crate. He's a little wild yet, but in a day or two he ought to be in good working order."

"My head's all right," said Drusus, and, fixing her with a wide right eye he let his left lid fall slowly and as slowly retract.

Much amazed and a little troubled at the strange and unknown manifestation, she inquired, "Is that the evil eye?"

"That," said Drusus, "is the Stygian wink."

"What does it mean?"

"It means that the half hath not been told you. Also that, as I said before and Plato said before me, 'There's always room at the bottom.' So don't be disturbed if you don't see much of me in the Tiber race."

"Then you are going to enter?"

"Spero le dicere! I hope to tell you I am. By the way, there's nothing in the rules as to how one gets across, is there?"

"Not so far. But Nero can change 'em any time to suit himself. He always does that in anything he goes into, you know. You'll never beat him," she added with a despondency that quickened his heartbeats, "and if you did he'd only have you boiled in oil or something."

She gave him a smile whose witchery was far beyond the best of the graduate and certificated school.

"Ad rem!" she said. "Go to it! I hope you win."

All Rome turned out for the great event. Upon a sort of improvised throne in the narrow stern, offshore, sat the lovely Celia, supposedly the prize of victory.

The crowds parted with respectful cheers as there emerged from a highly bejewelled litter a proud, plump figure with a chaplet of laurel on its brow, while the trumpets brayed a welcome and the betting element in the reserved seats bellowed: "Fifty to one on the unknown swimmer." "Sixty to one on the last entry." "Write your own odds on the dark sea horse." There were no takers. Not more than 363,546 of those present had recognized the newcomer as the Emperor. It would have been more but the elderly beggar was now snoring.

In her thronelike seat Celia frowned. She had hoped that this entry might be scratched. True, there were plenty of other competitors, but who could hope to win, even had he dared, against the prowess of the two powerful, seabred Boeotian slaves who stood, naked and ready, on either side of Nero? They were conferring in low, uneasy voices, with many nervous glances at the water. This puzzled Celia. She could not know that, on the previous evening, they had encountered a cross-eyed witch with a toad on her shoulder in the Via Sacra who, without solicitation or payment, had told them their names, ages, and horoscopes and solemnly warned them against venturing into Tiber water until the moon should have changed its phase, lest they be waylaid by water-daimons of a particularly malignant order who swam swiftly beneath the current and dragged down rash intruders to a muddy death.

Petronius Arbiter, late as usual, staggered into the inclosure. He was in dinner toga and glazed goatskin sandals, for he had been banqueting all night. Horace, the poet, followed closely but unsteadily in his footsteps.

"I've got something to offer," said Petronius urbanely. "I've got to offer that I'm a Hyrcanian wolf and this is my night to howl." ("Nox mea—hic—vocales," to preserve the exact purport of his words.)

"And I'm Arion, but I lost my dolphin," announced Horace with grief. "Ebbuddy see a stray dolphin?" He fell on his face in the river and was penalized ten yards for a false start.

Beckoning his Boeotians in close, Nero raised a flabby and reluctant arm. A trumpet soared like a flame and the next moment the fulvous surface spouted and foamed as the flower of Rome's chivalry hurled itself forward upon its perturbed bosom. Nero taking water first, with Horace in the rear.

Well upstream, Drusus waded out, with no special haste, and plunged. He had studied the currents too thoroughly to be in any hurry. Let the field spread-eagle itself first. And the field was spread-eagling rapidly.

Where the Aventine Sewer pours down its golden flood, a pair of bowlegs, waving signals of distress, marked the retirement of Horace from active competition. Farther out, a voice, vibrant and liquid, kept shrieking: "Adjuvate! Adjuvate!"

It was the passionate falsetto of Fabius, who had met up with a berry crate and was cherishing it to his bosom whilst lamentably calling for help where no help was. On a sandbar in midstream, two of the senatorial entrants were putting up a sincere boxfight without gloves, each accusing the other of having fouled him under water.

A longshoreman with a boathook, having salvaged Marcus Flamen, was going through his clothes for prize money, and Dynaster had crawled ashore claiming that a lizard had bitten him.

There remained as reckonable contestants only Nero and Gabbius Stentor, with Drusus unaccounted for. The Emperor, between his Boeotians acting as sidewheel paddles, was swimming (or being swum) strongly in the middle of the stream, while he delicately held his nose lest he should inhale any soiled water. A couple of yards back, a full portion of planked Gabbius was making violent headway. At one time he had tactlessly threatened to overtake the leader, but Nero cleverly contrived to kick him on the chin as a hint that he had better keep his place. It looked like a sure win for Imperial Caesar with Gabbius second and the others also-swams.

Where was Drusus? Celia's anxious eyes ranged the surface and settled upon a local disturbance out of which rose that young man's sleek head, still pretty well upstream. What could he be thinking of?

As her strained attention sought the answer in that streaming face, its left eyelid fluttered and fell and lifted again in the unforgettable and mystic Stygian signal.

The Emperor had just turned to make an encouraging remark to his starboard Boeotian when that useful slave forestalled it with a remark of his own, which was, however, far from encouraging, being in fact an abrupt howl, terminating in a succession of bubbles which marked the spot where the victim was last seen. Immediately thereafter the port propeller contributed a more detailed observation.

"The daimons!" he shrieked. "Leggo! Ga-blub! Sploosh!"

"To me, slaves!" he commanded hoarsely. "I sink."

But the aides, who had reappeared long yards below, had already set out after the world's go-as-you-please record for the nearest point of land, and after beating that, added another to it for barefoot, cross-city running.

Nero meantime had begun to spin like a beetle. "Help, Gabbius!" he implored.

But Gabbius, who had just thought of a motto for the occasion, which has grown increasingly popular in its sweep

NEW POINT-AWARD SYSTEM PUT INTO EFFECT BY "JUNIOR TIMES"

Beginning with the issue of last Sunday, a new point-award system was put into effect by The Junior Times that makes it possible for an increasing number of artists and writers, as well as workers, to win cash prizes and at the same time participate more actively in the making of this publication an outstanding organ of opinion for young Americans.

From the very beginning The Junior Times has been committed to the policy of helping boys and girls find themselves. To an ever-increasing extent this paper has

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

TWO BABIES INTEREST KING EAGLE

Unknowingly we often tell
The secrets that we guard so well.
—MRS. LIGHTFOOT.

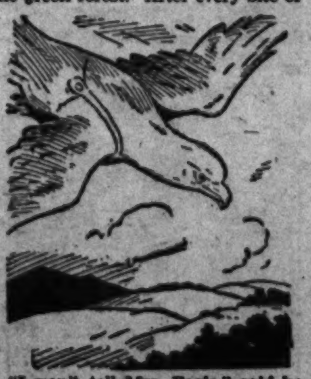
There was one secret that King Eagle had discovered in the green forest that he kept to himself. He didn't even hint of it to Mrs. Eagle. It wasn't selfishness that caused him to keep this secret to himself. No, it wasn't selfishness. It was quite the opposite. You see, from the moment that King Eagle discovered that secret in the green forest, he hoped to give Mrs. Eagle and the two babies in their nest a pleasant surprise.

King Eagle had been sailing high in the blue, blue sky over the green forest, looking down as was his habit. Presently he discovered Mrs. Lightfoot the Deer. She was alone. In fact, she was getting her breakfast at the time. The sight of her reminded King Eagle of something.

"Let me see," said King Eagle, talking to himself, for there was no one else to talk to up there in the blue, blue sky, "it is about time that Mrs. Lightfoot should have babies. I wonder if it can be that she has them already, but has hidden them away somewhere. My, my, my, my, how good one of those young fawns would taste! I don't want it for myself, but one would certainly make very tender and delicate meat for Mrs. Eagle to give to the children. I think I'll hang around for awhile and keep an eye on Mrs. Lightfoot.

So King Eagle did this very thing. He appeared to just float around way up in the blue, blue sky. Apparently, he wasn't doing anything special or watching any one in particular. But all this time he managed to keep Mrs. Lightfoot the Deer in view.

For some time Mrs. Lightfoot seemed to be concerned only with getting her breakfast. She was grazing on some tender plants and young grass in a little opening in the green forest. After every bite or two she would lift her head to look this way, to look that way, sniff the air, and turn her great ears to catch every merry little breeze that was wondering about. Even from way up there in the blue, blue sky, it was easy to see that she was nervous. While he watched her King Eagle searched on all sides in the grass for baby Deer, for the little spotted fawns that are the prettiest babies in the green forest. But not a glimpse of one did he get.



"I won't tell Mrs. Eagle," said he

After a while Mrs. Lightfoot went down to the laughing brook for a drink. Then she lightly leaped across it and moved slowly along through the green forest.

"I guess she hasn't any babies after all," thought King Eagle, and for a moment turned his attention to the pond of Paddy the Beaver, where Buster Bear was getting a drink.

When he looked back at Mrs. Lightfoot he got such a surprise that he almost forgot to keep his wings spread. Beside Mrs. Lightfoot were two spotted babies. Yes, sir, there were two spotted babies, and prettier babies never lived. But where they had come from King Eagle couldn't imagine. He had to be satisfied with the knowledge that there were two babies in the Deer family. There was no chance to get one of them then.

"I won't tell Mrs. Eagle," said he. "No sir, I won't tell Mrs. Eagle. I won't raise any false hopes. But I'll keep my eye on Mrs. Lightfoot. Sooner or later, before they get too big, I'll have a chance at one of those babies of hers. At least I hope I will."

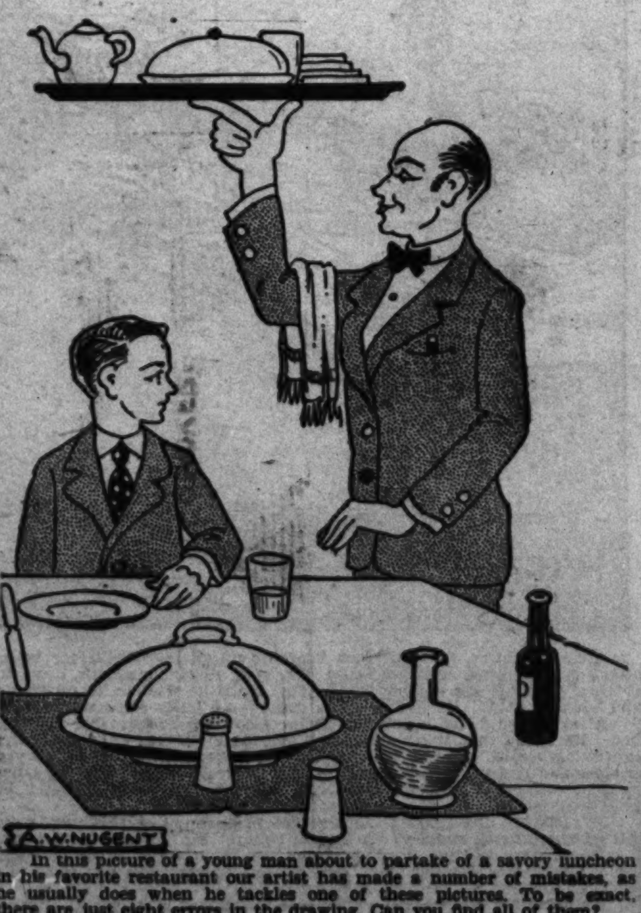
Nearly 1,500,000 pounds of citronella, popular as a mosquito repellant, were brought into the United States last year, but some of it went into soap.

Among the trees cut for this year's supply of firewood by Harvey Hewitt, of Bristol, Vt., was a beech. In cutting it into stove lengths he found one block with the name of W. H. Prime, 1878, cut into the bark and still legible.

What is Wrong?



In this picture of a young man about to partake of a savory luncheon in his favorite restaurant our artist has made a number of mistakes, as he usually does when he tackles one of these pictures. To be exact, there are just eight errors in the drawing. Can you find all of them?

HOME WORKSHOP

By Herbert Jacobs, Brookline, Mass.

Something that every amateur should understand thoroughly is soldering, a common process in mechanics. I've seen fellows nearly burn their noses off with a soldering iron, and many who couldn't even do a decent job of it. If the process is carried out correctly, not a drop of the solder should drip over. The beginner should purchase two soldering irons, a large and small one. With these, he also will need some solder metal, in stick or ribbon form, and some of the pasty substance which is commonly used in the process. The article to be soldered should be sandpapered so that it is bright and shiny. Then the soldering paste is applied with a stiff brush to the parts to be joined. Next place the parts in their proper positions, and apply the heated soldering iron to the solder, allowing the melted metal to fall on the joint. It will be found that most metals are capable of being soldered, although iron and aluminum cannot, but special solders are manufactured for these metals.

Now we come to the question of tools. Don't fool yourself and invest in any cheap tools, or tool chests. Buy each tool separately, and be sure it is of the very best quality. The number of tools usually depends on the size of one's pocket book, but with careful buying the complete equipment can eventually be acquired. Each tool should be carefully handled, and nothing allowed to rust, unless you intend to purchase new equipment daily. Always be careful of the cutting edge of tools, and see that you, yourself, never come in contact with them, or you'll feel that unpleasant sensation. And, speaking of this, reminds me that every amateur should have a bottle of iodine and some bandages handy, as a precaution against such an accident.

By this time the beginner will have a well-equipped shop in his possession, and as he works in it he will feel the need of additional apparatus, which should be bought as needed. But never purchase any equipment that is not really necessary.

In your metal work you will find it convenient to have a supply of metal sheets and tubes on hand. Buy a few lengths of medium-sized brass rodding and tubing, as they are very useful in all kinds of mechanical work. One sheet each of brass, steel, aluminum and copper should be purchased, and some aluminum tubing forms a good addition.

Nuts and bolts of various sizes, and a quantity of wood screws are good to have on hand.

A few lengths of lumber of several sizes should always be kept in the shop, together with an assortment of nails, tacks and hooks.

Most of the wood used in constructing should be of soft pine, unless it is necessary to employ some other wood. Soft pine is one of the cheapest woods on the market, and can be used for practically all projects. However, it is often more desirable to employ oak and hickory, when harder and more durable lumber is required.

Always keep a few cans of paint on hand. This paint need not be of the expensive variety. Cheap paint is sufficient for ordinary work, but in the more expensive projects, it is best not to economize in this item, although you should never pay more than a quarter for one can of the liquid.

A pint-size bottle of strong glue should be placed in your cabinet, as it is very useful in joining wood, and for other shop purposes. Besides this, a can of oil will be found helpful for fixing tools and machinery. A large notebook, with a durable cover should be purchased, and in it the amateur should neatly write an account of every project he undertakes, including the materials, time and money involved, and the success of the enterprise.

A bookcase of four or five shelves might be built, and attractively painted. It can be placed in the shop, or, perhaps, in the amateur's own bedroom, and contain books and periodicals pertaining to amateur mechanics. When your notebooks are filled, they should be placed in the bookcase, and the title, "Shop Notes," should be neatly printed on the first page. This bookcase might also contain catalogues which the amateur requested from companies manufacturing shop machinery, tools, or lumber. Soon you will want to visit some real machine and carpentry shops, and excursions should be taken to different noted localities. Here you can learn many helpful shop hints and become acquainted with the men.

AUNT DOLLY'S OWN DIARY

September—I did it! I won the Lincoln contest, and a beautiful silver medal was presented me by the New York Times. I'm so happy I'm wriggling inside. When the reporter came to interview me, I was deep in mythology, but you should see me leap out of the past into the present! I was so excited I could hardly talk, but remember being embarrassed by my mother's attitude. She dislikes publicity so much she almost refused to give them my picture. Even a lecture, warning me never to follow newspaper work, rolled off my shoulders like so much water. What do I care; all I want to do is write, write, write!

Some day I'll have a gorgeous shack in the hills, with friendly-eyed dogs, and a noisy little stream bubbling beside me. Here I shall write my books; just decided thirty is my limit, although I'm so happy I could write 10,000 words a minute right now.

Think of winning a silver medal from such a big newspaper. I can't get over it, and you may believe me, I'm buying every paper in New York, on the Q.T., of course, to see if there are any more contests. How can I ever go back to school after all this excitement? I can't imagine ploughing through Cicero and math with this medal hugged close to my heart. I'd better pay attention to my studies though, as education, plenty of it, is an absolute necessity in my game. Had a long letter from Tildene; she is in South America and very happy. Deliver me from such a place; they fry their eggs in oil and live on greasy nuts.

Fall is here and New York is at its best, bright, busy, huge metropolis that it is, church spires, catching a rare sunbeam, towering above thrumming streets. There is a Latin something about this town; perhaps the vast river front and shodowy docks make it seem different from any other place I have ever seen. It was gorgeous yesterday—Fifth avenue a blaze of color with its fashionable women and flower vendors. The cabbies please me immensely with their shrill cries; little do they know how my pennies are counted, or they wouldn't waste breath asking me to ride in their tempting vehicles. It is beautiful just the same, this New York of mine, even though it has its drab tragic side. The East with its humid tenements; elevated trains thundering; squalor, filth, despair, curses and the jargon of a hundred tongues describe our famous East Side.

How I want to travel! Must be in my blood, as my mother has lived in London, Paris, Berlin, Naples, Russia, and many of the minor cities of Europe. Her tales of adventure in beautiful Napoli for instance, makes my blood sing. All I have is this stale old city, and my imagination! If someone took that away I should die of ennui.

A most amazing woman has moved in the apartment below us. She is exquisite and has gorgeous clothes, but I shall never forgive the noise she makes. They tell me she is famous Lillian Russell. If so, she certainly knows how to put on face enamel.

Must stop writing and study. Wonder when and how I will ever journey westward!

Forget the heat of summer,
Forget you used to murmur,
Forget now all your troubles,
Forget you had bad doubles,
Forget the trials you have had,

Forget you ever had to scold,
Forget to ever get the blues,
But don't forget to pay your dues.

been written and illustrated by the readers themselves. The results speak for themselves; educators everywhere, as well as many others interested in boys and girls, have commended the work that The Junior Times is doing to develop the talents of young people.

Now The Junior Times would further pry open the doors of opportunity for you; it would precipitate the "arrival" of every boy and girl who is looking for a chance to express their views on the great variety of things, either through the written word or by the perhaps more deft medium of the drawing pencil. Furthermore, the boy or girl who is lagging behind for want of encouragement will find the helping hand extended at the same time that those who have arrived in the juvenile literary and art world are encouraged to greater things.

An attractive arrangement in connection with the new plan is the creation of three separate divisions as an outgrowth of The Times Junior Club, to be known as the Writers' Club, Art Workers' Club, and Good Will Club. Any boy or girl may become a member of one or more of these clubs by accumulating points, which will be recorded weekly and card indexed, toward a cash prize. In other words, you earn while you learn, for 30 points earned under the new system will entitle a boy or girl to enrollment in one of these clubs as well as to an award of $2 in cash.

In case points are earned in two or more divisions, the artist-writer or worker may select the club in which they wish to be enrolled. Later, when sufficient points are earned, membership in one or more of the clubs will automatically follow.

When sixty points have been secured, a felt divisional badge will be awarded the lucky one, with "J. T." for Junior Times on it and, in the center, "W" for Writers' Club, or "A" for Art Workers' Club or "G W" for Good Will Club on it, as the case may be.

When membership is won in two divisions, the signifying club letters will be intertwined. The grand award, however, will be the linking of the club letters in the badge to be given those who win ranking in all three divisions.

Now for the future! When a writer or artist or worker has accumulated 300 points, a star will be added to their badge. However, these points must all have been won within twelve months.

All this presupposes the use of the material submitted in The Junior Times, except in the case of the Good Will workers, whose point system will be taken up later, and an exception which is really the sum of all our efforts.

All art and literary material will be graded weekly. In case of use the artist and writer will know immediately that their points have been awarded according to the table printed at the end of this column.

Now for the exception. Those whose work is not used should turn immediately to the page containing "Our Honor Roll" head. If your name is in Group A, you will know immediately that your work is being held for future publication, with half of the total publication points awarded you immediately and the others to be accredited to you with the publication of your article or art work, as the case may be. Some material isn't usable one week, but it may be the next. A Christmas story doesn't excite anyone around the Fourth of July! You get the reasoning, of course.

In Group B, will be found the names of contributors whose articles or art work show promise of better things to come. Every one of these youngsters will get two points toward a cash prize, as well as their club rating.

The Good Will Club is an outgrowth of work already ably begun by many club workers. For some years now, a little reader has been sending copies of The Junior Times weekly to an orphanage in Yorkshire, Eng. She is going to get some points immediately for it. Others have been our mainstays at Christmas time and at other times when we have put on programs. Loyal workers are to be rewarded. We will have more to say about this later on. However, every reader submitting two or more usable riddles will get two points. Letters containing helpful hints also will be graded and points with a cash prize in view, awarded.

Here is our table of points for all issues of The Junior Times, beginning with last Sunday, the 16th inst:

WRITERS' CLUB

Ten points for a story.

Five points for a poem, editorial or a nature or other article of general appeal.

Five points for the most interesting, best written and punctuated letter of the week.

Fifteen points for an article illustrated by the author. In case the author so desires, five of those points will be accredited to him as an art worker, thus permitting him to qualify in two divisions.

ART WORKERS' CLUB

Fifteen points for a cover-page drawing, with ten addition points if the drawing is used four or five columns in width.

Ten points for a comic strip or a drawing used for two columns or larger.

Five points for each drawing used for a one-column cut.

Note: Special assignments may be given from time to time to artists and writers who have proved their loyalty and consistent advancement in their chosen field.

knew something dreadful had happened, and nearly died of suspense, but you told me that the Rev. Mr. Dinkle was to be given a good impression of the school because he's a most influential personage, so I kept him in there and fed him tea and conversation until he forgot to suspect a thing."

Miss Biddy said, "Humph! Well, there's been an explosion in the chemistry laboratory. We do not know what caused it. No one was in there at the time. We missed you at roll call and everyone became numbed by the one terrible suspicion that you had been sitting in the nearest lawn swing at the time and had been caught under the shower of falling bricks—Mrs. Benit is in bed with a nervous breakdown."

"I'm sorry."

Miss Biddy said, "Humph" again, and walked away. And now there seems to be some question as to whether I'm to be given a credit mark for entertaining the Rev. Mr. Dinkle exactly as instructed, or sixteen demerits for not quietly leaving the building by the nearest exit at the first sound of the fire bell as taught to do in drill classes. Duty, it seems to me, is a very complicated thing.

THE MAGIC CITY

What would you do,
 If you lived all alone,
In a castle of grim
 And dull blackened stone,
If cats yowled at night
 And dogs barked by day,
And a fussy old man
 Drove playmates away?
What if you never
 Could cook sugar pies,
And no one was sorry
 If you chanced to cry,
No mummy, no daddy,
 No playmates at all;
Just a horrid old man
 Who stamped through
The hall . . .
 His wooden leg clacking,
His crutch loudly whacking
 Anything in his way?
What if you found,
 Right on the ground,
A magical key of gold;
 You hid it and kept it,
And thus disobeyed
 For all of a night
And half of a day,
 Then the cats
Stopped yowling
 The dogs ceased howling,
And all was peaceful
 In Penny-View Lane!
But what do you think
 Overtook Lila-Lee,
When she kept in her
 Bosom, the magical key?

MORE ABOUT MAGIC CITY

Today you have been introduced to Lila-Lee, the lonely little princess locked in a grim castle on Penny-View Hill. Shut away from the world, forced to live within the high stone walls of the Magic City, she becomes an odd child. Denied playmates, comfort is found in Gandy-Goose, and Squirmy-Turn, the fairy fish who sits upon his tail in the moonlight and tells Lila-Lee delightful stories. There is also the cat who lives in the chimney and yowls all night. The dogs who bark, but are never seen; the furry-burry little rabbits who dance upon the green, and Wiffy-Woof, a kind and motherly wolf.

We must not forget the fussy old man who has a peg leg and a huge stick to strike things with. He has only one eye, and a very bad disposition. Lila-Lee keeps out of his way, and when she is not walking in her garden, spins beautiful garments in the high turret.

It is a strange place, this castle perched on top of Penny-View Hill. No one comes in the gate, and no one is allowed to go out. They are without servants. The fussy Old Man fishes their food out of the pond and cooks it by magic.

Lila-Lee, despite her silken gowns and lovely slippers, is a most unhappy little girl. She is just wishing with all her might to have something happen, when she finds quite by accident a golden key lying in the garden. She knows she should not touch it, as it is magic. You see, it has a face and two eyes which twinkle like stars in the dark, but Lila-Lee is so miserable she decides to experiment. The key is hidden in her bodice and strange things begin to happen. The cats stop yowling in the chimney; the dogs, who are never seen, fail to bark. Gandy-Goose falls asleep upside down; Squirmy-Turn leaps out of the water and lives on land—and Fussy Old Man climbed a tree and crows like a rooster. But that is not all that happens. Next Sunday we will tell more of Lila-Lee's strange adventures.

Soon we must begin to build the grim castle. Cut out the puzzling blocks Eddie Shultz will draw. Remember, they are magiced and liable to do all sorts of odd things, so hold on to them tight. Remember to mount these cutouts on cardboard and color if you wish. We will draw you a map of the entire village with the pool and Wiffy-Woof, the motherly wolf, later.

I'll never understand
Why people dream
So longingly
Of a life of ease,
When there is so much
Of enchantment
In good, hard work
And honest progress
And tough battles.
There's nothing
To a life of ease
That I can see
But getting old
And unnecessary
And out of things.

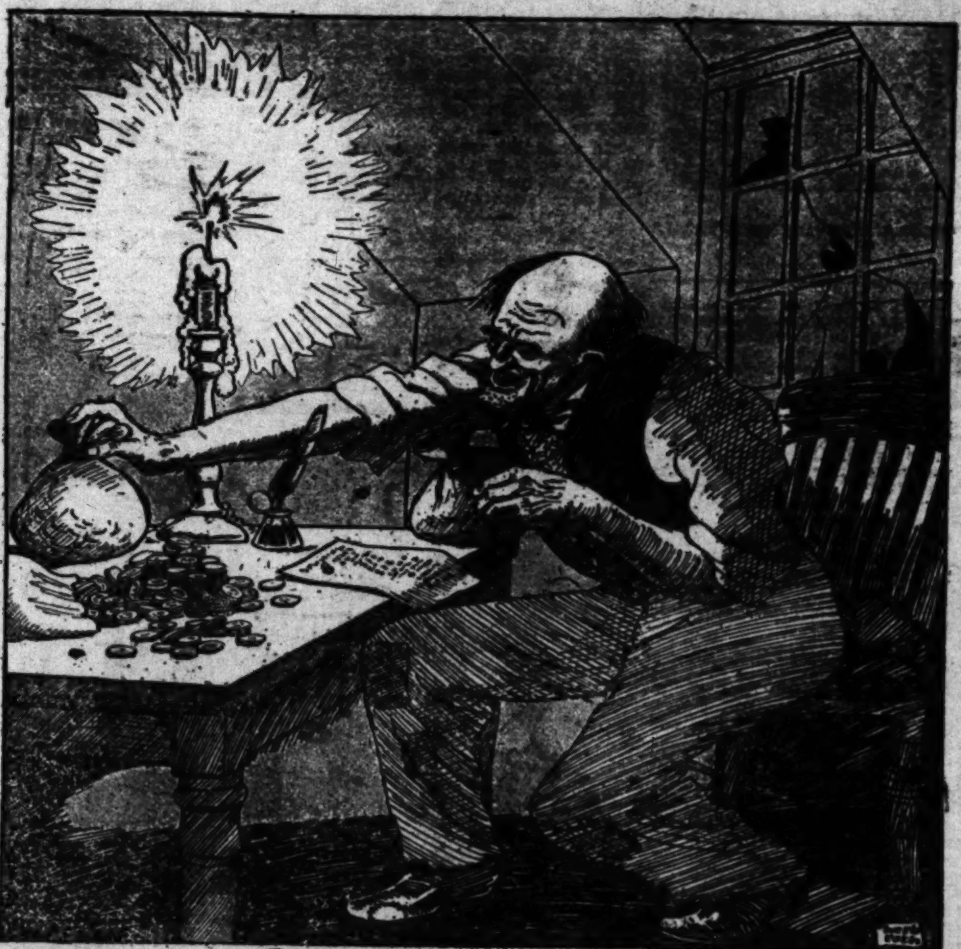
The Miser's Problem



A certain miser, who had been hoarding up all his wealth for many years, was smitten with an acute attack of conscience and decided to distribute all of his wealth, down to the last dollar, among the poverty-stricken people of his neighborhood. One night he went to his miserable garret, got out all his bags of money, and counted it up. He had it all in dollars—no other coins were in his collection.

After he had added up his wealth he discovered a few rather strange facts about the number of dollars he had. He found that if he gave away the same number of dollars every day for a year he could exactly spread his wealth over twelve months and have nothing left at the year's end; but if he gave away nothing on Sundays, and did his distributing only on week days, still giving a fixed sum each week day, he would have just one dollar left on New Year's Eve. What we want to find out is, keeping it at the lowest possible sum, what was the amount of money he had to distribute?

Mr. Dudeny, the English mathematician, propounded this puzzle some time ago, with this comment: "Could anything be simpler? A sum of dollars (Mr. Dudeny used pounds sterling, but we have translated it into our own coinage) divided by one number of days leaves no remainder, but divided by another number of days leaves a dollar over. That is all. And yet when you come to tackle this little question you will be surprised that it can become so puzzling."

We hope that our readers will be able to find out what was the lowest sum of money the miser could have had and comply with the conditions he laid down for its distribution.

POINT-WINNING STORY OF WEEK

ONE LUMP OR TWO

A Joy Story

By Rosemary Wiese, Olive View.

(With an Illustration by Elaine Andrews)

It was Tuesday afternoon and I was entertaining Rev. Mr. Dinkle at tea in the green-and-gold back parlor of St. Mary's Seminary. Entertaining important visitors was considered an essential part of our education by Mrs. Benit, the superintendent of St. Mary's. This was the first time I had been appointed to entertain a visiting personage, and I thought I was making a beautiful success of it.

"One lump, or two?" I asked, leaning slightly forward with mother's most charming tea-table manner. At that moment there sounded somewhere in the distance a shuddering boom, followed by several crashes, and then the sound of the fire bell. I dropped the sugar prongs into the tea cup I was holding. The fire bell always fills me with excitement and the desire to run. The Rev. Mr. Dinkle looked surprised and perturbed.

"What was that?" he asked in a strained voice, showing signs of wishing to run himself. That recalled me to my duties. A good hostess always makes her guest feel at ease even if she is harassed by a suspicion that the house has caught fire. So I retrieved the sugar prongs, smiling sweetly.

"Just a fire drill," I said pleasantly, as the echo of many di ferent noises drifted down to th back parlor. The "Reverend seemed about to make some furthe protest but I hurried on.

"Why," said I, "if there shoul happen to be a fire, these buil ings would all be empty in le than three minutes; in less tha five the fire department would b here." At that moment the clang clang! of the fire engine was un mistakably heard in the distanc
I dropped the third lump of suga into his cup.

"Here it is now," I said. "They'v just recently purchased a new en gine at the local firehouse, an they take it out for a show-off driv almost every day."

The Rev. Mr. Dinkle smiled. H remembered the days when the used fire horses. He was inter ested in horses and he was a fasci nating conversationalist. We had lovely time. If the noises in othe parts of the building continued, w neglected to hear them.

The "Reverend," having thanke me for an enjoyable afternoon, had just taken his departure, when Mis
Biddy came down the hall looking white about the lips. At the sigh of me she turned even whiter.

"Miss McKinley, where have you been?" she demanded.

"I have been entertaining the Rev. Mr. Dinkle in the green parlor as per instructions," I replie with dignity.

"Do you mean to tell me you didn't hear the explosion?"

"Of course, I heard it, and I

RIDDLE CORNER

Last week we published a very hard-to-guess riddle. Today Old Uncle Riddle [illegible] wants to know:

Here's a thing that has two legs,
Legs long,
Legs strong.
But with legs on the ground
It will soon be found
It can't walk a single step—
Hep! Hep! Hep!
Take two legs off the ground—
It can run 'twill be found.
I'll give my cat
To who guesses that!

The answer to last week's riddle is: a chinkapin.

HAPPINESS

By Evangeline E. Marleau, Compton, Age 14 Years

Just a bit o' happiness!
Coming at the close o' day;
Puts and pins your smile in place,
And folds your cares away.
Just a bit o' happiness!
Most any time o' day;
Makes a world o' difference,
In all your work or play.
Just a bit o' happiness!
Every now and then;
Makes us finer women,
And really nicer men.

EARTH MUSIC

By Betty Clancy, Artesia

The turquoise sky,
And the grey, green sea,
The silver stars, that twinklingly
Peep down on a sleeping world,
The green of the fields,
The gold of the sun,
And the rose of the dawn
When the day has begun.
These are chords of some Master Organist
Playing upon a universe of love.
Why trouble our ears,
With our make-shift tunes, when above—
Below—the eye can see
A symphony of light?

THE SKY PARENTS

By Jane Eston, Los Angeles

Now, Mother Moon was worried—
For Father Sun had pressed a parting kiss
Upon her brow
And hurried out of sight
Before dusk fell.
Leaving Mother Moon alone in the heavens to guard
O'er the sleeping children
Tucked below.
Mother Moon was worried.
The more she thought, the worse she felt,
And soon a big tear crept downward
And fell.
The little children far below
Said, "Look, the Lady in the Moon
Is weeping. Why?"
But no one knew.
Mother Moon worried long.
Finally she decided she would think
No more of it,
And she turned 'round and there—
Peeping over the hill-top
Was Father Sun.
He'd stayed out all night!
"Where have you been," cried Mother Moon,
"I've worried just so long."
But Father Sun just smiled
And said,
"They were having a wonderful time
On the other side of the world—
And I simply had to see.
I'll watch now."
So Mother Moon dropped down to sleep
With Father Sun on guard.

WHY THE HOBBY?

Hobbies! hobbies, who has a hobby? If you have, let's hear about it, as we have started a special column for just this sort of thing. If you are hunting green cheese or hornless rhinos, tell us about it. Whatever appeals to you will be interesting to others, so come on fellows, be sports, and write in. We're anxious to get some zip in this special department.

Remember, your letters will not be judged for literary worth; we are seeking the why of hobbies!

The Time Staller.
By Alex McLancon.

[Illustrations by Charles W. Price, Jr.; story by Alex Melancon, both of Larose, La.]

This is why we say, "Once upon a time."

The King of Starland ruled that whatsoever stranger journeyed through his domains must stop to tell him a tale. So travelers were few in the kingdom of this King. Most felt unable to assume the responsibility of entertaining His Majesty.

But it happened, as things will occur, that three knights strayed into Starland.

"May we meet your King?" said they to the sentries.

"We shall speak to Once about it," the sentries said.

"'Not 'to once,' corrected the knights. "You should say 'at once.'"

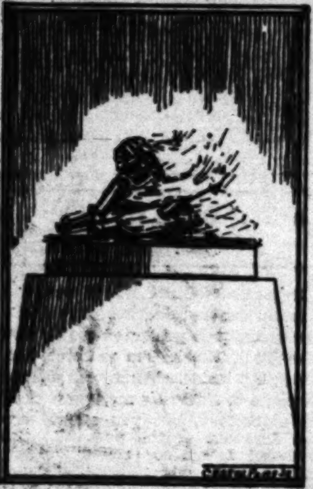
"We never speak at a King," the sentries said. "Our King is Once."

"Your King is once what?" queried the knights.

"Once he is, Once will he be always."

The knights were puzzled at this, and they hurried to send their cards to the King. He glanced at them: "Call ye me the crowd," he directed his page.

To the court he read, "Sir Verisane, Sir Hopeful, Sir Not-so-Hopeful, Dealers in Adventure."



Soon the knights were ushered in. "Welcome to me," sang out the King. "What manner of men are ye?"

The strangers bowed. "We are the knights of today. We trace every adventure to its source."

"I stand here to serve you, sirs," said the King. "Make known your desires."

"We would know what Your Majesty was once."

"Once I was, Once I am," the King declared, "My name is Once."

"Ah!" said the knights, enlightened.

The King spoke to his page; the boy lifted his megaphone: "The guests must make another request. Their first does not honor them sufficiently."

"Our stomachs say that a feast would serve our turn," said Sir Hopeful.

"One will be prepared," His Majesty said. "When we have feasted, I shall make a slight request of you."

"'Tis granted," said the knights.

"While we wait, I shall show you my great invention in the courtyard," King Once announced. "This is my timepiece," he said. "It looks like a sundial, but is quite different. Its pointer moves around to tell the time, instead of merely casting shadows. The machinery is powerful enough to control the very sun."

The butler summoned them to the feast; never had its like been seen in Starland.

"Eat hearty, my subjects," ordered Once. "After all had eaten sufficient for three days, we shall assemble in the courtyard. Our guests will speak an hour about their adventures there."

The courtyard was gayly decorated when the people went in it. The King stopped near his timepiece.

"Make yourselves comfortable."

He had not had a seat prepared for himself, and now he sat upon the dial; so that the pointer was between his legs.

"When an hour has gone by, you may stop," he told the knights.

"If you sit in that position, it will be impossible to tell when that time has passed," they protested.

But the King paid no attention: "Proceed with the entertainment."

Each knight spoke over an hour, then bowed.

"Now, Your Majesty," said they, "we have done."

The crafty King pointed to the dial. "Why, you have not been speaking a minute. See! The pointer shows no change in time."

Of course, it could not move while he sat on the dial, and he was determined to hear all the knights could possibly say. They continued for three days and nights, while the impeded timepiece caused the sun itself to stand still.

The old records of King Once's court state all these things. The ancient manuscripts declare that the knights in addressing the King at the beginning of each tale they told, said. "Once upon a timepiece."

Which was quite natural under the circumstances. The records claim that the knights told such nice stories that people imitated them by repeating the phrase whenever they related yarns, gradually discarding the word, "piece." And it became a custom to start all stories with, "Once upon a time."

For his perfidy, King Once was appropriately punished. As he sat holding the pointer of the dial, the machinery was straining very hard to turn it. The force it gathered in three twenty-four hours was considerable, and finally the King's weight was not sufficient to keep still the pointer. It started revolving with the King, and the knights of today escaped in the ensuing excitement. For all I know, King Once revolved merrily ever after.

The American public is notoriously untidy and that trait is especially demonstrated in the careless treatment of pleasure parks. Thousands of dollars are spent during the summer season by the large cities in cleaning up the public reception grounds after picnic parties in spite of the annual clean-up campaigns.

HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY

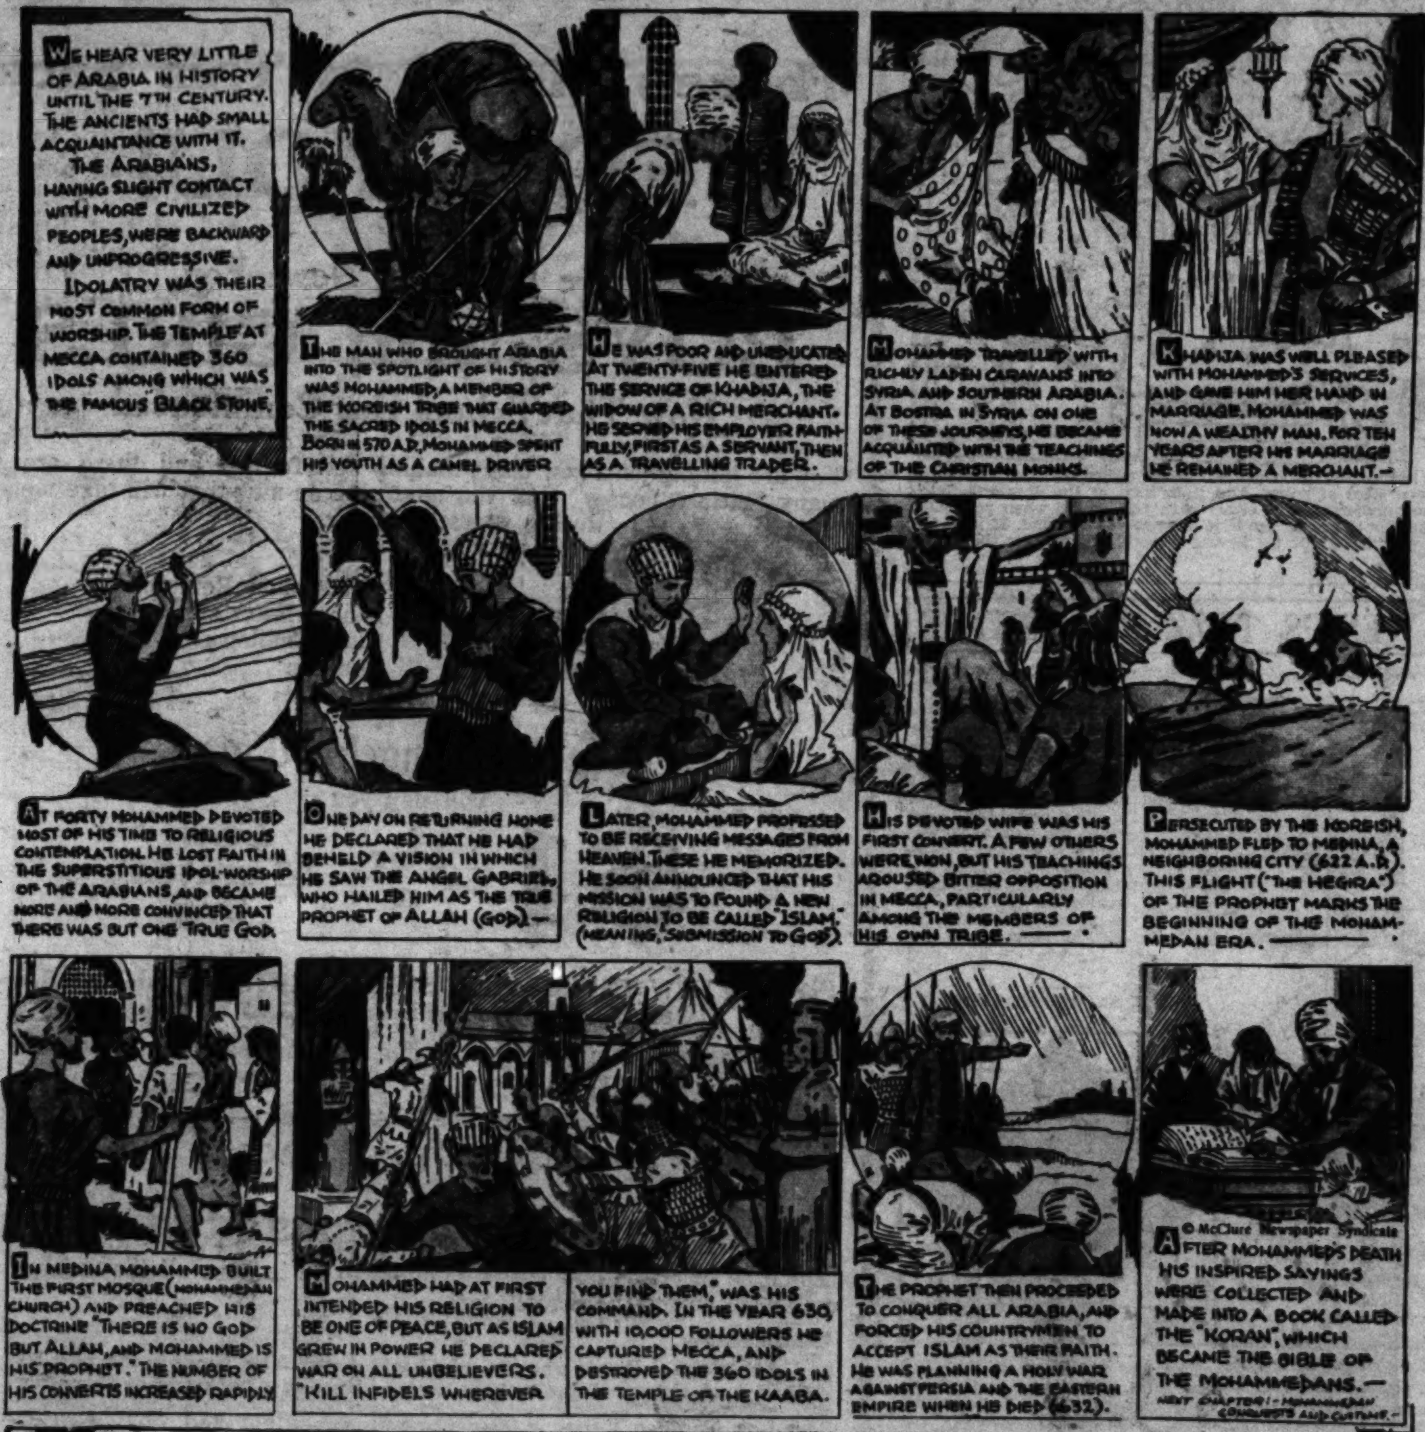
Chapter 83: Mohammed, Phrophet of Islam.

By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

WE HEAR VERY LITTLE OF ARABIA IN HISTORY UNTIL THE 7TH CENTURY. THE ANCIENTS HAD SMALL ACQUAINTANCE WITH IT.

THE ARABIANS, HAVING SLIGHT CONTACT WITH MORE CIVILIZED PEOPLES, WERE BACKWARD AND UNPROGRESSIVE.

IDOLATRY WAS THEIR MOST COMMON FORM OF WORSHIP. THE TEMPLE AT MECCA CONTAINED 360 IDOLS AMONG WHICH WAS THE FAMOUS "BLACK STONE."



THE MAN WHO BROUGHT ARABIA INTO THE SPOTLIGHT OF HISTORY WAS MOHAMMED, A MEMBER OF THE KOREISH TRIBE THAT GUARDED THE SACRED IDOLS IN MECCA. BORN IN 570 A.D., MOHAMMED SPENT HIS YOUTH AS A CAMEL DRIVER

HE WAS POOR AND UNEDUCATED. AT TWENTY-FIVE HE ENTERED THE SERVICE OF KHADIJA, THE WIDOW OF A RICH MERCHANT. HE SERVED HIS EMPLOYER FAITHFULLY, FIRST AS A SERVANT, THEN AS A TRAVELLING TRADER.

MOHAMMED TRAVELLED WITH RICHLY LADEN CARAVANS INTO SYRIA AND SOUTHERN ARABIA. AT BOSTRA IN SYRIA ON ONE OF THESE JOURNEYS, HE BECAME ACQUAINTED WITH THE TEACHINGS OF THE CHRISTIAN MONKS.

KHADIJA WAS WELL PLEASED WITH MOHAMMED'S SERVICES, AND GAVE HIM HER HAND IN MARRIAGE. MOHAMMED WAS NOW A WEALTHY MAN. FOR TEN YEARS AFTER HIS MARRIAGE HE REMAINED A MERCHANT.—

AT FORTY MOHAMMED DEVOTED MOST OF HIS TIME TO RELIGIOUS CONTEMPLATION. HE LOST FAITH IN THE SUPERSTITIOUS IDOL-WORSHIP OF THE ARABIANS, AND BECAME MORE AND MORE CONVINCED THAT THERE WAS BUT ONE TRUE GOD.

ONE DAY ON RETURNING HOME HE DECLARED THAT HE HAD BEHELD A VISION IN WHICH HE SAW THE ANGEL GABRIEL, WHO HAILED HIM AS THE TRUE PROPHET OF ALLAH (GOD).—

LATER, MOHAMMED PROFESSED TO BE RECEIVING MESSAGES FROM HEAVEN. THESE HE MEMORIZED. HE SOON ANNOUNCED THAT HIS MISSION WAS TO FOUND A NEW RELIGION TO BE CALLED "ISLAM." (MEANING, "SUBMISSION TO GOD").

HIS DEVOTED WIFE WAS HIS FIRST CONVERT. A FEW OTHERS WERE WON, BUT HIS TEACHINGS AROUSED BITTER OPPOSITION IN MECCA, PARTICULARLY AMONG THE MEMBERS OF HIS OWN TRIBE. —— .

PERSECUTED BY THE KOREISH, MOHAMMED FLED TO MEDINA, A NEIGHBORING CITY (622 A.D.). THIS FLIGHT ("THE HEGIRA") OF THE PROPHET MARKS THE BEGINNING OF THE MOHAMMEDAN ERA. —— .

IN MEDINA MOHAMMED BUILT THE FIRST MOSQUE (MOHAMMEDAN CHURCH) AND PREACHED HIS DOCTRINE "THERE IS NO GOD BUT ALLAH, AND MOHAMMED IS HIS PROPHET." THE NUMBER OF HIS CONVERTS INCREASED RAPIDLY.

MOHAMMED HAD AT FIRST INTENDED HIS RELIGION TO BE ONE OF PEACE, BUT AS ISLAM GREW IN POWER HE DECLARED WAR ON ALL UNBELIEVERS. "KILL INFIDELS WHEREVER YOU FIND THEM," WAS HIS COMMAND. IN THE YEAR 630, WITH 10,000 FOLLOWERS HE CAPTURED MECCA, AND DESTROYED THE 360 IDOLS IN THE TEMPLE OF THE KAABA.

THE PROPHET THEN PROCEEDED TO CONQUER ALL ARABIA, AND FORCED HIS COUNTRYMEN TO ACCEPT ISLAM AS THEIR FAITH. HE WAS PLANNING A HOLY WAR AGAINST PERSIA AND THE EASTERN EMPIRE WHEN HE DIED (632).

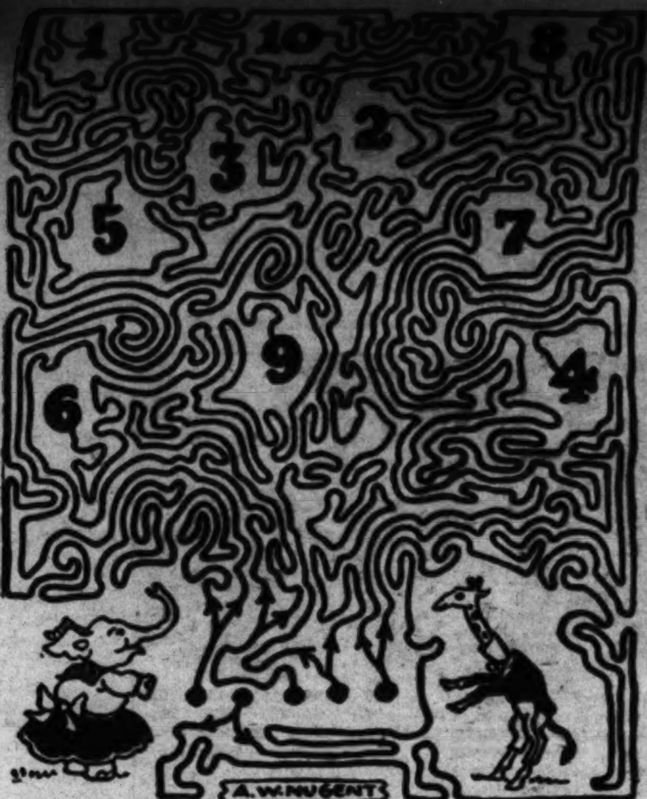
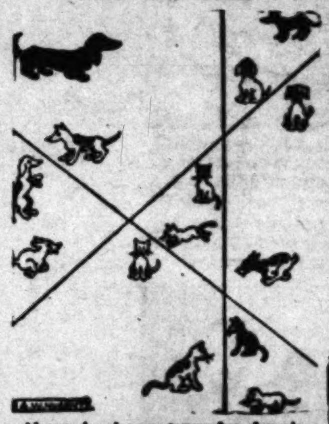
Odd or Even



Here is a fascinating little game. Select either odd or even—write your choice on a piece of paper—and then start at the dots and follow the lines to the numbers, taking either path you choose when you reach a fork. Add up your total and see if it is what you selected. If it is not, you lose. Get your friends to try it, and see how many times they guess right or wrong.

LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE ANSWERS

CATS AND DOGS



Above is shown now, by drawing only three straight lines, the cats and dogs can be put into separate compartments with only two dogs or two cats in each compartment.

"THE 31 GAME"

1	1	1	1
2	2	2	2
3	3	3	3
4	4	4	4
5	5	5	5
6	6	6	6

A set of twenty-four blocks, four numbered 1, four numbered 2, and so on to 6, are placed in six slots so that they can be slid to the right, one at a time, the arrangement being as shown above. The idea is for two players to move the numbers one at a time so that the ones moved will total to 31, the one reaching exactly 31 winning the game.

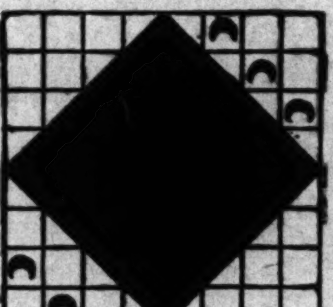
If it were not that the six numbers were limited to four each, sure winning objectives in the "31 Game" would be the totals 10, 17 and 24. It is evident that the player who carries the total to 24 will in his next play score 31, unless it so happens that the certain number he will need is not available, four of that number having already been played.

It is in planning to exhaust the number which your opponent will need for his final move that the real strategy of the game consists.

The first player can win by the opening plays of 1, 2 or 5, provided he continues the game without error. In the game presented for analysis, five numbers had been played, namely, 1, 2, 2, 5 and 5, the total being 15.

The second player, whose turn it now is, must lose if the first player continues his game without error. Let us assume that the second player for his third play takes 2 (his best play) which carries the total to 17. The first player now takes 5, carrying the total to 22. The second player's best reply is 2, making 24. First player then takes the final 5, making 29, and the second player is lacking an essential 2 to score 31. As he may not carry the total above 31, he must permit the first player to win on his next move.

THE SACRED CARPET



The five crescents on the tiled floor were so arranged as to guard every square of the sixty-four either vertically, horizontally or diagonally; we were to move them so that they still guarded every square and left room for the largest possible square carpet to be laid without touching them. Above is shown how this is done. The carpet, represented by the dark area, is equal to one-half the area of the tiled floor—the largest area possible under the conditions—and the crescents are so placed that they guard every square on the floor.

Next Week on This Page: First of "Times" Lessons on Model Plane Building

ENROLL TODAY IN AIRPLANE SCHOOL

build your own airplane.

Lieut. [illegible], aviator-instructor at the National Aeronautical School, has the course all mapped out, the classrooms and lecture hall ready and the boys that attend this school will be entering the first airplane school for youngsters in America.

The Times' Model Airplane School starts at 9:30 o'clock next Saturday morning, the 29th inst., in the main auditorium of the National Aeronautical School, a division of the National Automotive and Electrical Schools, Figueroa and Santa Barbara streets.

Besides building the model planes according to specifications and from the standpoint of intelligent airplane construction, a boy will advance along in his classes until he will be allowed to study the [illegible] parts of regular aviation motors.

Regular examinations will be held and diplomas will be issued to boys who graduate from The Times' Aviation School.

Read The Junior Times ever Sunday to learn how the boys are getting along in the work. Boys who live out of town will be able to follow the regular course, which will be printed every Sunday on the aviation page of The Junior Times.

Otherwise you won't be enrolled in The Times' free model-airplane course. One word of caution: Your mother or father must sign your enrollment slip. In case a guardian signs for you, that fact must be plainly stated so there will be no confusion.

SCANDALS in ANIMAL LAND
BY LOUIS BARDWELL

Phil Flea, De Wolf Grasshopper and Collin Cricket will participate in the Pesky Insect League track meet next Saturday at the Hyde-and-go-seek Park. They will be entered in the high and low hurdles and the high and broad jumps. The dopesters say that De Wolf, who holds the long-distance championship of Mayflower Meadows, has the edge on the others. However, the only thing certain is that for every spring there must be a fall.

Mr. Colton Horse purchased two pairs of new shoes at White's Blacksmith Shop. They did not have them in the exact sizes, so Mr. White had to cut down Colton's feet to fit the shoes. We hope you didn't feel hurt, Colton.

Lost, strayed, or stolen; Fifteen head of Mr. Edgington Ant's fine Aphid shorthorn milk cows. When last seen they were quietly feeding on a rose leaf on stem 589 of American Beauty Rosebush. Liberal reward offered.

Waldo Turkey has just collected the life insurance on his eleven children and is on a wild spending orgy. Every night he drinks so much pickled sauerkraut juice that his head and neck are as red as a beet. Be careful, Waldo, it isn't wise to let money go to one's head.

Millie Turtle is getting along very nicely after her operation Saturday, in which she had the moss removed from her back. Dr. Muskrat says that she will be able to see friends next week at the Waterloo Hospital. My, my, what won't the women do to look young!

OUR CORNER BOOKSHELF

ABRAHAM LINCOLN BY CARL SANDBURG

(Reviewed by Ruth Romerio, Riverside.)

This is a story that every American girl and boy should read, for it is a fine study in the character of a man whose memory is held dear by millions.

It is a story of Lincoln, the man, not Lincoln, the statesman. It reveals his keen insight into human nature, and his love for enemy or friend. His sense of humor and ready wit are apparent throughout the book, and we live with him, struggle upward with him, and rejoice for him when he achieves success.

We realize what a really great man he was, how human, how loving and generous to all, even while he struggled with the great problems of the nation during the trying time in which he was President.

We feel, after reading this book, that we have lived side by side with him and grown up with him, shared his innermost thoughts, and gained more than words can tell, by his wisdom and wonderful understanding.

Even people who before had been prejudiced against him, have learned to love him after reading his life, and have realized his complete unselfishness and love for all mankind.

Everyone should read it, not only for the great enjoyment to be received from it, but to learn to uphold the ideals of our country as Abraham Lincoln so faithfully upheld them.

JANE'S COOKING CORNER FOR JUNIORS

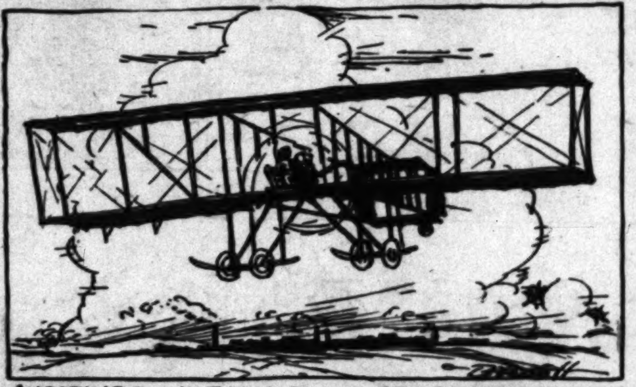
CINNAMON APPLES

To make delicious cinnamon apples choose four round, even-sized apples, peel, core and cut in halves. Now make a syrup of equal parts sugar and water. Use as much water as you will need to boil the apples, then as much sugar. Add enough red cinnamon drops to thoroughly color the water. Boil the apples in this syrup until they are tender, and you'll find that as a side dish they will be a delightful treat.

Aeronautics and the War
By Louis Bardwell

(Louis Bardwell has deserted his land of chuckles, producing a tale of planes and their inventors. You who follow the hazardous progress of pilots, their daring feats and journeys in the air, will find much to admire in these articles. Next Sunday Louis will continue his "Aeronautics and the War.")

From time immemorial man has longed to soar through the air in bird-like flight. There is an exhilaration in flying that is experienced in no other form of motion. Its poetry caught the fancy of thousands of nameless men, who gave their time and even their lives to promote it. Over 400 years ago, Leonardo da Vinci, artist, engineer, poet, architect, perhaps the most versatile genius the world has ever produced, turned his remarkable mind to the study of human flight. After studying the principles of bird flight, he made several successful experiments with helicopters and parachutes. His work, though forgotten for the next four centuries, inspired others to carry on the task. In the years that followed, many successful attempts were made with gliders and heated air balloons, paving the way to the ultimate success of the heavier-than-air machines.



AN EARLY BIPLANE. THIS MACHINE WAS BUILT BY HENRY FARMAN.

In 1783 the Montgolfier brothers made the first flight in the heated-air balloon. Two years later the English Channel was crossed. Thus was ushered into being, the aerial age, which a century later was to burst into flame under the genius of the Wright brothers, with their invention of the flying machine. A few words must be given to the telling of the tireless experimenting and ultimate success of these two fathers of the modern airplane.

The brothers, Wilbur and Orville, had always been keenly interested in aeronautics, and with the announcement, in 1896, of the tragic death of Lilienthal, a German experimenter, they turned their minds seriously to the solving of the problem of human flight. After many trials with wind tunnels on model planes, they went to Kitty Hawk, N. C., for actual test flights, as it was reputed to be the most prevailing windy spot in the United States. It was here, after three years of patient work, that they made the first flight in the history of the world, in which a machine carrying a man raised itself into the air in free flight. The plane stayed up only twelve seconds, but into that brief space were crowded countless centuries of experimenting and heart-breaking trials. The heritage of a million men blossomed forth in that ungainly looking craft. Air was at last conquered by man.

In 1908, Wilbur Wright made the first flight over European soil, which set the world to talking of the great future of the flying machine. But the great inventor was characteristically silent.

"The bird that talks the most," he once said, "is the parrot, and that is the bird that flies the least."

Between the time of the first flight and the opening of the great war, many remarkable improvements took place. But however phenomenal the progress of the last ten years, the next four were to astonish the world in development. The beginning of the war found Germany with aircraft that far outstripped the Allies in equipment, including aerial cameras, machine guns, navigation instruments and scientifically built machines. Furthermore, the 600 ships that made up her air force were standard, while the Allies, though they had a superior number, had fifty-seven varieties and makes of planes. To make the score even, the Allied aviators were more skillful, outmaneuvering the Germans at almost every turn.

Britain quickly took the situation in hand. Commercial factories were turned into airplane plants overnight; women took charge of the machinery; work went on feverishly day and night. Within three months hundreds of British planes were crossing the channel to take their places along the broken French sector. It was due to this inherent British quality of adjusting herself to the situation at hand that the Germans lost the mastery of the air for a time.

The first British planes to be built for the war were the BE2C. Then came the famous AVRO 504K, a two-seater biplane capable of making ninety miles an hour. T.O.M. Sopwith was probably the most influential man in the development of aeronautics during the war. He was designer and builder of the famous Sopwith planes which played so great a part in the gaining of the Allied air supremacy. The Sopwith Pup was a speedy single-seater fighter equipped with a 130-horsepower Clergent engine, and fitted with two machine guns that fired through the propeller by means of a synchronized gear. This gun, a feature of all Sopwith busses, was one of the outstanding developments of the war. It was secured rigidly to the ship in front of the pilot and connected to the rotary motor by gears, which were so adjusted that the gun fired automatically between the revolutions of the prop. To aim it, the pilot must turn the entire ship, which called for a skillful operator and a machine of quick maneuverability. The rotary motor mentioned was another war development. It was air-cooled, and usually made up of nine cylinders, which turned with the propeller around a stationary crankshaft. It was successful in doing away with the weighty water-cooling system, but it used more oil and petrol than the other types of motors.

A LETTER FROM CHESTER
DA!
MY SON
With love and Kisses to my papa and mama and dear little brother Goliath - Chester
SIDNEY SMITH
PILLOWS — GOLLY — A KID NEVER REALIZES WHAT A SOFT DOWNY FEATHER PILLOW MEANS — TILL HE HAS TO SLEEP OUT AMONG THE SAVAGES WITH ONLY A ROCK TO LAY HIS HEAD ON FOR A FEW MONTHS —
A HAIR BRUSH AND COMB — GEE! WHAT I WOULD HAVE GIVEN TO HAVE HAD THAT BRUSH ON THE ISLAND WHEN MY HAIR WAS FULL OF DUST AND SAND BURRS —
A LOOKING GLASS — I DON'T SEE HOW ANYONE CAN GET ALONG WITHOUT ONE — A SAVAGE WOULD TRADE A LUMP OF GOLD FOR JUST A LITTLE PIECE OF GLASS — WHEN I WAS ON THAT ISLAND THE ONLY WAY I COULD SEE MY FACE WAS TO KNEEL DOWN AND LOOK INTO A POOL OF WATER — AND MONEY — LOOK WHAT DEAR OLD UNCLE BIM LEFT WITH A LITTLE NOTE — "DEAR CHESTER — HERE IS TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS FOR A LITTLE SPENDING MONEY — IF YOU NEED ANY MORE — LET ME KNOW" —
THE POWER OF MONEY — GEE — JUST THINK WHAT KIDS IN THIS COUNTRY CAN DO — WHAT LITTLE SAVAGES CAN'T DO — IF A KID GETS SOME MONEY HE CAN BUY PEANUTS — CANDY — TOYS — SEE PICTURE SHOWS OR ANYTHING HE WANTS — JUST BUY IT — BUT THE LITTLE SAVAGES — WHAT THEY GET THEY HAVE TO GET WITH THEIR BOW AND ARROW —
LOOK AT THAT LIBRARY — WHAT I WOULD HAVE GIVEN FOR ONE OF THOSE NICE BOOKS WHEN I HAD SO MUCH TIME TO SPEND ON THAT ISLAND WITH NOTHING TO DO BUT WAIT —
OH BOY — I GUESS THIS IS POOR — THINK OF HAVING YOUR BREAKFAST BROUGHT INTO YOU ON A TRAY — IN A NICE COOL ROOM — NO MOSQUITOES — AND NO SAVAGE TO STICK A FORK INTO YOU WHILE YOU'RE EATING
THE DAILY PAPER — TO THINK YOU CAN GET THE NEWS FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD EVERY MORNING AT YOUR BREAKFAST TABLE — AND WHEN I WAS LOST THE WHOLE WORLD COULD HAVE COME TO AN END AND I NEVER WOULD HAVE KNOWN IT —
SIDE WALKS — KIDS NEVER REALIZE WHAT THEY MEAN — INSTEAD OF JUNGLES FILLED WITH ALL SORTS OF INSECTS — SNAKES AND WILD BEASTS AND HAVING TO CHOP YOUR WAY THROUGH THORNS AND CLINGING VINES AND POISON WEEDS — HAVE A NICE LEVEL SIDE WALK LEADING TO THE CANDY STORE —
WELL — ICE CREAM SODA IS NOT SO BAD — ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS SAY — CHOCOLATE SODA — HAND OVER THE COIN — THE MAN AT THE FOUNTAIN TURNS ON THE FAUCET — AND THERE YOU ARE — WONDER WHAT THAT OLD CANNIBAL KING WOULD GIVE FOR AN ICE CREAM SODA? I'LL BET HE'D TRADE HIS ISLAND
WHEE!! UNCLE BIM!
COME ON CHESTER — YOU'RE JUST IN TIME TO THE BASE BALL PARK JAMES
I KEEP THINKING I'M GOING TO WAKE UP AND FIND THAT OLD CANNIBAL KING CHASING ME AGAIN

By Bill Conselman and Charlie Plumb
Ella was sent to deliver a gown—the customer wasn't at home—so she borrowed the costume and crashed Mrs. Highwater's masque ball!—
I DUCK AFTER EACH DANCE—THEN I DON'T HAVE TO ANSWER QUESTIONS, BECAUSE I DON'T KNOW ANY OF THE ANSWERS!
LOVELY PARTY, ISN'T IT?
ER-YES-OH, YES, INDEED!
ARE YOU—ER—A FRIEND OF MRS. HIGHWATER'S?
NO, I'M NOT. NO ONE KNOWS ME—NO ONE EVEN KNOWS I'M HERE. I'M JUST DRIFTING AROUND!
SHAKE, FRIEND—I'M IN THE SAME FIX. I DON'T BELONG HERE, EITHER! I CRASHED THE GATE FOR A DANCE OR TWO!
IN THAT CASE, YOUNG WOMAN, YOU'D BETTER COME ALONG WITH ME! I'M A DETECTIVE, HERE TO SEE THAT UNINVITED GUESTS ARE EJECTED!
OGEEGOSH!
GOT YOU! NOW I'LL PUT YOU OUT!
HOW DARE YOU?
ER—AH—I BEG PARDON, MISS—I'M SORRY—I MADE A MISTAKE!
LUCKY FOR ME THAT SOMEONE WAS SO UNORIGINAL AS TO WEAR THE SAME COSTUME THAT I DID!
